Work on the Metro picturization of "Happiness," J. Hartley Manner's great play, was begun last week with the arrival in New York of King Vidor, who was selected to direct Laurette Taylor, noted stage star, in the same role which won her such fame on the stage. It will take several weeks before Mr. Vidor and his staff, which arrived here with him from the coast, have completed the filming of several very important exterior scenes, after which, according to present plans, Miss Taylor, Mr. Manners, Mr. Vidor and the staff will return to the Metro studios in Hollywood to complete "Happiness."

"Happiness" marks the second of Mr. Manner's stage successes which Metro has picturized with Miss Taylor in her original stage role. The first was "Peg 'O My Heart," also directed by Mr. Vidor, which still is accounted a great screen play. After the filming of "Happiness" Miss Taylor will make for Metro another of Mr. Manner's plays, "One Night in Rome."

It will take several months before "Happiness" is completed. Miss Taylor will probably remain in Hollywood until after this and "One Night in Rome" has been picturized. A beautiful home in the Santa Monica hills near Hollywood has already been secured for the noted star and for Mr. Manners, her husband.

House Records Broken by "The Virginian"

Owen Wister's novel and play, "The Virginian," which has been filmed by B. P. Schulberg for Preferred Pictures, broke all house records at opening engagements in Denver and Detroit this week.

A. G. Talbot, manager of the Colorado Theatre, Denver, reports, in a congratulatory telegram to Preferred Pictures Corporation, that the amount grossed the first day of the picture's run surpassed all Sunday records.

According to Phil Gleichman, president of the Broadway-Strand, where the picture is now playing an extended engagement in Detroit, "The Virginian" is doing tremendous business, surpassing any picture booked by that house in three years.

The Detroit critics, who are among the first newspaper reviewers to render a verdict on the screen production, say: Detroit Times: "'The Virginian' is a picture no Detroiter can afford to miss. It is what we call a beautiful production, pictorially and dramatically." Detroit Journal: "The story of 'The Virginian' is just that thrilling type of material made to order for the movies." Detroit Free Press: "One of the finest westerns the screen has ever given us."

A November Drive

During the month of November, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will hold its sixth anniversary drive for sales and collections. Hodkinson sales managers are making direct appeals to exhibitors for co-operation in putting their territory ahead.

"Under the Red Robe" for Early Presentation

The Cosmopolitan Corporation announces that it will shortly present at the Cosmopolitan Theatre the greatest achievement in its history to date—a sumptuous screen version of "Under the Red Robe," from Stanley Weyman's famous romance bearing the same title. The leading characters in this drama visualize the most vivid period in the reign of Louis XIII of France.

The statement is made that "Under the Red Robe" represents the most careful regard for historical accuracy in all of the important features of settings and costuming. The picture was nine months in the making, and the total cost is upwards of $1,500,000.

All of the famous examples of the architecture of the period represented in the sets used are faithfully reproduced, it is said. The Palace Royal at Paris, formerly the palace of the great Cardinal under Louis XIII, is an instance, also the interior of the Louvre.

The cast is headed by Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens.

Davies's Film Back Again

After an absence of only three weeks, Marion Davies and "Little Old New York" will be back on Broadway. It had a run of nearly three months at the Cosmopolitan Theatre on Broadway and Columbus Circle and will be shown at the Capitol Theatre, beginning Sunday, November 11.

It is announced that its engagement was terminated at the Cosmopolitan only because of the fact that it was necessary to make way for other completed Cosmopolitan productions.

Enthusiastic Reception Given "The Hunchback"

"The Chicago premier of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' at the Harris Theatre last week eclipsed even the world premier at the Astor Theatre, New York City," Universal announces. This marks another step in the phenomenal advance across the continent of Universal's masterful version of the Victor Hugo classic.

"Carl Laemmle started his career in the Windy City just seventeen years ago," comes the story of the Chicago opening as told by Universal representatives present, "and it appeared as though the entire city had combined to make the premier of Universal's greatest effort a gala event." The reception accorded "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was not merely one of sentiment, however, for newspaper reviews sang plenty of praise, surpassing in enthusiasm even the eulogies published by the critics of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, San Francisco, and other cities where the Victor Hugo classic is now playing to delighted audiences.

The advance sales are the largest in the history of pictures in legitimate houses, reports state. By Saturday at four o'clock every seat was sold for the Sunday matinee, and by two o'clock Sunday afternoon the house was gone for the night performance. Thousands were turned away both afternoon and evening.

Mr. Laemmle and his secretary, Harry H. Zehner, arrived in Chicago from the coast Sunday morning, and E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, came in from New York to attend the opening. Both were in the audience, together with a host of notables representing society, the theatrical and political world.

At the conclusion of the performance the audience stood and cheered Mr. Laemmle and the picture. It was impossible to clear the house for forty minutes as his many friends insisted on offering their personal congratulations.

Judging by the advance sale of the Chicago run Universal executives predict the Windy City showing will equal that of New York, where "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is about to enter its fourth month of continual sell-outs.

Campaign Launched for Special Pathe Series

Pathe has launched a special campaign for its current "Chronicles of America" releases in connection with the celebration of National Education Week from November 18 to 24 inclusive.

This nation-wide movement, sponsored and conducted by the United States Bureau of Education in co-operation with local school authorities all over the country, has already been widely publicized in the nation's newspapers.

"Columbus," which was released by Pathe on October 7, depicts the high lights of the colorful and adventurous career of the discoverer of America.

The second number of the series, which is also in four reels, is titled "Jamestown," and is concerned with that eventful period of American history in which the English and Spanish colonists struggled for supremacy.

These two subjects are the forerunners of additional thirty-one monthly releases being made by the Yale University Press for distribution by Pathe and picturizing the dramatic high lights of over 400 years of America's romantic development.

Cast Selected for New Mary Pickford Picture

The cast for Mary Pickford's next forthcoming production for United Artists Corporation release, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," has been completed, and, according to an announcement from Miss Pickford's studio, consists of even a greater assemblage of stage and screen stars than that which supported her in her current film success, "Rosita."

Miss Pickford in the role of Dorothy Vernon is again the grown young woman. The character, however, is wholly different from that of the little Spanish street singer so exquisitely portrayed in the attraction United Artists is now selling.

In the cast are Allan Forrest, Anders Randolph, Marc McDermott, Claire Eames, Estelle Taylor, Mme. Carrie Daumery, Eric Mayne, Lottie Pickford Forrest, sister of the star, and Malcolm Waite.

Billy Wehle Lauds Hodkinson Film

Billy Wehle, managing director of The Isis Theatre, Grand Rapids, Michigan, in a communication to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation said, relative to his showing of "The Drivin' Fool:"

"We wish to take this method of thanking you for not only a good picture but a real business getter. For the first time in this theatre, since the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," a picture was applauded.

LEAD AND DIRECTOR OF "MAYTIME"
Ethel Shannon and Louis Gasnier. He is directing specials for B. P. Schulberg, President Preferred Pictures

"Maytime" Has an Ultra Novel Plot

A new story in motion pictures is a difficult thing to get, but Preferred Pictures has it in "Maytime," the Gasnier production presented by B. P. Schulberg, according to a statement by J. G. Bachmann treasurer of Preferred Pictures. "I don't think you'll find the plot of "Maytime" in any other picture, novel or play," says Mr. Bachmann, "and Gasnier, I believe, has turned out a production that will establish him as one of the five or six big directors in motion pictures.

"Phil Gleichmann, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit was so enthusiastic over 'Maytime' that he offered us a big price for the rights to show 'Maytime' in a legitimate New York house at $2.00 prices. Our contracts with exhibitors would not permit us to accept.

"No other Preferred Picture, not even 'The Virginian' has been received with such enthusiasm by our franchise holders. The Skouras Brothers in St. Louis, Ben Amsterdam in Philadelphia, Harry Charnas in Cleveland, Samuel Zierler in New York, Herman Jans in New Jersey and Harry Asher in Boston have already seen the picture and are planning big exploitation campaigns. Our other franchise holders will follow suit.

Davies Picture Debut at Capitol Makes Hit

"Little Old New York" had its first showing on Broadway at popular prices this week when it started an engagement at the Capitol Theatre. Greeted by capacity audiences at every performance on Sunday, the Marion Davies' feature gave early indications of creating a new record for the run of a film at that house.

On its opening day at the Capitol, "Little Old New York" played to 17,452 persons who paid $13,450.54 to see the photoplay. It evoked applause at every performance.

"Little Old New York" is embellished with the same musical features which marked its run at the Cosmopolitan. This includes the overture and "Little Old New York" waltz song by Victor Herbert, and the special musical score composed by William Frederick Peters, both rendered by the Capitol Grand Orchestra. Another feature is a prologue arranged by S. L. Rothafel, presentation head.

Meantime, "Little Old New York" is playing to capacity audiences at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and the California Theatre, Los Angeles. In its first week at the Roosevelt it drew $28,445. In London, it continues to be a sensational success as it begins its twelfth week.

"The Fool" Off

From the Fox New York studios comes the word that the script of Channing Pollock's stage success, "The Fool," is ready for the camera. The important task of preparing a scenario from this drama was entrusted to the capable hands of Edmund Goulding, who has completed his work not only to the satisfaction of the producer, William Fox, but with the approval of Mr. Pollock, the author of the stage play, as well.

Harry Millarde will direct.

N. Y. Mailmen Win F. B. O. Band Test

The nation wide radio band concert, held by F. B. O. in connection with the forthcoming Emory Johnson release, "The Mailman," closed this week with New York winning by a large margin. The contest was promoted among some fourteen letter carriers and postal clerks bands scattered throughout the country and was held on the evening of October 15. Prior to the contest 1,500,000 ballots were distributed, carrying the names of the band and the conditions of the contest. On the back of these was an ad for the photo production.

These ballots were distributed to every post office in the United States and were in turn distributed to people owning radio sets. In order to cast a vote the person voting had to write name and address on the ballot and mail it into the F. B. O. home office.

A total of 240,000 votes were cast, with New York leading the race with 58,000. Newark came next with 46,000, with the twelve other bands following with lesser numbers. The awards offered were in cash, the first prize being $300 and the second prize $200 with a loving cup going to the first one. The prizes will be awarded at the opening of the picture in the respective towns. New York's band will receive its prize at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre on the evening of Monday November 26.

Bands from the following cities were entered in the contest: New York, Chicago, Youngstown, New Orleans, Akron, Providence, Newark, Baltimore, Minneapolis, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, St. Louis, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Boston, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Memphis, Seattle, Washington, Buffalo and Denver.

Father Praises Doug Jr's Work in First Picture

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Paramount's thirteen-year-old star, who recently came East with his mother, Mrs. James Evans, Jr., for a few days' visit in New York, has received a telegram from his father, Douglas Fairbanks, congratulating him upon his fine performance in "Stephen Steps Out," the youngster's first picture.

The final editing for the young star's initial vehicle was completed two or three weeks ago and last week a private showing was arranged for Doug., Sr., at Hollywood. The result was the telegram, in which the father congratulated his namesake upon his achievement and added that he was proud of him.

Young Fairbanks will be present in person at the initial New York showing of "Stephen Steps Out" at the Rivoli Theatre next Sunday. The picture is an adaptation of a story by Richard Harding Davis, entitled, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent." It is a prep school tale, liberally flavored with exciting adventure which takes the young hero to Turkey. Edfrid Bingham wrote the scenario and Joseph Henabery directed.

Theodore Roberts is featured at the head of the cast, along with Noah Beery, Harry Myers and Frank Currier. James O. Barrows. Fannie Midgley, George Field and Bertram Johns round out the support.

First National Makes Unusual Film Booking

Twenty-three simultaneous first runs have already been accorded Thomas H. Ince's production of "Anna Christie," announces First National, claiming one of the most unusual booking achievements on record. The Ince picturization of the Eugene O'Neill-Pulitzer prize play, scheduled for release on December 3, will open in twenty-three first-run houses on December 1, 2, or 3, according to the policies of the respective theatres, for a minimum run of one week.

The following are the theatres: Branford in Newark; Strand in New York; Chicago in Chicago; Olympia in Boston; Liberty in Portland; Adams in Detroit; Des Moines Theatre in Des Moines; Liberty and Grand Opera House in Pittsburgh; Warfield in San Francisco; Melba in Dallas; Mary Anderson in Louisville; Olympia in Worcester; Olympia in New Haven; Rivoli in Baltimore; Rialto in Omaha; Princess in Sioux City; Broadway in Council Bluffs; American in Salt Lake City; Rialto in Columbia, S. C.

"Anna Christie" is interpreted by a cast headed by Blanche Sweet, William Russell and George Marion, under the direction of John Griffith Wray.

For November

The Film Booking Offices announce this week the release of two H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" subjects starring George O'Hara for November. No. 8, "The Merchant of Menace," will be released November 11. "Midsummer's Night Scream" is to be released November 25.

"David Copperfield" at Cameo Given High Praise by Critics

Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield" made its bow in New York last week at the Cameo Theatre and the reviewers of the daily newspapers united in a chorus of praise. The attraction played to crowded and enthusiastic gatherings daily and was held over for a second week.

In the course of a review filling more than a half column, the New York Times critic said: "Just walk into the Cameo Theatre and see 'David Copperfield.' This is a picture which Dickens lovers will enjoy, as it is such a beautific change from some of the stories that are bought, paid for and produced by film concerns. Take a trip to the Cameo and get a mental rest for an hour or so."

The Evening Mail said: "There came to the Cameo Theatre yesterday a motion picture so simple and dramatic in its presentation, so perfect in characterization, and so beautifully pictorial that we do not hesitate to recommend it to those who scoff at the films and to screen patrons. That picture is 'David Copperfield.'"

Said the Sun and Globe: "The film, to our way of thinking, captures the spirit, the atmosphere and the age of the story quite excellently. And those three qualities are peculiarly elusive. In our opinion this is a classic rendition of one of our favorite stories—let those who criticise it say what they may."

The Daily News said in part: "They've got a dandy 'David Copperfield' up at the Cameo this week. There's no need to say that the story is one to be enjoyed by youth and age alike, inasmuch as it follows closely Charles Dickens's widely loved novel."

Evening Journal wrote: "Quietly, with little advance notice, a picture was exhibited at the Cameo Theatre yesterday that ought to make every movie fan caper with joy. It is 'David Copperfield.' It is a revelation to find a group of players performing with such a uniformly high calibre of ability. Not only is the acting praiseworthy, but the settings, the natural views, the photography and the direction are as nearly perfect as one could reasonably expect."

Said the New York American: "Dickens' immortal 'David Copperfield' opened yesterday with a splendidly chosen cast, beautiful settings, capable actors and understanding direction."

Said the World: "The producers have selected capable players. Particularly was Micawber like an old friend suddenly come to life. It is a simple, tasteful and faithful photograph of the author's intention." The Tribune said: "There is much to enjoy in this presentation. The characters are Dickens's own to the life." The Morning Telegraph's said: "The production is treated throughout as a masterpiece should be treated—with the highest respect and honesty."

Production Finished on Pathe Feature

Pathe's feature release schedule will shortly be augmented by a new six-reel production, "Rex, King of Wild Horses," from the Hal Roach studios. The filming of this subject has just been completed and the finished picture is now being cut and titled preparatory to its shipment east about the middle of this month.

"Rex, King of Wild Horses," is the romance of an untamed stallion, written by Hal Roach.

Report Bookings

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reports that many first run houses throughout the country are booking "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," in which Glenn Hunter is starred. Among the important bookings listed are the State, New Bedford, Mass.; Jefferson, Muskegan, Mich.; Saenger Amusement Company, Shreveport, La.; Columbia, Baton Rouge, La.; Bijou, Woonsocket, R. I.

Portland, Ore., Likes This One

"'Richard the Lion-Hearted' opened to exceptional business at the People's Theatre last Wednesday and is playing to capacity houses," telegraphed Jensen von Herberg, manager of the People's at Portland, Ore., to Hiram Abrams, president of Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

"Every one thinks 'Richard' fine entertainment and the audiences appreciate the fineness of the production. Congratulations to you for supplying us with a real picture," he concluded.

A Prediction

B. P. Schulberg's prediction that his screen version of Owen Wister's famous western romance, "The Virginian," would be one of the box-office sensations of the new season, is finding justification in the business which this Preferred Picture is doing in every key city played to date.

November and December Will Be Big Months for First National

November and December will prove to be the biggest months of the present year as far as First National productions go. Before the end of 1923 ten pictures, which include several heavily-campaigned specials from independent producers and from First National's own forces, will be issued. Nine of these pictures are completed at the present moment. One is in production.

First National producers have passed through a period of intensive work during the past four months and the pictures now lined up ten weeks in advance are the result of the systematic and efficient policy under which the forces are functioning on the West Coast.

Drama predominates in the ten forthcoming First Nationals. "Flaming Youth" is a society drama adapted from one of the sensational novels of the year. Colleen Moore is featured under the direction of John Francis Dillon.

Another novel in screen form will be Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," directed by George Fitzmaurice in Rome, with Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, Richard Bennett, Lionel Barrymore and Montague Love as principals.

Thomas H. Ince's "Anna Christie" will be the first of the plays of Eugene O'Neill, generally conceded one of America's most forceful playwrights, to reach the screen. Its principals are Blanche Sweet, William Russell and George Marion, of the original stage cast.

"The Dangerous Maid" will be Constance Talmadge's final contribution to the 1923 output.

Maurice Tourneur will offer "Jealous Husbands," a powerful dramatic story, presented by M. C. Levee. The leading characters are portrayed by Earle Williams, Jane Novak, Ben Alexander and Bull Montana.

In "Twenty One" Richard Barthelmess appears in a modern story with Dorothy Mackaill as his leading lady. John S. Robertson, director of "The Bright Shawl," is again at the helm.

Society drama with a colorful background is offered by John M. Stahl, director, in "The Wanters." The program of dramatic offerings is lightened by "Her Temporary Husband," Edward Paulton's stage farce.

Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" and Katherine MacDonald in "Chastity" complete the First National ten. The former is now in production under the auspices of Principal Pictures Corporation and the latter is the last of the Katherine MacDonald society drama series distributed by First National.

Universal Production a Big Hit in London

"Merry Go Round," Universal's sensational production featuring Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry, is making screen history in London, according to reports just received at the Universal home office. The London opening, in the Empire Theatre, Leicester Square, two weeks ago, was one of the most brilliant ever chronicled in the annals of British filmdom, and the success of the picture is astounding British film men.

A striking phase of the London opening was the turn-out of British notables for the premiere. The Kerry-Philbin Jewel now is playing to capacity, according to Manager Edwin O. Weinberg of the Empire Theatre.

"Merry Go Round" will shortly move to another theatre to make room for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," scheduled to open at the Empire, November 19. Advance information from Marc Lachmann, London manager of the Victor Hugo classic, indicates that the Chaney Jewel will prove the sensation of Europe. An exploitation campaign of great magnitude is being waged by Lachmann to put over the production.

Old Time Stage Success to Be Screened by Fox

Another William Fox adaptation of notable stage plays comes in the production of "Hoodman Blind," from the success of 1885 by Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett. An actual shipwreck scene is one of the most realistic ever screened.

David Butler has the leading masculine role, first played by Wilson Barrett in London and later by Kyrle Bellew at Wallack's Theatre in New York. Annie Robe, then played the dual role now handled by Gladys Hulette. Assisting the principals with interpretations of the various roles are Regina Connelly, Frank Campeau, Marc McDermott, Trilby Clark, Jack Walters and Eddie Gribbon. The director was John Ford.

Herbert as Major

Holmes Herbert will play the part of Major Hillgrove in John S. Robertson's production of "The Enchanted Cottage," Richard Barthelmess' next starring vehicle.

Warners Hard at It; Augment Star Roster; Motto Is Speed

During his visit from the West Coast to the Warner Offices in New York, Harry M. Warner disclosed many things interesting to exhibitors and promised a series of fine productions for next season. While in New York Mr. Warner looked over literary material and seeing successful stage productions with the idea of securing the screen rights for future Warner productions.

"I am sure that exhibitors are realizing that the Warner organization is accomplishing fine things for such an embryonic company," Mr. Warner stated. "For this season, we have already completed all of our productions for this year, including such as the Ernst Lubitsch production, 'The Marriage Circle'; the Sidney Franklin Production, 'Tiger Rose,' starring Lenore Ulric; and 'Beau Brummel,' starring John Barrymore under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

"We intend to carry on our plans with a series of elaborate productions in spite of alleged upheavals in the industry which seem to throw a scare into the less courageous. Our contract with Ernst Lubitsch calls for a series of pictures a year that will carry considerable weight with the exhibitor. At the present time Lubitsch is carrying on the necessary research work for the filmization of that stage success 'Deburau.' Sidney Franklin is another of our producers who can be reckoned on as a contributor of fine screen works under the Warner standards.

"I can promise that 'Broadway After Dark' and other Harry Rapf Productions, will come up to the finest standard of the photoplay. William Seiter is directing "How to Educate a Wife," from the story by Elinor Glyn. Harry Beaumont will handle the megaphone for 'Babbitt,' the screen adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel. The third picture we are now producing is 'Lovers Lane,' which Dorothy Farnum adapted from the well-known play by Clyde Fitch.

"Our long roster of stars will remain under contract and we expect to announce the acquisition of a number of new important screen personalities in the near future. We have always had the exhibitor in mind in making productions and we are continuing to make the best possible productions to bring a healthy condition to the industry and to the box-office."

"Rosita" Makes Hit in Pittsburgh

"Notwithstanding the worst two days of weather Pittsburgh has had this fall our business on Mary Pickford in 'Rosita' at our State and Blackstone theatres justifies our holding the picture over in the Blackstone for a second week," read a message to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, from James B. Clark.

"Rosita" was booked to play day and date at Clark's State and Blackstone theatres, the first time anything of the kind has ever been done by these two houses.

Books C. B. C. Film

Tony Luchesse, of the DeLuxe Film Co., franchise holder of C. B. C. product for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey announces that the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia has set "Forgive and Forget" in for an early date.

Exhibitor Praises Hodkinson Film

Following is a quotation from a letter received by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from George J. Wehner of the Wehner Amusement Company of Brooklyn, New York.

"No matter what picture I bring to my theatres, it does not draw as well as the 'Hodkinson.' I have had more praise for your pictures than for any others I have run for a long time. I must say that your pictures have been giving the best satisfaction. I cannot call to mind a single complaint against any Hodkinson picture."

Four Big Productions Are for Metro Release During December

Metro announces the following big productions which are to be released during the month of December: "Fashion Row," "In Search of a Thrill," "A Wife's Romance," and "The Man Life Passed By."

"Fashion Row," Mae Murray's newest Metro picture will be released December 3. It was recently completed and is now being edited for an early Eastern premiere. Miss Murray is supported by the following cast: Earle Foxe, Freeman Wood, Mathilde Brundage, Elmo Lincoln, Sidney Franklin, Madame Rosonova, and Craig Biddle. It was directed by Robert Z. Leonard and is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro sponsored by Tiffany Productions.

"In Search of a Thrill" will be released the following week on December 10. It is Viola Dana's third Metro starring picture on the 1923-1924 Metro schedule. Miss Dana's first two pictures, "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code" were released earlier in the season, the first in September and the second in October.

"A Wife's Romance" will be released the third week, on December 17. It is a Harry Garson presentation starring Clark Kimball Young, and was adapted by Frank Beresford from the novel "La Rubia" by H. W. Roberts. It was directed by Thomas Heffron.

"The Man Life Passed By" will be released December 24. It was recently completed at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Victor Schertzinger and is from an original story for the screen written by Mr. Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn.

Producing for Warners Rapf Outlines Plans

During his visit to the Warner offices in New York, Harry Rapf, who is producing under the Warner banner, outlined his ideas for all future pictures which will face the camera under his general supervision. Mr. Rapf's next Warner Classic will be "Broadway After Dark," an adaptation of the play written by Owen Davis. The screen version will be thoroughly modernized, will feature an all-star cast of players and will be directed by Monta Bell, who assisted Charles Chaplin in his first serious screen achievement.

"I am trying to get away from the bizarre type of story because I think that exhibitors and their audiences are fed up on them. They are sick of seeing the impossible flashed before their eyes. What they want is a depiction of real life as they see it before them, somewhat on the O. Henry style," Mr. Rapf said. "I am also laying particular stress in producing pictures that will lend themselves to the greatest number of exploitation angles. That is, after all, what appeals to an exhibitor. He wants the kind of a picture that will appeal to his audience and he wants a picture that he can exploit in such a manner as to bring home the main points of the picture.

While in New York Mr. Rapf will make arrangements to photograph some of the famous dance palaces and after-theatre clubs for use in "Broadway After Dark."

House Takes Entire Metro Product

The Star Theatre at Austin, Minnesota, is added to the growing list of theatres arrangements for which have been made to play the entire Metro 1923-1924 schedule of big productions.

Raymon Brothers, managers of the big house, open the Metro season this week with the first presentation, "The French Doll," and are to follow this with the entire series as soon as the various productions are released.

Different Periodicals Praise Hodkinson Film

That Hodkinson's "Puritan Passions" the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," in which Glenn Hunter is starred, is a picture that is universal in its appeal is proven by the laudatory reviews in two periodicals of widely different nature, yet both well-known in their respective fields. One is the national Jewish weekly "The American Hebrew," and the other, one of the foremost women's magazines, "The Ladies Home Journal."

"The American Hebrew" said: "The film has an especial appeal to Jews who can sympathize with the portrayal of intolerance in early New England days, when belief in diabolism and black magic held even such notables as Cotton Mather. All in all, we know of no better screen portrayal of the days of New England witchcraft."

The "Home Journal," in the department "When the Pictures are Good" stated: "Its underlying theme is that love renders all things human. . . . Glen Hunter, as Lord Ravensbane The Scarecrow, shows a depth and a poise in his acting which is new, with none of his old graces lacking."

London's Dog Film Well Booked

Pathe's picturization of Jack London's dog story, "The Call of the Wild," which was produced by Hal Roach and released by Pathe on Sept. 23rd, continues to be booked heavily by leading first-run theatres and prominent circuits in different parts of the country.

Among the important bookings closed during the past week was one with the Poli Circuit. This contract assures a showing of the Pathe feature in all the important key-cities of Connecticut, with special exploitation and presentation effects.

Ready to Start on "Warrens of Virginia"

Elmer Clifton and a company of William Fox screen players have arrived in San Antonio prepared to make the exterior scenes for "The Warrens of Virginia," which Fox is making from the famous Belasco stage success, and the Texas town made a big event of it. The creator of the motion picture version of "Six Cylinder Love" and "Down to the Sea in Ships" was received at the station by Mayor Tobin and his entourage of city officials, who welcomed the Fox company with the invitation to remain as long as they liked.

Mr. Clifton selected San Antonio as the locale for exteriors of this Civil War drama because of the wonderful natural advantages the district affords; its stately, picturesque old Colonial mansions, its beautiful southern atmosphere with rare historical landmarks, its great open spaces where battle scenes of the Union and Confederate armies will be staged, and the generally fine climatic conditions.

In the cast of "The Warrens of Virginia, who, with camera men and a big mechanical force make up the Clifton party, are Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Andrews, Harlan Knight, James Turfler, Helen Ray Kyle, George Backus, Dorothy Kingdon, Mrs. Frances Grant, Rosemary Hill and Jimmie Ward.

Assisting Mr. Clifton in making the screen scription of William deMille's stage triumph are George Richelavie, his assistant director; A. G. Penrod, cameraman, and Arthur DeTitta, Penrods aide de camera.

Martha Mansfield is playing the role of Agatha, the lead; Wilfred Lytell is the Lieutenant Burton, George Backus plays General Warren, the role created by Frank Keenan, and J. Barney Sherry is General Robert E. Lee. Rosemary Hill, a protege of Mr. Clifton, essays the role of Betty, played on the stage by none other than Mary Pickford.

In welcoming Mr. Clifton and the Fox company, Mayor Tobin assured the director that the key to the city was his and that he could count upon all the co-operation at the command of the city administration in the use of historical cities, public places or any other of the city's resources.

Wiring to William Fox of his reception in the Southern metropolis, Mr. Clifton says: "Future looks bright here. Expect to make a picture you will be proud of. Mayor Tobin welcomed us with open arms and assured us every co-operation within his power."

The Fox party will remain in San Antonio about six weeks, within which time Mr. Clifton hopes to complete exterior work on the picture.

"Down to the Sea" Hit in Milwaukee

Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships" was given its Wisconsin premiere at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, commencing November 3. Through an extensive newspaper campaign in which the advertising predominated that of every other picture in the city, Leo Landau, manager of the Alhambra, secured such good business that he decided to hold the picture over for another week. Newspaper critics were unanimous in their lavish praise.

An elaborate presentation was given the film. It was introduced by a special prologue with unusual lighting effects. A big window display was secured on Grand Avenue, in the heart of the business section, and proved to be a fine business-getter.

This is the beginning of a campaign to be launched throughout the entire state of Wisconsin, including a simultaneous showing in Milwaukee in some twenty-five or thirty theatres.

New Fox Special on Morris Story

"You Can't Get Away With It" is the up-to-date title of a Fox special ready for immediate release. It is taken from a story by Gouverneur Morris and should satisfy the demands of those who are asking for something different from the usual run of movie plots. The author is noted for the realistic way he treats contemporary life.

Rowland V. Lee, the director, has caught, it is said, the spirit of the Morris story and told the experience of its heroine in a series of screen episodes that reflect the character, atmosphere and uncompromising trend of events with force and true feeling.

The cast has Percy Marmont, the Mark Sabre of "If Winter Comes," in the leading male role. Others are Betty Bouton, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruz.

"The Net" Is a Current William Fox Release

Presented by a cast of experienced performers the William Fox production, "The Net," from the Broadway stage success by Maravene Thompson is directed by J. Gordon Edwards. The screen production retains the power of the original.

Barbara Castleton has the leading role. Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe are also featured. Others in the cast are: Peggy Davis, former Ziegfeld Follies star, Arthur Gordoni, Cornelius F. Keefe, Helen Tracy, Eliah Nadel, Alexander Gaden, Guy Combs, Byron Douglas, Claire De Lores, Eileen Grout and William H. Tooker.

"Why Worry," a Gloom Chaser at Los Angeles

When Harold Lloyd's "Why Worry," opened in Los Angeles at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre the week of October 28th, the critics there lauded this work of Pathe's master comedian and his supporting cast.

"Don't pass this Lloyd picture if you want real entertainment," writes the Daily News critic. "Harold, as always, is clever. In 'Why Worry' he is a bit unlike his usual self and it is a relief. His work is fast and interesting." The Examiner: "'Why Worry' has thrills to be sure; but the thrills are incidental to the comedy. Harold is at his best. Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor, who directed, kept the tempo at a sustained pitch that should prove a good example to their fellow laugh-film megaphones."

Evening Express: "'Why Worry' the foolishment is called. Nobody does. Everyone laughs immoderately instead."

Fox Releases for November 25 Week

The leading picture on the William Fox list of releases for the week of November 25 is "The Shepherd King." This is the J. Gordon Edwards feature that was made in the Holy Land and Egypt and which utilized the services of a large cast of principals, an army of extras and required more than a year to make. Adapted to the screen from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, it is called a marvelous reproduction of the land and history of the shepherd boy David, who became the ruler of Israel.

The story of "The Shepherd King" opens with a prologue showing Moses and the children of Israel going through Egypt on their way to Jerusalem. This vast army of people, with their camels, donkeys, horses and sheep, are pictured being led past the Pyramids and the Sphinx and only a short distance from the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen. Aside from Violet Mersereau, who plays the Princess Michal, and Gordon McEdward, who plays an Egyptian, the cast consists of the pick of the Italian film actors.

"South Sea Love," the latest Shirley Mason picture, also will be ready for release on November 25. The story was written by Frederick and Fanny Hatton and was directed by David Solomon. The scenes took place among the tropical islands of the Pacific. As Dolores Medina, the clever star gives a novel and picturesque characterization.

"When Odds Are Even," a William Russell picture, will be released the same week. The story embraces the race of two rival mining companies to gain possession of a precious opal mine in Australia. The picture was directed by James Flood. Dorothy Devore is Mr. Russell's leading support.

An educational, "A Dutch Treat," completes the week's releases by Fox.

Says White Way Verdict Spells Success or Doom

Are Broadway showings of motion pictures of any value to the exhibitor? This question is presented by the Fox Corporation and answered by that organization. Fox pictures of note follow the policy of first appearance along the Great White Way of Manhattan and the returns, after such productions undergo general releases show the wisdom of that plan according to the announcement. The Fox angle is this:

Foremost among the benefits to be derived by exhibitors from Broadway showings is the advertising value. To be able to tag a picture with the line: "Direct from a four weeks run on Broadway at $1.50" is a great advantage to the exhibitor. It means bigger business too.

Another phase of the benefits accrued by exhibitors from Broadway showings is the criticisms in New York newspapers. While newspapers in other cities may boast critics just as discerning, just as capable as those in the great metropolis, their judgment does not carry as much weight. These criticisms are syndicated to hundreds of newspapers throughout the country besides being quoted by many others and exhibitors have the advantage of being able to include in their advertising excerpts from the opinions of these writers who are considered the best in the land.

"Blood and Gold" Underway

Production of "Blood and Gold" is under way at the New York studios of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. Conrad Nagel has been engaged and is now on his way from the Coast to take the male lead in this picture, in which Jetta Goudal will have the feminine lead.

Boy Scout Audience Sees Goldwyn Film

"When you see or hear of a motion picture that is good, clean entertainment get behind it and make it worth while for the fellows who produced it and for the man who exhibits it. We hear all sorts of condemnation of bad pictures; that's all right when they deserve it, but the thing for us to do is to encourage people who put out the good stuff—so that they will feel warranted in giving us more and more."

Such was the message given by James E. West, chief national scout executive, at a special rally of scoutmasters and executives of the Boy Scout Foundation of Greater New York at Town Hall, New York, on November 8. The rally was arranged at the request of the officials of the Boy Scout Foundation in order that the 1,500 scoutmasters in the metropolitan area might see "The Steadfast Heart," a photodrama produced by Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

After Mr. West's talk Clarence Budington Kelland, author of the story; Miriam Battista and Joey Depew, child stars of the piece, appeared. Assisted by the two children's questions, Kelland explained that he had been twenty years in the writing of this tale of how one boy, tortured and tormented by conditions of early environment, had learned to stand up for himself.

Scholarly Praise for Pathe's "Columbus"

A number of commendatory reports have been received at the Pathe Home Office, following the premiere showings of "Columbus" in various sections of the country. This gives promise of support to the entire "Chronicles of America" series, being produced by the Yale University Press for distribution by Pathe. Following are excerpts from some of the unsolicited letters of endorsement received:

E. E. Cortright, superintendent of the Board of Education of Bridgeport, Conn., writes: "I am unhesitatingly commending the film on 'Columbus' developed by the Yale University Press as a part of their contribution to the study of American history. Coming through this scrutiny, it definitely insures, of course, the historical accuracy." Humbert P. Pagani, Faithful Navigator, Indianapolis Fourth Degree of the Knights of Columbus, writes: "'Columbus' is entertaining, educative and instructive, and I heartily endorse it as presented through the Pathe Exchange."

The Sunday Observer of Charlotte, N. C., editorially: "The most notable departure in education on the screen, however, is that recently launched by the Yale University Press, whose players are now presenting pages of American history, the plays being staged in the original localities."

Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual instruction of the New York Board of Education, expresses the following opinion: "This is the type of film which has long been eagerly awaited by the educators of the country. As to this particular film, the story is vividly told, the acting is excellent, and the photography is of the very highest order."

Barker Starts Production on "Women Who Wait"

With the completion of "Pleasure Mad" his second contribution to the Metro 1923-1924 season, Reginald Barker has begun active production on "Women Who Wait" which has been announced in preparation these last several weeks. Like his two former pictures this one will also be produced under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. It is a picturization of "Cape Cod Folks."

Heading the cast is Frank Keenan. Renee Adoree, Robert Frazer, Barbara Bedford, Joseph Dowling, Edward Phillips, Billy Eugene, Victor Potel, and Joan Standing have also been picked.

"Cape Cod Folks" is the old New England classic by Sarah P. McGreen which was published several years ago and was widely-read and also successful as a stage play. The book is in production under the tentative title of "Women Who Wait", but a new and permanent title is now under consideration.

"Women Who Wait" will take several months to complete. It is not unlikely that Mr. Barker may transport his entire company to Newfoundland and to New England later in order to get important scenes in the exact locale of the story. J. G. Hawks made the adaptation of "Women Who Wait" and it is being photographed by Mr. Bilburn.

"Flaming Youth" Given a Pre-Release Showing

This week for the first time in its history it is reported the New York Strand had a full house at 10:15 on a Wednesday morning. The occasion was a special invitation pre-release presentation of "Flaming Youth," Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the producer and distributor of the film, acting as host to the entire trade.

Film executives, exhibitors in the metropolitan district, newspapermen and trade journal critics filled the theatre and when the Strand orchestra took its place to render the musical score a most noteworthy audience was assembled to see the picture made from the novel by Warner Fabian.

"Flaming Youth" was purchased by First National for screen production shortly after its publication. Colleen Moore is in the featured role. "Flaming Youth" is a current First National release and is expected to have its metropolitan premiere in the near future.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Universal Signs Noted European Stunt Actor to Star in Serials

Lucian Albertini, sensational European stunt man and screen dare-devil, has been signed by Universal to make serials. He is reputed to be one of the most reckless screen actors and noted for taking desperate chances in order to produce thrills.

Besides being a dare-devil, Albertini also is a strong man and in many of his pictures he has been billed as Samsonia. It is under this name that he is best known in England, where his pictures have been eminently successful.

Albertini's seven years in picture work have been with German and Italian film companies, including a company of his own. He directs his own pictures.

Besides his work in films, Albertini is a Professor of Physical Culture in the Public Health Service of Lyons, France, and formerly was Division Gymnastic Instructor for the Italian Navy. He was a noted acrobat and trapeze stuntster before entering films.

His first serial for Universal will be built up around new material and stunts which are said to transcend any thrills heretofore seen on the screen.

He is now on his way to Universal City.

Lupino Lane to Star in New Fox Two-Reel Comedy Series

Lupino Lane, probably England's best known stage and screen comedian has signed a long term contract with Fox Film Corporation and will come to the United States about the first of the year to star in a series of two-reel comedies to be made at the Fox Hollywood studios.

Lane is well-known in this country, having appeared in the stage production "Afgar" as well as a series of two reel comedies and a feature for Fox and while these productions were successes his continuance with the Fox organization was prevented by other contracts made previously. This time, Mr. Lane will be unencumbered by other contracts and will devote his entire time to transferring to the screen his inimitable pantomime which made him an international success.

Turpin and Laurel Two-Reelers on Pathe List for November 25

November 25 brings about the release on the Pathe program of an unusually attractive list of short subjects including a Stan Laurel two-reel burlesque, a Mack Sennett comedy starring Ben Turpin and another of the popular Hal Roach "Dippy-Do-Dads" with their all-animal casts.

The Stan Laurel burlesque is "The Soilers" a travesty on Rex Beach's famous novel "The Spoilers." It is of the same type as this star's two preceding offerings, "Roughest Africa" which burlesques the animal hunt pictures and "Frozen Hearts" burlesquing "Enemies of Women." In "The Soilers," Laurel caricatures the role of Roy Glenister as Canister and the famous Glenister-McNamara fight is travestied in an uproarious way by Cannister and Smacknamara.

The Ben Turpin two-reeler is "The Dare-Devil" in which the star appears as a movie double, Harry Gribbon as the director, Jack Richardson as leading man and Kewpie Morgan as his chief support. Madeline Hurlock is leading lady and Irene Lentz the heroine. Turpin runs the gamut of thrills and hardships supposed to fall to the lot of a movie double.

The Ruth Roland serial "Ruth of the Range" reaches its seven episode with the usual amount of thrills and fast action. "Go West" is the title of the single reel "Dippy-Do-Dad" in which the animal cast enact a travesty on life in the great open spaces.

Pathe Review 47 contains a variety of interesting subjects ranging from "The Four Lakes of Madison" which is a pictorial interpretation of Longfellow's poem to "Monkey Mountain" pictured in the Milwaukee Zoo. Other subjects include a travelogue "A Day in Guatemala" and a color section "The Cradle-land of the Neolithic Man."

An Aesop's Fable "Happy-Go-Luckies" a Topics of the Day and two issues of Pathe News complete the weeks schedule.

Pathe Finds Big Demand for Serials of a Higher Type

As a result of touring the Boston, New Haven and Albany territories, Edgar O. Brooks Pathe's serial sales manager reports that he found a strong demand for chapter-productions more logically constructed, embodying higher standards of direction and acting and based on popular novels and stories.

"I found one opinion uniformly registered" says Mr. Brooks, "that the day of the blood-and-thunder dime-novel type of serial is gone forever, and was informed that in their place there must be evolved a type of chapter-picture that will approximate in story action and characterization the newspaper and magazine serials.

Mr. Brooks calls attention to the fact that the demand for serials based on widely read stories will be met by Pathe's forthcoming serials. Awaiting release is "The Way of a Man" based on Emerson Hough's famous novel of the early west. It was produced by George Seitz and features Harold Miller and Allene Ray.

In production is a serial version of Cooper's celebrated "Leather-stocking Tales," an example of the high grade of serial picture which Pathe plans to produce. It was also directed by George Seitz and features Harold Miller and Edna Murphy.

This serial will be followed by one based on "The Fortieth Door" by Mary Hastings Bradley. It is further announced that steps are now being taken to secure rights to other famous novels which will be portrayed by casts headed by well-known stars.

Century Completes Two Comedies

Two new completed Century Comedies are ready to take their places with others turned over to Universal for distribution. They are "Boys Will Be Boys" and "Own a Home."

Rogers Impersonates Stars of Screen

Will Rogers' newest two-reel comedy for Pathe "Uncensored Movies" gives him the opportunity for what is said to be the first time to present a line of entertainment on the screen for which he is famous on the stage. In his own inimitable way he caricatures "Bill" Hart, Tom Mix, and Rudolph Valentino and makes satirical though inoffensive allusions to DeMille, Griffith and Fairbanks in their respective fields. Rogers' role is that of a reform investigator sent to observe conditions in Hollywood.

Lloyd Single Reel Reissues Liked

Pathe reports a heavy demand from theatres including some of the finest in the country for the series of single reel Harold Lloyd reissues. The success of these reissues which total seventy-four in all is attributed to the presence of such players as Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard in the cast and is pointed to by Pathe officials as indicating that comedies with fast action and laughs are in strong demand regardless of the footage or time of production.

Church Books Bruce One-Reelers

Educational reports that the great beauty of the series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce has not only caused them to be popular in the theatres but with churches as well. For instance, the Rev. G. Y. Benton of the First M. E. Church of Oneida, N. Y. was so impressed with "From the Windows of My House" that he wrote a letter to the exchanges praising it highly and also booked "By Lantern Light" and "Moonblind."

Managers Enthuse Over Doyle Film

Pathe's expose of fraudulent mediums "Is Conan Doyle Right" is reported to have proved a box-office attraction of the first magnitude at the Keith circuit houses in the East. "From the box-office angle it has great possibilities, which was proven by the increase in business each day," says manager Burns of the Hamilton. Enthusiastic comment was also made by the managers of the Eighty-first Street Theatre, New York, Flatbush and Prospect in Brooklyn, and Keith's Boston Theatre.

New "Snapshots"

Issues number four and five of Screen Snapshots, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's popular single reel "fan magazine of the screen," are ready for release, each containing a number of interesting scenes of popular stars.

One of the bright spots in issue number four is a scene of George Crane, Claude Gillingwater and Alec Francis, "the grand old men of the screen," practicing some new dance steps with King Vidor.

Issue number five shows bright scenes of Bryant Washburn, Lionel Belmore, Billie Dove, Edward Everett Horton, Jackie Coogan, Mary Pickford and others.

"Save the Ship"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Life on a raft is made exciting for Stan Laurel by the combined attacks of his mother-in-law and the swordfish. He catches fish only to find that they have wings. As one is flying away he shoots at it and blows up the ship. It has a good number of laughs and should prove satisfactory.—M. K.

"Memories"

(Educational—Songs—One Reel)

Three old favorites, "Darling, We Are Growing Old," "Daisy, Daisy, Give Me Your Answer, Do," and "Where Dear Old Shannon's Flowing," are pleasingly illustrated in this number of the Sing Them Again series. Sentiment, a bit of comedy and pretty scenery are the attractions.—M. K.

"The Payroll Thief"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

The melodrama and action are well handled in this snappy number which features Jack Mower and Elinor Field. After the hero has secured the money from the bank to pay the ranchers, he is attacked and robbed. The situations carry good suspense and Elinor Field adds to the appeal.—M. K.

"The Dare-Devil"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Mack Sennett comedy, starring Ben Turpin, is a travesty on the making of serials and presents the star as a cowboy who gets a job of doubling for the hero in the thrill and "unpleasant" situations. It is treated in a farcical way, poking fun at the most serious situations. The hero gets into all sorts of scrapes and messes things up generally. There is a lot of amusing nonsense, especially the scene where the movie company gets the firemen away from a fire until they can grab some scenes. While not up to the best of the Sennett offerings, it contains several humorous situations and should prove satisfactory for the average audience.—C. S. S.

"No Parking Aloud"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Parking babies while the mothers shop brings great cares upon the shoulders of Nervy Ned (Nealy Edwards) this time. The mothers decide to stay all night in the store so as to be on hand for the sale, and Ned takes the babies home with him. This has an original idea to work with and should be unusually entertaining.—M. K.

"Cloisters in the Clouds"

(Fox—Educational—One Reel)

This spectacular abode of some of the old Grecian monks offers some interesting scenes here. The locale, the shots and the general atmosphere have a decidedly unusual note.—M. K.

"Pathe Review 47"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Up to the standard of entertainment of the previous issues in this series is this Pathe Review, which in an entertaining fashion presents a pictorial section visualizing the Longfellow poem, "The Four Lakes of Madison," a section dealing with the strange customs of the Indians in Guatemala, a novel set of views of a "mountain" in the Milwaukee zoo which is the home of hundreds of monkeys and a color section of a city in France in which there are several indications of the presence of pre-historic man.—C. S. S.

"Go West"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

The large number of spectators who have delighted in the previous issues of the "Dippy-Do-Dad" series, enacted by Hal Roach's clever all animal casts, will be pleased with this one. The story has a real plot regarding a shiftless chap whose father sends him out west. There is some typical "western" stuff in which the cast, composed almost entirely of monkeys, does some clever work. A big dog and some goats also figure in minor roles.—C. S. S.

"Hot Sparks"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Once more the fire department is a subject for comedy. Cliff Bowes plays the chief fire-fighter in a force which is notorious for not interfering with fires. It is a Cameo comedy with considerable action and two or three good laughs.—M. K.

"The Soilers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel's newest burlesque of successful features is "The Soilers" which is a travesty on "The Spoilers." Several of the high spots in the original have been caricatured in a broad and effectively humorous way, such as the blowing up of the mine and the celebrated fight. In this latter scene the hero and the villain start in the office, then go into a bedroom and fight with pillows, making the feathers fly, fall out of a window and tumble into a dance hall where the crowd pays absolutely no attention to them. It will afford a great deal of amusement to the majority of patrons, especially those who have seen "The Spoilers."—C. S. S.

"Dance or Die"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Marathon dancing fails to yield a fortune to the hero in this Sunshine comedy although his partner and he resort to trickery and use dummies as partners some of the time. Luck is against him in other money-making schemes as well—such as knocking off pedestrian's hats by attempting to make them walk under a rope and then collecting a tip for picking up the hats. Some of the stunts are hilariously amusing. A good number on the whole.—M. K.

"No Loafing"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Most of the amusement in this Tuxedo comedy lies in a familiar stunt—suspending the hero at a precarious height where thrills are combined with the laughter. "Poodles" Hannaford does most of his performing on a grand piano which his comrade and he are attempting to hoist into the top room in a high building. It is effectively done, although the idea will not be new to the average patron. At times it gets very exciting. The star is a good comedian and an expert tumbler.—M. K.

Bruce Editing Eight Novel Films for Release Through Educational

Robert C. Bruce, producer of the Wilderness Tales distributed by Educational, has returned to New York after a summer spent in production activities in the Pacific Northwest, carrying him over Washington, Oregon and British Columbia during which he filmed eight single-reel scenic dramas. Five have already been titled—"Jean of Hecata Head," "The Ex-Bartender Retires," "The Trader Keeps Moving," "Just Waiting" and "Fear." He will remain in New York until he has finished editing and titling the entire eight.

Mr. Bruce made pictures at Newport and Hecata Head, Mt. Rainier, on Williamette River and Vancouver Island, and at locations said to have never before been filmed in Sand Creek Canyon and Crater National Park. The one filmed in Sand Creek Canyon, titled "Fear," has an unusually novel setting, with natural spires of solidified sand and clay that rise sixty to a hundred feet like pillars of a ruined Roman temple. They form a weird background.

In fact, all these pictures are said to be novel in location and treatment. Those on the Williamette River were made on a floating studio built in the form of a cabin on an eighty-foot flatboat. The sides could be dropped for interiors and the cabin used for exteriors.

David W. Gobbet, who was a cameraman in the Boer war, and also in the same capacity with the Duke of Connaught's expedition to Africa, and the Buffalo Jones expedition to that continent, accompanied Mr. Bruce as cameraman. Irene Hall, prominent in theatrical stock companies on the Coast, appears as leading woman in several of the films. The first one "Jean of Hecata Head," according to Mr. Bruce's belief, will surpass the enviable reputation made by his "And Women Must Weep."

The remainder of the cast that accompanied Mr. Bruce consists of Anne Lockhart, now appearing in "The Gold Diggers" (stage production); Selmer Jackson who plays leads, Myrtle Forbes, an ingenue, Joames Gordon as a juvenile, Gurnie Hays as the heavy, and William Dills.

"She's a He"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Buddy Messinger's latest shows him adopting a girl's disguise so as to please his rich aunt, who has been told that her sister's child is a girl. Fair curls and a dainty dress fail as a deception, as the boy's table manners arouse suspicion and lead to some rough-housing that makes the aunt exclaim "She's a He." It is a fairly amusing number.—M. K.

"Happy-Go-Luckies"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this issue of Aesop's Film Fables, Cartoonist Paul Terry has introduced considerable amusing and clever stuff as usual and it will delight the average patron; those, however, who have followed this series for a long time will recognize considerable familiar material in the handling of the dog show with its "freak" animals which forms the greater part of the comedy.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Excellent

A correspondent, who asks that his name be withheld, writes from Richmond, Virginia, saying:

It seems to me that a description of the projection room of the new National Theatre, Richmond, Va., which is about to open its doors, would interest both yourself and your readers, so here goes.

To begin with, there are two Powers' 6B projectors, equipped with 75-ampere G. E. high intensity lamps. There is one Powers Type E spotlight and one Powers dissolving stereopticon. Two Westinghouse 72-ampere motor generators supply current to the arcs. The switchboard consists of a black marble, dead-face 7x8 foot panel, to which the generators are connected in such way that they may be operated in parallel. This is, I believe, a radical departure in the matter of generator connection. The entire projection room equipment may be successfully operated on the output of these two generators, when connected in parallel.

Shutter Closing Device

Another device which is, I believe, the only one of its kind in use, is a motor driven magnetic clutch device for raising and lowering all port shutters with one operation. This is connected to the D. C. side of the generators in such manner that when a generator is started and any one projector switch is closed, the shutters will automatically raise. If for any reason a film fire should occur and burn a fusable link, a switch is operated (automatically, I presume.—Ed.) which releases the magnetic clutch and allows all port shutters to close instantly.

At night when the generators are shut down, the shutters will drop automatically as soon as the current is turned off.

All projectors are furnished with panels, supplied by the N. Power Company. Each panel carries an ammeter, a voltmeter and a speed-indicating instrument. In addition there is a speed-indicating instrument both for the organist and the orchestra director. The manager's office is equipped with a hard rubber panel and a mahogany panel box, upon which a voltmeter, ammeter and speed indicator are mounted.

The screening room, which is immediately at the rear of the projection room switchboard, is equipped with two Powers 6B projectors with G. E. incandescent lamp light source. There is a speed indicator for each projector and an additional speed indicator for the musical director's desk.

Other Features

The projection room is 18x33 feet (Wonder which is the 18 and which the 33.—Ed.) and it contains, besides what has been named, an enclosed rewinder, motor driven and built into the wall so that it is flush with the surface thereof. Directly beneath this rewinder is a twelve-reel film cabinet, also built into the wall. For the convenience of the projectionists there is a shower bath, toilet and wash basin, as well as telephone connections with the various parts of the theatre and with the outside world. The change-over device will be electro-magnetic, controlled by a push button at each projector. Chairs and other necessary furnishings will be supplied for the comfort and convenience of the projectionists.

Jack ReVille, who will be manager of this really wonderful house, is entirely responsible for the complete projection room equipment. He is so much interested in the projection equipment that he personally designed the port shutter device described. He took the projection room out of the hands of the architect entirely (SHAKE, friend ReVille. You're my friend for life. Most sensible thing I've known of lately.—Ed.) and I believe what he has done could not be justly criticized, at any point.

I doubt if you yourself could or would find any fault in it, but Mr. ReVille is sending you an invitation to be present at the opening which I hope you will be able to accept.

In passing I might say that the gentlemen who have financial interest in this enterprise are of accord with Mr. ReVille with regard to the fact that what they will have to sell to the public will be a picture perfectly projected to the screen—which latter, by the way, is a Raven half-tone screen.

Most Unique Thing

In my opinion, the most unique thing about this entire theatre is the fact that STAGE DECORATIONS, GOLD LEAF BOX OFFICES, FIFTY-PIECE ORCHESTRAS AND THE LIKE ARE NOT WHAT THE PUBLIC REALLY PAYS TO SEE. They fully realize that these things fill their place, and are important, but that after all the picture is the thing.

The decorations and appointments of the theatre will be in keeping with strictly up to date ideas. I believe the decoration is in what is known as the Georgian period. The organ is a $25,000 Roberts-Morton.

Please treat this letter as being from one friend to another, accepting it in the spirit in which it is written—that of one projectionist to another, describing what is, to my mind, a really high class projection room and equipment.

Seems to be a mighty fine installation, but why in hallelujah didn't you name the projectionists, or are they not yet known? Have seen nothing of an invitation yet, and hardly think I can go anyhow. It's a long way from New York to Richmond, you know. There's lots of things I'd like to do, but they take time—also I'm no millionaire, and I can't afford to go gallivanting off to the corners of the earth like Laemmle and that bunch. Much obliged for the description. When things get going would like to have a photograph of the projection room and projectionists.

The magnetic port shutter control sounds good, provided the fuses are where they will "go" within one-half second of the time a fire reaches the upper loop.

My compliments to Manager ReVille. May his tribe increase.

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason for this is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear and keep his hands off the name projection room, or so they think.

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "Projection Room" and disapproves "Projector Room." Up to date the following local unions have officially approved "Projection Room" as the correct term: Rock Island-Moline L. U. No. 433; Toronto, Canada, L. U. No. 173; Birmingham, Ala., L. U. No. 236; Louisville, Ky., L. U. No. 163, and Fort Wayne L. U. No. 1166. I am expecting to hear from other unions soon and already have a large number of letters from individuals. I would like to wake the S. M. P. E. up by handing them about ten thousand letters. It's your chance to make a real impression. Get busy.

Minnesota University

Chauncey L. Greene, College of Engineering, University of Minnesota, says:

Enclosed please find one dollar for the new lens chart. It is more than a year since I last wrote the department. In the interval I have acquired a copy of the Bluebook.

Richardson, the mere contemplation of the tremendous amount of work you must have done to produce a book covering so vast a field in such minute detail is simply staggering. Too bad it seems impractical to keep it revised and right up to date all the time.

There are several things I have wanted to write about. Am now editing them and hope to send them along soon.

As to revising the Bluebook, I expect to keep it fairly well up to date by having only five thousand printed at a time, and as often as seems necessary to eliminate dead matter and add new things. It seems to be the only practicable plan. It is now being followed out. One must, however, be very careful not to give space to things which are too new, because they may or may not be finally adopted into the industry. I've been fooled several times that way already. Glad to examine your writings when ready and to use such of them as seem to "fit in."

Fuses Blow

John Dickenson, Nashville, Tenn., has trouble with fuses blowing which he describes with quite sufficient briefness, as follows:

Am running a show shop in a small town not far from here. Take A. C. from service wires to drive a polyphase motor, which drives my generator. Have trouble with fuses blowing. Can you tell me what is the probable cause? Everything seems to be in good shape.

The probable causes which would result in blowing fuses on a polyphase motor circuit are as follows: (A) Fuses making poor contact, which induces heating and thus lowers the fuse capacity. Examine your fuse contacts and see that they are clean and tight. (B) Throwing starting switch or compensators from starting to running position too soon. Be sure the motor is up to speed before you throw the switch to running position. (C) Throwing switch into running position without its being placed in starting position at all. (D) Motor windings grounded. You may test by attaching one wire of a magneto bell to the frame of the moor and the other to the winding at some accessible point. (E) Excessive current due to low voltage, short circuits in the stator windings or single phase operation. (F) Starting switch being in running position when the current comes on after being off for a time.

I might add that a ground in the windings may blow one fuse and leave the motor operating on one phase of the line, under which condition the motor will heat, and usually make a growling noise sufficiently loud to be heard if the load is heavy. Usually, however, before there is much noise or heating the fuse carrying the active phase will blow, and thus stop the motor entirely.

Warning

If your motor heats unduly, test ALL fuses. Heating of polyphase motors is sometimes caused by the fuses of all phases blowing and stopping the motor. When it starts again after the replacement of the fuse of one phase only, it is assumed that all is well, whereas in reality the motor is operating on single phase, or perhaps on two phases, if a three-phase motor.

Your information is very meagre, hence I can only give you some of the usual general causes for fuse blowing with polyphase motors.

It Is to Laugh

An assistant projectionist in the Buckeye State says:

Recently I had an experience with a couple of New York "operators" who were here with the "Covered Wagon," which this theatre had the honor of showing the first time it was presented in the state of Ohio. %%??!!-!XX")'???! If I wrote all I think about them it would require at least one extra stamp to send this letter; also it would waste good paper. The senior of the twain said he had been "operating" in New York (What hospital?—Ed.) since 1903. I asked him, in an innocent sort of way, if he happened to have made the acquaintance of a man named Richardson. In the midst of the raving which followed, he made one lucid remark, viz.: "Why, if he came into your theatre and you happened to have a little brown edge on your picture he'd razz h out of you!"

Guess you must have caught him that way. If so I sincerely hope you did!

Well, brother, I am not in the least worried about the bellowing of such cattle. I value the friendship and respect of the really good men very highly. The others I don't bother my head about in any degree. New York has many high-class men; also she has some of the worst barnacles the profession is afflicted with.

That sort of man has no earthly use for me. He outrages audiences with his "brown edges" and similar punk work and they are helpless, unless a "Richardson" happens to be present. Then it is just awful because he is in position to raise hallellujah with him, and proceeds to do it.

As to Mazda

C. S. Shaw, one of the owners of the Le Boeuf Theatre, Waterford, Pa., says:

Am considering the installation of Mazda for projection. I get both good and bad reports about them, and do not wish to put them in unless I can be reasonably certain that they will prove satisfactory.

I have Powers machine (Projector, I presume you mean. The Powers company make other "machines" besides projectors.—Ed.), a screen 9x12 and a projection distance of sixty feet. I had the current tested recently. It varied from 107 to 113 volts, alternating current, sixty cycle, I believe. Can you give me any information or advise me in this matter?

One reason why you received both good and bad reports is because some Mazda installations are made under conditions where satisfaction may be expected, if the lamps be intelligently handled. The lamps are well managed and the results are excellent and satisfactory.

Other installations are made under conditions where there was no reason to suppose that Mazda would give satisfaction; also the lamp may have been unintelligently handled, which makes a very bad mess indeed.

As I understand you (I suppose your picture is 9x12, through you did not say so—a screen usually is considerably larger than the picture, you know) your conditions are such that you may expect very excellent results from Mazda. Don't imagine, however, that you can instal Mazda equipment haphazard, turn on the light and get even halfway decent results. It can't be done. Mazda is a temperamental son-of-a-gun, and must be treated as it wants to be treated or it just won't perform to your satisfaction, but if you, under your conditions, instal it, get a Bluebook of Projection and carefully and religioulsy follow the directions therein contained for handling Mazda and I am sure you will get uniformly better results than you now get with A. C. at the arc—decidedly better. Remember, though, that accuracy in adjustment is the thing that counts with Mazda AND do NOT force your lamps above their rated capacity by allowing an excess of current to pass through them. You can get all kinds of light that way, yes—while the lamp filament lasts, but that won't be for long.

Summed up, my advice is that you can get excellent results with Mazda, provided you handle it as it should be handled, and must be handled, to get maximum results.

His Difficulty

An Ohio projectionist writes:

Here is my difficulty and my line-up. Picture, 16 feet; projection distance, 120 feet; angle of projection, eight degrees and thirty minutes; screen tilted so as to be perpendicular to optical axis; projection lenses are nominally 6.5 inches E. F. and their working distance five inches; free diameter of back factor, 2.25 inches.

These lenses were purchased eight years ago, at which time they were supposed to be the best there was. They give perfectly sharp definition at either the center or corners of picture, and are quite free from flare—lack of contrast between whites and blacks—but—and here's the rub—they have a pronounced curvature of field. If a perfectly flat piece of ground mica is inserted in place of the film at the aperture, it is found that the lens can be so focused that a tiny circle a foot or two in diameter in the center of the screen is all that can be called perfectly sharp as to definition. If then, the lens be racked back from 1-16 to 3-32 of an inch, all four corners will be focused with exquisite sharpness, but the center will not be sharp.

Naturally the effect is not so pronounced when the film is in, but it nevertheless is there, and operates to injure the picture. The house is long and narrow. It seats 700 on the main floor, or a total of about 980 including the balcony. It is possible to so divide the focus that anywhere from fifty to sixty feet or more from the screen the picture seems acceptably sharp, but this still leaves about 200 seats at the front from which the picture lacks sharpness of definition to the critical eye. Whether for this reason or because in winter the front of the house is apt to be a bit cooler than the rear, most of our patrons avoid it, though some sit there regularly.

Wants to Know

What I want to know is, what may be expected in the way of flatness of field from the present-day projection lens? In other words, can you give us some standard by comparison with which the projectionist who has no access to a variety of lenses may judge of the performance of his own, always understanding that no lens can be expected to give good results unless it be intelligently handled?

Do you think that in my case the installation of new lenses, costing around sixty dollars each, would be a paying proposition? I am decidedly in favor of it, but my manager is not one to readily invest $120 to replace equipment which has been giving satisfactory service for eight years. By "satisfactory service" I mean that no one has ever kicked on the lack of definition. I could of course sharpen the definition by masking down the lens diameter, but that would mean prohibitive increase in current expense and, since the capacity of my M. G. set is limited, probably some decrease in screen illumination. For various reasons I think this letter had better be anonymous.

Frankly, I don't like those anonymous letters, though I know it is often, for any one of several reasons, necessary, or at least advisable.

Your question resolves itself into this simple query: Will it pay to work improvement in the screen result in a house having nearly a thousand seats to sell each show? Probably your manager has not considered it in just that light. For the information of your manager, the projection lenses (three of them, or is it four—I forget) in the Capitol Theatre, New York City, cost some HUNDREDS of dollars each. I do not at the moment remember the exact figure. Mr. Rothafel ordered these lenses to replace other lenses which also were high priced—each of them being worth MORE than both your present lenses or those you would get for sixty dollars, though none of his patrons had even dreamed of "kicking." Mr. Rothafel is so successful a showman that the Capitol made him a present of a bonus of ten thousand dollars last year, hence his judgment must be pretty good in most things.

As to whether or no it would be a paying proposition to replace those eight-year-old lenses, all I can say is that if I were manager of that theatre I would order new lenses BY WIRE, and have them sent special delivery.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Eastern Zone A. M. P. E. D. A. Holds Convention. Apple Would Eliminate Store Space. He Asks the World.

THE eastern zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America held a most enjoyable convention and two banquets at the Hotel Astor, November 12 and 13. President Oldnow, whom it was hoped would be in attendance, was obliged to send his regrets, but Secretary Barth was there in full force and explained in detail the benefits conferred by membership in the organization, and spoke hopefully of progress already made and of achievements yet to come.

Decision on many important matters was deferred owing to the desire of the association that the decisions made should be final and several important questions, which were brought before the association, were referred to committees appointed to take action on same.

Mr. Green, of the Precision Machine Company, expressed his views on the undesirability of charging a rental on loan mechanisms while projectors were being repaired, at least for the present. As a reason for this opinion on his part, he cited the fact that projector manufacturers were several weeks behind in repair work and that he did not believe exhibitors should be penalized for the delay.

Mr. Griffin, of the Nicholas Power Company, addressed the meeting with a clear and logical statement of the evils of the utilization for repair purposes of parts other than those manufactured by the projection machine builders.

The one jolt to the perfect harmony which prevailed at the meeting was provided by Mr. Katz, of the Crown Motion Picture Supply Company, who spilled the beans by inquiring "what in ..... a repair man was going to do when he could not get a trade discount on parts from the projector manufacturer and exhibitors were yelling for quick repairs."

This is the second time that Mr. Katz, who is the official enfant terrible of the A. M. P. E. D. A., has asked embarrassing questions at the wrong time.

ON another page, the owner of Troy's American Theatre adds to the wealth of experience which exhibitors have been contributing to this department during the past month.

It will be noted that Mr. Apple would eliminate the store space which he is now renting out and devote increased area to house seating.

While at first sight, this might appear to constitute an indictment against the practice which is quite common, of devoting a portion of the floor space of moderate sized houses to rental purposes, with a view of diminishing the overhead, it actually proves that Mr. Apple is a good swimmer and does not need the life preserver which he wore when making his plunge into the industry.

Not every new house could be increased both in area and seating capacity to advantage within three years of its building and we still hold that for the average small house provision for reducing the overhead by rentals for store purposes is a wise financial precaution.

THE following inquiry is just another illustration of the fact that when anyone wants to know where to get anything, they come to the Moving Picture World for the information:

Denver, Colo., Nov. 7, 1923.
Chalmers Publishing Co.,
New York City.

Can you give us the name of the company who manufactures the "Fulco Gold Seal 2 in 1 Film Cement?" We would like to have the address of this company.

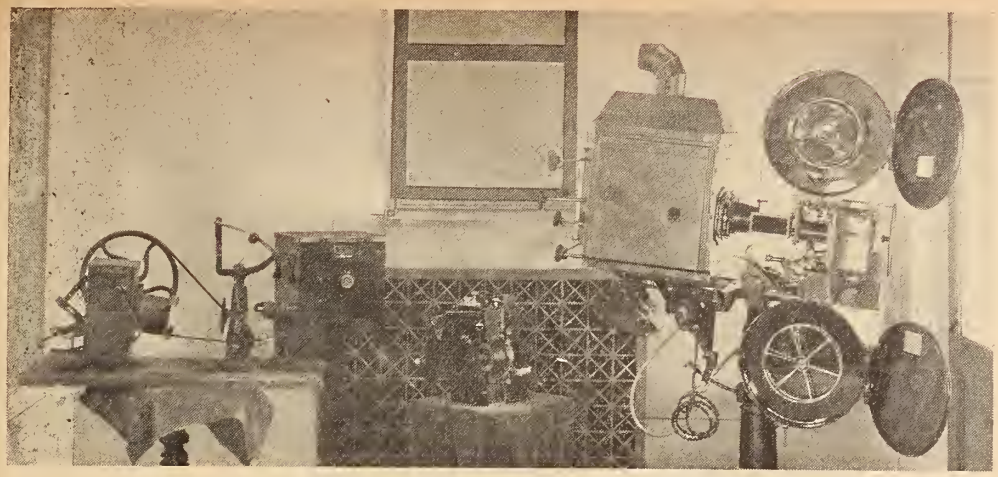
Very truly yours,
FORD OPTICAL COMPANY.
W. R. Yale.

Yes, Mr. Yale, we can tell you. The article in question is built by the E. E. Fulton Company, 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Incidentally, these people had a page advertisement in a recent issue of one of our contemporaries, which you must have overlooked.

FRED J. BIRD, for some time past with the Independent Movie Supply Company, of New York, City, has transferred his allegiance to the Raven Screen Company, 165 Broadway, New York City.

Mr. Bird, who was connected with the Nicholas Power Company for many years and left the late Motion Picture Equipment Corporation to go to the Independent Movie Supply Company, knows the equipment business from top to bottom. We don't know whether to extend our congratulations to Bird or to his new boss, but we are going to play safe and do both.



THE HAMILTON'S PROJECTION PROGRAM EXHIBIT

The Hamilton Palace Illustrates Program Achieved in Projection

EVIDENCE of what has been accomplished in the way of mechanical achievement in the art of projection, was furnished recently by the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

During an industrial celebration staged in that city, in which this theatre figured conspicuously, the management displayed in the lobby one of the early types of motion picture projectors, mounting it alongside a new 1924 model Simplex similar to one of the three which this house proposes to shortly install.

The comparative display, which is shown in the illustration, served to vividly exemplify to the public in general, and the movie fans in particular, that the present day projection equipment is as much of an improvement over that of bygone years as is the modern twin six over the old horse-drawn chaise.

The Ancient Amet Magniscope

The ancient projector used in the exhibit was the Amet Magniscope, made in 1898 by a man named Amet, who resided in Milwaukee and said to be among the best devices available for projection at that time. The film capacity was about two hundred feet as compared to two thousand feet at one loading of the latest style Simplex.

The early model projector did not carry fire-proof containers, magazines for films, the film being exposed to the sparks of the electric arc, and when the film came from the projector it was usually run into a sack or can, while the Simplex has fire-proof film magazines as well as a fire-proof housing around the arc.

The early model projectors carried no casings whatever, but were exposed to all the hazardous factors then recognized. They were supplied with gears constructed from a very cheap and inferior grade of brass, inaccurately cut by hand. Most mechanics of that day were unable to intelligently grasp the idea of motion picture projection, and comparatively few possessed the ability to assemble a projector so that it would be operative.

The earlier projectors were built minus a base. They were usually placed on a table or other improvised bases.

Illumination Methods Compared

The illumination was derived from two small carbons, each about the size of a lead pencil, and the energy consumed was approximately 15 amperes at 50 volts, or, roughly about 750 watts. The length of the carbon was somewhere in the neighborhood of three or four inches. The Simplex shown has a carbon arc lamp with a capacity of 200 amperes at a pressure of 50 volts, or approximately 10,000 watts, these figures being based on hourly consumption.

It is interesting to note that the first Amet Magniscope was built without an illumination source, and it was necessary for those desiring to view the picture to look through a small aperture, which was a part of the mechanism. In this manner but one person could view the picture at a time.

Later, the Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., developed a projection lens made up of a single glass. This gave a very indistinct picture, which caused much detail and high lights to be lost entirely. This lens served for a number of years, until finally a lens was developed with four factors, each one being ground to as near a perfect surface as human possibilities would permit. The price jumped from somewhere around $10.00 apiece for the single lens to $60.00 and $100.00 for the four elemcnt lens.

Another interesting comparison of the ancient and modern machines lies in the fact that the old ones made so much noise that they could be heard for a considerable distance, while the new models are practically noiseless.

This in itself is a vast improvement when one stops to consider that one could not fully enjoy a musical program which was offered in connection with the picture, by reason of the noise from the projection room being so plainly audible.

Burgert Reports Good Business in Florida

W. C. Burgert, of the Tampa Photo & Art Supply Company, of Tampa, Florida, reports good business in the picture theatre supply line. During the past two months he has sold complete equipment, including projectors and Heywood-Wakefield chairs, to the following Florida theatres:

The Sunset Theatre, Ft. Lauderdale; the Del Ray Theatre, Del Ray; the Liberty Theatre, Lake Worth; the Dixie Theatre, Oscala; the Avalon Theatre, Avon Park; the New Ware Theatre, Bartow; the New Imperial Theatre, Tampa; the Hillsboro Amusement Company, Plant City, and the Maceo Theatre, Tampa.

New Wisconsin House Will Open on Feb. 22

What it is claimed will be Milwaukee's finest and largest theatre, the Wisconsin, will open its doors to the public on Washington's birthday, if present plans are carried out. Although there still is a great job ahead despite the fact that the outside work is rapidly nearing completion, James A. Keough, of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, has announced that February 22 has been chosen as the tentative date for the opening.

In making the announcement, Mr. Keough gives official confirmation to the reports that have been prevalent for some time that the Saxes are to operate the new Milwaukee house, although this was at first stoutly denied.

In anticipation of the interior work that will now be concentrated upon, a conference has been called for next week at which contracts for an organ, draperies, sign and other furnishings will be let.

One of the features of the building will be a roof garden which will provide Milwaukee with what is promised to be the finest and largest dance floor in the city.

Other Houses Building for Saxe

While work is being rushed upon the Wisconsin, another crew of workmen is engaged in erecting the New Modjeska for the Saxe interests which will be to the south side of the city what the Wisconsin will be to the downtown section. It is hoped to complete the roof of the New Modjeska before the cold weather sets in and to have the entire house completed at approximately the same time as the Wisconsin.

The Saxe interests expect within the next three months to have completed the Janesville Theatre upon which construction was temporarily halted more than a month ago when a wall collapsed. Building operations there are going on while an investigation of the accident is being made.

Apple Would Shift the Lobby Doors Use Steam Heat and Banish Stores

If Benjamin Apple, owner of the American Theatre, in Troy, N. Y., ever builds another house it's a safe bet that he will profit from the experience which he has gained during the past three years from his present theatre. So far as location is concerned Mr. Apple is perfectly satisfied.

His house is in the business center of the city, and it might be said right here that Mr. Apple is a firm believer in the advisability of downtown houses in cities of from 50,000 to 75,000 inhabitants. He contends that the people naturally flock downtown on a night or a holiday, and, furthermore, that these houses stand a far better chance than even a nearby residential one in catching the transient trade.

But when it comes to interior arrangements of his theatre that is an entirely different question. Unfortunately, the architect who designed Mr. Apple's house made a rather bad mistake in that the doors opening from the lobby into the house permit not only light from the lobby to strike the screen, but also cause a stiff draught to strike patrons in the rear of the house as well as along the aisles, the doors opening directly opposite the aisles themselves.

Would Change Position of Lobby Doors

"My lobby is about twenty by twenty," said Mr. Apple in discussing his house with a World representative. "I do not like too large a lobby because if a picture is not drawing well it gives a barren appearance. Neither do I like too small a lobby, for that means that, on a rainy night, many people, if forced to stand outdoors in line, will go elsewhere. Unfortunately, my doors open directly opposite the aisles, and as a result light strikes my screen at very frequent intervals; and if it's a cold night a draught hits the patrons sitting along the aisles and some of those in the rear. I have placed curtains as windbreakers in the rear, but, of course, such would be impossible across the aisles.

Prefers Steam Heat

"My projection throw is about 105 feet, and appears to be about right for a twelve by sixteen screen. If I built another house I would use hot-water heat in preference to hot air. I am well satisfied that ventilation is absolutely necessary to the success of a theatre these days, and the blower system which I now have seems to meet with the situation, and I would not change it unless I used hot water, and then brought about ventilation by some one of the modern appliances.

Would Eliminate Stores

"All my lights are controlled from the projection room, which I think is advisable, although we have a main switch in the office as well. I made the mistake when I built this house of putting in a store next door to help meet the overhead. I would not do this again, but would depend upon the success of my house to meet the expenses and provide the profit, and in doing that I would increase my seating capacity by about 200, making my house one of a thousand seats rather than eight hundred.

"I have a fifty-foot frontage at the present time. I would prefer one of sixty feet. Pictures are here to stay, and, to my way of thinking, a theatre should be so well managed that it will not be obliged to look to this or that, such as small stores, pop-corn stands, and similar schemes, to make it a paying proposition—at least a business center house in a city of 75,000 population."

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

While the week ending November 10 brought the incorporation of one motion picture company, capitalized at more than a million dollars, there was a decided slump in the number of companies entering the industry in New York State, the records in the state's corporation bureau showing that but three companies of this character had been chartered.

These companies included the Bray Screen Products, Inc., capitalized at $1,800,000, and the 180th Street Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $60,000, the amount of the capitalization of the Johnny Arthur Pictures, Inc., not being stated in the papers as filed. All of the new concerns will be located in New York City.

Theatres Projected

FAYETTEVILLE, ARK.—E. C. Robertson will erect brick and terra-cotta theatre, with marble foyer, leather upholstered chairs, rest room, typhoon cooling system, to cost $50,000. Pipe organ costing $10,000 will be installed.

OAKLAND, CALIF.—L. J. and Julian Toifelmeir will erect handsome new moving picture theatre at East 14th street and 89th avenue, 70 by 187 feet, with seating capacity of 1,500, to cost $100,000.

FLORENCE, COLO.—New Rialto Theatre on West Main street is nearing completion. House will have seating capacity of 460.

PLANT CITY, FLA.—M. E. Moody, Dr. C. T. and Col. J. L. Young, will erect theatre, store and office building at Ever and Reynolds streets, to cost $100,000. Theatre will have seating capacity of 1,000. Lessee, Hillsboro Amusement Company, Inc., Tampa.

QUINCY, ILL.—R. Levine Company, 822 West 70th street, has contract to erect two-story brick theatre, store and office building, 88 by 197 feet, on Washington square, for Pinkelman & Corey, to cost $250,000.

1,186,742 persons have seen it in New York, London, Chicago and Los Angeles since its world premiere on August 1, 1923 at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York.

—then it started at popular prices in the Capitol Theatre.

102,424 persons saw it last week at the Capitol—60,000 persons had to be turned away last week at the Capitol.

Its success in New York has made the hardest boiled showmen in the business sit up and gasp.

Its success in other cities is also nothing short of sensational.

—6th crowded week at Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

—13th crowded week at Empire Theatre, London.

—2nd crowded week at Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington.

—2nd crowded week at Imperial Theatre, San Francisco.

Other crowded engagements to follow next week in Detroit, Seattle, Milwaukee, Baltimore.

TELEGRAM FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Little Old New York opened today at Moore's Rialto playing to absolute capacity every performance. Crowds turned away every show. Picture is the talk of the town. This showing more than remarkable in face of such opposition as Hunchback of Notre Dame, Harold Lloyd Why Worry, Chaplin's Woman of Paris, and Ziegfeld's Follies. Monday night picture will show to the most distinguished audience in the country's history. Ex-President Wilson, members of the Cabinet, foremost Senators, foreign Diplomats have sent acceptances.

Here are the actual facts.

It is an unforgettable picture.

It is Marion Davies' greatest achievement.

When she jumped into "Pat O'Day" clothes she jumped right into the hearts of every man, woman and child lucky enough to see the picture.

She has the support of the greatest cast ever assembled for a motion picture.

An exquisite musical score specially composed by William Frederick Peters.

The great days of early New York live again before your eyes.

ALL over the country "His Children's Children" is demonstrating at box-offices that it's one of the outstanding money-makers of the season.

Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill., telegraphs:

"'His Children's Children' opened on Saturday to great business. Sunday better than Saturday. Bigger even than 'The Spanish Dancer.' I consider this picture a great box-office attraction."

This review from the St. Louis Times shows one reason for the fine business at the Missouri Theatre:

"Here is our personal vote of thanks to the director of 'His Children's Children.' It is an epic in its way and tells a powerful story."

Here is an absorbing and exciting entertainment for all who like a good detective-crime-mystery story—and who does not?

EXHIBITORS HERALD:

"The Leavenworth Case" loses none of its entertainment value through transference to the screen. Its highly dramatic moments have been well retained. The picture is well staged and lighted and full of dramatic interest; the story flows smoothly and works up to a splendid climax.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

No type of story is more popular in these United States than a good detective yarn, and Anna Katharine Green's mystery tale "The Leavenworth Case" is said to be her most widely read and best liked work. Therefore to begin with this picture it can boast of a real plot. It is one that bristles with action—action that begins soon after the introductory reel gets under way and keeps rolling along at a merry pace right up to the finish. The scene in "The Rat Trap," a sort of third-degree chamber, possesses real thrills. The entire mounting is of a type that stamps this as a high class offering.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW:

From the time the old man is found dead in his sound-proof study till the very end, where both girls are freed of suspicion and the culprit is run down, the film runs along with a smoothness and continuity which will carry its audiences along with it. The production is fairly peppered with thrilling incidents, not the least of which is a hair-raising fist fight on the very edge of the roof of the four-story house from which the villain is finally thrown and killed. The skill with which this situation is handled cannot help reflect itself on the reaction of the spectators, who, we feel sure will be edging forward on their seats.

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE"

The Mystery Story That Hypnotized Millions!

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE," now transferred to the screen, will break its long record of success as a best-seller and a stage success as a film masterpiece.

Mystery! Thrills! Suspense!

"The Leavenworth Case" holds spectators breathless with excitement as the finger of suspicion moves from one character to another and then swings back to give an unexpected climax and denouement!

Mystery! A wealthy recluse found murdered in the sound-proof study in his home in the Whirling City!

A handkerchief, dainty, scented, with the initials of one of his nieces on the floor!

A strange caller in the night! A hidden love! A threat!

A charred letter in the grate of a girl's room!

A story so baffling in details all will want to see it lived on the screen! A story written by the master of modern mystery fiction and played by a superb all-star cast including Seena Owen, Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell and Bradley Barker!

A fine picture plus pep - and look at

Just because the Garden Theatre management, in Paterson, N. J., knew they had a fine picture in "The Wanters"—do you suppose they were content to sit back and let the picture do the work?

Nothing doing. They knew, as all real hustling showmen know, that an excellent picture possessing good public selling possibilities, such as are found in "The Wanters," means greater business and larger net profits provided—one takes advantage of the picture's possibilities and exploits them.

They told Paterson about the "The Wanters" and the results obtained more than justified their judgment as showmen.

What they did in Paterson—you can do.

Nine days in advance of the showing they used 1000 snipes, 14x42, with a teaser title—"Are You a Wanter?"

Seven days in advance—they made a tie-up with the leading paper with a "Wanters" solution problem, the paper giving a quarter of a page daily to this. Prizes being given to the best answers to the question—"What do you want?"

Seven days in advance—a teaser campaign connected with prominent people in Paterson. "Mr. ....., you are a famous Wanter by the people of Paterson for the purpose of obtaining more schools."

Regular newspaper advertising started five days in advance with twelve inches—increasing daily to fifty on Sunday and twenty on opening day. Ten outside papers, covering the outlying districts around Paterson—42 inches.

Three days in advance—formed a "Wanters Club" by enlisting pupils of different schools. Each member being presented with a button reading: "R. U. A. Wanter?"
Lobby display—marquee cutouts and local store tie-ups completed the campaign.

The story of "The Wanters" is just what the title implies. It tells of the wanters in the world and there are millions of them. Who they are. What they want. You see them all in this picture. John Stahl could not have picked a better public appeal theme, and like "The Dangerous Age" he has treated it boldly with that human touch that makes big pictures. The
MOVING PICTURE
WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

A Thing or Two

EVERY now and then it does us good to get away from the ponderous discussions and the impressive statistics and remember that this is the moving picture business. Not a brand new business—but, in many respects and in many sections, just the same old picture business, growing slowly, improving perceptibly, but still the same business fundamentally.

For example:

A Famous Players salesman walked into an Ohio town the other day. After some general discussion the exhibitor launched into a tirade against the prices of the "bigger and better" pictures.

"Why," he snorted, "I'll bet when you come back here to sell me 'The Covered Wagon' you'll ask fifty dollars or more.

"And you know I never paid more than ten dollars for any Warren Kerrigan picture in my life."

AN exhibitor in a small town in Illinois had a half hour or so to spare so he picked up his trade paper.

He found some interesting reading. An interview with Mr. Whoozis on "Service"—flowing phrases and heartrending sentiment. It tickled our friend the exhibitor because his attraction for the day was a picture from the Whoozis organization.

A stirring action drama of the West—the posters were out front, the lobby decorated with photos. The exhibitor is already counting his profits—because his town sure loves "action."

He will tell you: "When I have a society drama they stay at home with the radio."

The "boy-of-all-work" enters lugging the film can that has just been dropped at the station. A few minutes examination of the reels and then he informs the boss:

"They switched on us! Sent us 'Lady Cholmondeley's Fan.'"

The exhibitor looks at the trade paper interview before him. "Service! Aw, hell!"

A HIGH-POWERED salesman from one of our biggest distributors "put something over" about this time a year ago in a certain fair sized city.

He sold "Group XYZ" at three hundred dollars a picture—so far over quota that even the manager admitted he was good.

The exhibitor registered a loss on every picture in the group. When the same salesman returned this September he was told, "I can't pay you more than two hundred dollars a picture. That is my top." The opening was there to compromise at two fifty.

"Nothing doing!" snapped the salesman. "Three hundred or nothing."

The distributor's productions are showing this year in the Moose Hall down the street—at one hundred and thirty a picture.

BUT, speaking of the Moose Hall—here is another thought. And the incident cited is by no means exceptional.

A certain exhibitor in the Pittsburgh territory "had his top figure" and wouldn't budge above it for "The Birth of a Nation." He ran the only theatre in town—which gave him the right to laugh.

The result was that his patrons were fed some rather poor—and old—film entertainment.

The cure didn't come from within the industry. It was provided by the local druggist who saw an opportunity—and who was probably pretty tired of rotten pictures himself.

We met a salesman who was present the night the cure was first in evidence. Here is his story:

"When I got in the town and saw the Elk's clubhouse flaunting posters on a current worthwhile picture you could have knocked me over with a feather. But as the evening progressed and I watched the steady stream of patrons who actually seemed to be HUNGRY for good pictures —I knew that our old friend the exhibitor had a fight on his hands."

Yes, it is still the moving picture business.

Middle West Exhibitors Pick Hays as Admission Tax Leader

REPRESENTATIVES of exhibitor organizations in Central Western States conferred this week with Will H. Hays. This conference was the outgrowth of a meeting of heads and directors of these organizations at French Lick, Ind., on November 14 and 15, when it was decided that a concerted effort would have to be made to bring about the repeal of the admission tax. It was the opinion of the exhibitor leaders that the amusement business is severely handicapped by the admission tax, which they also view as a burden upon the general public to whom they are dependent. The visiting representatives chose H. M. Richey of Detroit as their secretary. Mr. Richey will remain in New York City for an indefinite period.

The admission tax was discussed from all angles at the French Lick meeting and it was agreed that every effort must be made to have it done away with. It was the unanimous opinion of all exhibitors present that Mr. Hays should be asked to take charge of the situation and begin action for a repeal of the tax.

The following exhibitors telegraphed Mr. Hays their request that he act as leader and pledged their co-operation as a committee appointed at the French Lick meeting: Joseph R. Denniston, Michigan; Ludwig Siegel, Illinois; N. A. Cole, Texas; H. B. Varner, North Carolina; Jake Wells, Virginia; Harry Crandall, Washington, D. C., "per Wells"; R. G. Liggett, Kansas, "per S. A. Handy"; Gustave Schmidt, Indiana; W. A. Steffes, Minnesota, chairman.

Mr. Hays telegraphed William A. Steffes, at French Lick, that he would be glad to "consult by phone or in person at a very early date with your committee or with a committee of, say, three whom you might elect for that purpose, and in such consultation decide as to the best way to proceed."

Among the exhibitors from Indiana who attended the meeting were Gustave G. Schmidt, Edward H. Bingham, A. C. Zaring, Frank Rembusch and Charles Olsen, of Indianapolis; J. N. Wyckoff and S. P. Katzenbach, of Terre Haute; Nat Bernstein, of Michigan City; J. B. Stine, of Clinton; Frank Heller, of Kokomo; S. S. Schauer, of Valparaiso; W. F. Easley, of Rushville; Billy Connors, of Marion; E. M. Eggleston, of Seymour; O. I. Demaree, of Franklin, and Arthur Jackson, of Crawfordsville.

Other states represented at the meeting were Minnesota, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Texas, Wisconsin and Virginia. The other exhibitors present included Al Steffes, of Minneapolis; H. M. Richey and J. R. Dennison, of Michigan; Jake Wells, of Virginia; Joseph Rhode, of Wisconsin; H. A. Cole, of Texas; Judge Handy, of Kansas, and Ludwig Siegal, Glenn Reynolds, J. T. Dittman, Ben L. Bervey, G. E. Johnson and Julius Lamb, of Illinois.

Allan Holubar Dies

Los Angeles, Nov. 20.

Allan Holubar, the well known film director, died this morning after an illness of six weeks. He was filming scenes at Nashville, Tenn., getting atmosphere shots for his first of three pictures to be released by Metro, when he first became ill. Upon returning to Los Angeles he was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital and showed such a decided improvement that he went to his home after having a major operation performed. He had a relapse yesterday and began to weaken.

Holubar was 34 years old and was born in San Francisco. He leaves a wife, Dorothy Phillips, and a young daughter. His chief film successes included "Heart of Humanity," "Man, Woman and Marriage," "Hurricane's Gal" and many others. It was while appearing in Henry Savage's Play, "Every Woman," that he met his wife.

Buys Canadian House

Calgary Citizens Form Company; Through Foreclosure Get Palace for $306,000

As the outcome of the foreclosure of a mortgage the National Theatres, Limited, is now the owner of Allen's Palace Theatre, in Calgary, Alberta. The house had been in the hands of a receiver. The purchase price totaled $306,000, according to a report coming from Calgary.

The first mortgage of $176,000 was held by the National Trust Company. The remainder, the report states, seems to have been made up in a second mortgage of the combined claims of a group of Calgary creditors, city taxes and mechanic's liens.

The Palace will be run as an Independent house.

Celebrities at Dance

Many Leading Screen Stars to Attend Goldwyn Club Affair

Many celebrities of the motion picture and theatrical world will be present at the Goldwyn Club dance at the Hotel Pennsylvania Friday evening, Nov. 23. Cosmopolitan, Distinctive and Goldwyn, whose pictures are released by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, are sponsors. Among those leading players of stage and screen who will be present are Marion Davies, Alma Rubens, Anita Stewart, Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Alice Joyce, Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel, Marguerite Courtot, Jobyna Howland, Jetta Goudal, Mimi Palmeri, Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontaine, Ann Pennington, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Jeanne Eagles, Edith Day, Naomi Childers, Queenie Smith, Richard Barthelmess, John Steel and Mrs. James Vail Converse (sister-in-law of Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt).

The program of entertainment, for which S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol Theatre will be the announcer, includes Miriam Battista, the child star, in songs and dances; Nina Byron, of "The Rendezvous"; De Villa & Ruarks, Argentine tango; Helen Shipman (appearing with Delysia in "Topics of 1923"), song and dances; Marga Waldron, of George White's "Scandals of 1923"; Margaret Wilson and Ray Ramond and chorus, of "Little Jessie James"; Evelyn Herbert, from "Stepping Stones"; Joe Cook, of "Vanities of 1923"; Bard and Pearl (with Delysia in "Topics of 1923"); Constance Evans, of "Artists and Models"; George Rosner, leading player in the same success; Helen Ford, of "Helen of Troy"; W. C. Fields, of "Poppy"; Lee Morse, "Artists and Models"; Brook Johns and Tom Moore.

Music will be furnished by Vincent Lopez in person and his Pennsylvania Hotel orchestra. Lighting and setting effects have been arranged by Mr. Rothafel, as master of ceremonies, with the aid of the staff of the Capitol Theatre. A limited number of tickets will be on sale at the entrance to the grand ballroom.

Test Theatre Curtains

District of Columbia Commissioners Contemplate Changes

Washington, D. C.—Fire resistance of fire curtains used in theatres is being investigated by the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, at the request of the District Commissioners, who contemplate changes in the regulations relative to theatre proscenium curtains.

Certain tests for strength when subjected to fire temperatures were made by the bureau some years ago, following the Iroquois Theatre fire in Chicago, which developed the fact that neither the plain asbestos cloth nor that reinforced with brass wires interwoven with the cloth were entirely satisfactory when subjected to temperatures of 1700 degrees Fahrenheit, it is stated in a preliminary report from the bureau. These findings show that cloth using alloy wires afford sufficient strength for the service required.

Binderup Wins in U. S. Supreme Court; Movement of Films Is Interstate Trade

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The movement of films from a producer or distributor to an exhibitor is declared by the United States Supreme Court to be in interstate commerce despite the fact that actual delivery may be made through a branch office of the former located in the same state as the latter. This decision was announced by the Supreme Court on November 19 in the case of Charles G. Binderup versus Pathe Exchange, Inc., of Nebraska, the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Company et al., and was handed down by Justice Sutherland. Of equal importance was the court's announcement that the forcing out of business of Binderup by the film men, as alleged by him, was a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Both these points were a reversal of the decisions of the courts below, and the case is remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in conformity with the Supreme Court opinion.

Binderup owned a picture theatre at Minden, Neb., and operated as lessee theatres in other places, to all of which, including his own, he supplied moving pictures and advertising matter connected therewith. In addition, he was in the business of selecting and distributing to a circuit of picture theatres, films and advertising matter accompanying them, under agreements with the various operators, some twenty or more in number, in various parts of the city. In other words, he operated a booking agency.

Some of the distributors entered into contracts with Binderup, by the terms of which they leased pictures to him, it is alleged, with the right and license to display them publicly at the theatre or theatres named. The individual defendants named were managers of branch offices or agents for the various distributors in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Minnesota. It is stated that the contracts by their terms were deemed made in New York, and were to be construed according to the laws of that state and provided that deliveries should be made to the exhibitor from the Omaha branch offices.

The complaint further alleges that these distributors controlled the distribution of all films in the United States, and that the films cannot be procured from others. The Omaha Film Board of Trade is a Nebraska corporation, organized for the purpose of promoting good will among those engaged in the picture business and for other purposes, its membership being limited to one representative from each company or person engaged in the film business.

It is alleged that the exhibitor's business was successful and profitable, and that the cupidity of the distributors being thereby aroused, some of them requested a share of his patronage and, upon his refusal, made threats to put him out of business by underbidding and supplying the various theatres constituting his circuit; that the Omaha Film Board of Trade was organized for the purpose of enabling these distributors to control prices and dictate terms to their patrons in Nebraska and other States.

It is further alleged that the business of the exhibitor had grown to large proportions; that he was procuring films from some of the members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, but had refused to buy from others, and that thereby a spirit of hostility was aroused against him on the part of the latter, who thereupon brought great pressure to induce those with whom he was dealing to cease doing business with him; that all the defendants in error thereupon illegally combined and conspired in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states, with the purpose and intent of preventing him from carrying on his said business, and with the intent to ruin him; that they caused false charges to be made against him before the Film Board of Trade and without his knowledge or an opportunity to be heard, placed him upon its blacklist, of which notice was given to distributors, who thereupon refused to transact further business with him; that those distributors who were not members of the Film Board of Trade co-operated with and approved the action of the board and conspired with others to ruin the business, credit and reputation of the exhibitor; that in furtherance of the combination and conspiracy the distributors have ever since refused to deal with him or furnish him with film service and have caused the unexpired contracts which he held with some of the distributors to be illegally and unlawfully cancelled, and that he has ever since been and still is deprived of such service, all of which allegations are recited in the opinion just handed down.

As the result of the foregoing, the court points out, the exhibitor asked judgment for three times the amount of damages which he has suffered as alleged. The jury trial resulted in a decision in favor of the exchanges, and the Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment for want of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of the United States does not concur in the findings of the courts below, and accordingly remanded the case to the latter for further proceedings, which means that the court will have to decide in favor of Binderup, in conformity with the Supreme Court's findings on the points in contest.

OMAHA, Nov. 21.

Charles G. Binderup hopes to collect $750,000 from his victory in the United States Supreme Court, according to his lawyers, Baxter and Van Deusen, of this city.

"Our client must now show damage," said Irving F. Baxter. "We can show damage of $250,000 and that, because the law awards three times the amount of damage, means we are entitled to recover $750,000.

"The immediate effect of this decision of the United States Supreme Court is to send our case to trial on its merits, but it also affects business in various other lines. In fact, it is almost revolutionary in its effect on business."

The Court remarks in its decision that the distributors acting separately could have refused to furnish films to Binderup without becoming amenable to the provisions of the anti-trust act, but in this case it is alleged that they combined and conspired together to prevent him from leasing from any of them. The illegality consists, not in the separate action of each, but in the conspiracy and combination of all to prevent any of them from dealing with the exhibitor. The Court states that the contracts with these distributors contemplated and provided for transactions in interstate commerce. The business which was done under them—leasing, transportation and delivery of films—was interstate commerce. The alleged purposes and direct effect of the combination and conspiracy, the Court states, was to put an end to these contracts and future business of the same character and "restrict, in that regard, the liberty of a trader to engage in business," and, as a necessary corollary, to restrict interstate trade and commerce, in violation of the anti-trust act.

"The film contracts were between the residents of different states and contemplated the leasing by one to the other of a commodity manufactured in one state and to be transported to and used in another," the Court relates. "The business of the distributors of which the arrangement with the exhibitor here was an instance, was clearly interstate. It consisted of manufacturing a commodity in one state, finding customers for it in other states, making contracts with them, and transporting the commodity leased from the state of manufacture into the state of the lessees. If the commodity were consigned directly to the lessees, the interstate character of the commerce throughout would not be disputed.

"Do the circumstances that in the course of the process the commodity is consigned to a local agency of the distributor, to be by that agency held until delivered to the lessee in the same State, put an end to the interstate character of the transaction and transform it into one purely intrastate? We think not. The immediate delivery to the agency did not end and was not intended to end the movement of the commodity. It was merely halted as a convenient step in the process of getting it to its final destination. The general rule is that where transportation has acquired an interstate character it continues at least until the load reaches the point where the parties originally intended that the movement should finally end.'"

The Court refers to a case of Swift & Company versus the United States where it was held that where cattle were consigned for sale from a place in one state, with the expectation that the transit would end after purchase in another state, the only interruption being that necessary to find a purchaser at the stockyard, and this was a typical, constantly recurring course, the whole transaction was one of interstate commerce, and the purchase a part and incident of it. It further appeared from that case that Swift & Company were also engaged in shipping meat to their respective agents at the principal markets in other states for sale by such agents in those markets to dealers and consumers; and these sales were held to be part of the interstate transaction upon the ground "that the same things which are sent to agents are sold by them and * * * some at least of the sales are in the original packages. Moreover the sales are by persons in one state to persons in another." This was held to be a parallel case.

Court Decrees Omaha's Empress Must Be Surrendered to Loew

THE World Realty Co., Omaha, owner of most of the larger picture houses in Omaha, which recently announced it had purchased the Empress, another of the large houses here, must give up that theatre to Marcus Loew, of New York, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and head of Loew, Inc., according to an order from Federal Judge Joseph Woodrough. The decision was handed down in the Federal Court here this week.

Mr. Loew bought the Empress, he said, through an authorized agent, and the court held his purchase valid, although it was alleged a subsequent deal was made in Omaha by the original owner wherein the house was sold to the World Realty Company.

The Empress, one of the larger downtown theatres offering a combination of motion pictures and vaudeville, has been under the management of the World Realty Company of Omaha for some time. Attorneys for the company say they will appeal the decision to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The World Realty Company is the largest motion picture and theatrical corporation in Omaha and one of the largest in the West.

Loew, who was in Omaha as a witness in his suit to gain possession of the Empress, said that W. N. Ledoux, former owner of the Empress Theatre, contracted with Samuel A. Shirley, Omaha, district manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, on May 24 last in Chicago, to sell the theatre to the Loew interests for a total of $60,000, of which $25,000 was to be cash and the remaining $35,000 to be made in deferred payments. Loew said he went to Chicago to meet his own representative and Ledoux while the negotiations were in progress, and that he and Ledoux agreed upon the price. When Ledoux asked him about security, he says, he told Ledoux he would have to take his word as a guarantee of payment, to which, he says, Ledoux agreed. Loew says he went back to New York after it was agreed that the Empress owner and Shirley should attend to drawing the contract.

Mr. Shirley said the contract was drawn up by a lawyer in Chicago. He said the lawyer's name was Levinson. This contract was exhibited in court.

Attorney Levinson, of Chicago, testified that both Ledoux and Shirley signed the contract in Chicago and that nothing was said about the guarantee of payment. The lawyer said the terms of the contract gave Shirley the right to assign it to other persons.

Mr. Ledoux admitted he had negotiated with the World Realty Company of Omaha before refusing to carry out the alleged contract with Loew and Shirley, representing the Metro people.

Counsel for Loew asked that the sale contract between Ledoux and the World Realty Company be produced in court, but counsel for the World Realty Company replied that the terms of this contract were confidential.

Mr. Loew announced that he will show only Metro pictures at the Empress.

Georgia Theatres Threatened by Further 20 Per Cent. Tax

ATLANTA—Scores of Georgia exhibitors virtually face extinction if the latest proposed tax on theatres in this state becomes a law. Under the provisions of a bill introduced in the Georgia Legislature by Representative Elders, of Tatnall, free school books will be furnished to all pupils in the common schools in the first seven grades, and the money to pay for the books will be raised by a tax of 20 per cent. on the gross receipts of all theatres in the state. The proposed law would place this 20 per cent. tax during 1924, and thereafter a 10 per cent. per annum tax would be levied.

Close on the heels of the introduction of this bill came the first optimistic tax note the exhibitors of Georgia have had in some time. This was an amendment to the present Special State Tax through which the Special Tax on theatres was reduced as regards the picture houses in suburbs of cities of more than 50,000. This tax was reduced on these particular houses from $25.00 to $12.50.

Perry Spence, of Progress Pictures, Inc., points out that this amendment is most fair, inasmuch as it is absurd to make the small theatre pay the same amount of tax as the big houses downtown. He also suggests that it might be wise for some of the city councils in Southern towns to make similar amendments to their own special city taxes on picture theatres.

"The exhibitors in Georgia are getting together to fight the 20 per cent. tax introduced by Representative Elders," says Mr. Spence, "as they can see the 'handwriting on the wall' right now.

"It's a shame the way theatres in the South are taxed. Lawmakers seem to think a theatre is a gold mine. It's a wonder they don't take theatre and all. Then the exhibitor would at least have off his mind the worry of paying all the various taxes. Here we have the Federal tax of 10 per cent., the State Special tax, the income tax, the Corporation tax, the City Property tax, the Assessment tax—and now comes the proposed tax for school books.

"If this tax bill is passed I am afraid that the State of Georgia is going to lose heavily through it by losing the State Special tax, as the small-town exhibitors will close up and go to some other state where they will be free of this foolishness and uncalled for assessment."

Warner Brothers Hosts

News comes from the West Coast that Motley H. Flint, past potentate of Al Malaikah Temple, Shrine at Los Angeles, and the Warner Brothers gave an elaborate party at the Warner Studio for the Minnesota delegation of the American Legionnaires who attended the national convention in San Francisco.

The entire gathering were taken on a tour of the huge studio and served with dinner on one of the big studio stages, where they were introduced to the different Warner stars, directors and important players. Then they were shown "The Gold Diggers."

Klan Film a Fizzle

Ohio Order Probably "Out" Cost of 18,000-Foot Picture

The Ohio Ku Klux Klan, which has for some time been endeavoring to enter the picture field with its own production, "The Toll of Justice," is reported to have encountered difficulties which spell failure for the proposition. The picture was started several months ago by the C. & S. Pictures Co., of Columbus, Ohio, but in the final week of production it was found necessary to effect a reorganization of the company which resulted in the Klan becoming sole owner and producer through reducing the company to the capacity of an employee.

The film, which had a footage of 18,000 feet, was subsequently completed, but when it reached the laboratory it was found that something had gone wrong with the lighting system and the interiors would have to be retaken.

A number of conferences between the Klan and the company was held, but the Klan and the company were held, but the last report received is to the effect that Corey G. Cook, who wrote the scenario and was directing the picture, is arranging to sail for Egypt soon to take up travelogue work. It is likewise stated on good authority that the general manager of the company will soon leave for California. The picture was scheduled for release early in September.

Publicity by Pictures

Canada Acquainting the World with Its Advantages Through Films

Canada is becoming better and more favorably known throughout the world by reason of the publicity its advantages are getting through motion pictures. For the past four years the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, which is connected with the Department of Trade and Commerce, has been letting the world know about Canada's assets and possibilities. A series of one-reel informative and educational type of motion picture called the "Seeing Canada Series," has been widely circulated both theatrically and non-theatrically through recognized film distributing agencies.

The Canadian Motion Picture Bureau, of which Raymond S. Peck is director, says that the work of the Bureau has been of great aid to the Department of Agriculture and many other departments.

Berman on Trip

The State Capitol at Albany received a visit last Friday afternoon from Samuel Berman, of New York City, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of New York State. During the session Mr. Berman was a frequent visitor at the State Capitol. Upon reaching Albany, Friday, Mr. Berman called on several exhibitors and left late in the afternoon for Schenectady, where he met others.

N. H. Gordon, original franchise holder of Boston, will serve as the First National rotating committee member at the New York office during the fortnight beginning November 19. He succeeds Walter Hays of Buffalo.

Earl Returns to Desk

Edward Earl, president of Nicholas Power Company, returned to his desk Wednesday after four months vacation made necessary by his strenuous duties. Mr. Earl, to whom the Power Company's success in its field is due in a great measure, is among the best known and most popular men connected with the industry in his particular line.

National Motion Picture Day Proves to Be Great Success

THE industry's first National Motion Picture Day, which is to be an annual event, proved a big success last Monday. That much is known now, but details of its far-reaching scope will not be forthcoming until next week, when the territorial chairmen will report to National President Sydney S. Cohen.

Mr. Cohen issued a statement this week in which he said:

"The results of National Motion Picture Day are of a most gratifying character, with respect to public enthusiasm in the event and the reports to the national office from leading theatre owners and organizations throughout the country. The benefits of this celebration to the theatre owners and the industry will be manifested for some time to come, because of the good will built up and the increased measure of popular appreciation of the community value of the theatre which resulted from this co-operation of exhibitor and public."

Throughout the nation crowds attended the theatres on National Motion Picture Day, their attention having been forcibly drawn to the occasion by well-conducted publicity campaigns including published endorsements by the governors of states, mayors of big cities, high officials of the federal government and other prominent men and women who heartily aided the cause. In Hartford, Conn., twelve of the leading theatre owners had page advertisements of National Motion Picture Day printed in the newspapers. In the Hartford advertisement, the following important statement, which applies to all parts of the United States, was made:

"By impressing upon the public this powerful influence for good, the presentation of wholesome entertainment and its willingness to co-operate with civic and social organizations for enlightenment and uplift, the theatre has received the recognition and enthusiastic endorsement and patronage of the thinking people of America."

It is unnecessary to say that National Motion Picture Day was a rousing success in Hartford and other parts of Connecticut. Joseph W. Walsh, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut; W. A. True, Louis Sagal, Poli Circuit; C. M. Maxfield, Charles Repass and Jacob Alpert were the committee in charge of the campaign.

In the Western Pennsylvania district, where the theatre owners had inaugurated a very extensive campaign for National Motion Picture Day, there were a number of added attractions in the theatres, one notable supplementation of the program being the addition of the Musical Club Choral Society with 80 feminine voices under the direction of Charles N. Boyd. This is Pittsburgh's most exclusive musical and social organization. This chorus rendered several selections at different performances in the Million Dollar Grand Theatre on National Motion Picture Day.

A special form of exploitation indicative of the enterprise of the western theatre owners was presented in Denver, Col., under the direction of H. E. Huffman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Colorado. In connection with National Motion Picture Day there, the "Bluebird Weekly," a theatrical paper published by M. F. Lapham, devoted several pages to an endorsement of National Motion Picture Day and urged the theatre-going public to patronize the different theatres on November 19.

One element of the appeal made in Denver which is a worth while contribution to the literature of motion picture theatre's public service is as follows:

"The motion picture theatre, synonymous with public service, education and amusement, always has placed its screen at the service of national and civic constructive programs in war or in peace, and we now ask recognition of this great combination of all the arts, the motion picture."

In the Central West, especially in Ohio and Kentucky, great impetus was given to the observance of National Motion Picture Day through special lines of exploitation in newspapers, billboards and direct contact by letters from the theatre owner to his patrons. Several cities in Ohio, notably Toledo, Columbus, Cincinnati and Cleveland, took action in a combination of all the theatres in the matter of direct exploitation for National Motion Picture Day, and in every instance the response on the part of the public was of the most gratifying character.

With the endorsement of National Motion Picture Day by Mayor Magee of Pittsburgh, followed by similar action by the mayors of other Pennsylvania cities, Acting Mayor Murray Hulbert of New York City gave a most pronounced approval of National Motion Picture Day in a printed manifesto which was sent to all of the city departments and published in different newspapers.

This led to other developments along the exploitation line in the Greater City and brought to the front one of the most unique evidences of official and public approval of this event in a large parade which was headed by the New York City Police Band. This procession moved up Broadway, Saturday afternoon, November 17, from Twenty-third street and then into Central Park. The New York drive was under the direction of a special committee from the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, under the chairmanship of J. Arthur Hirsch, Charles Schwartz, Hy Gainsboro, Joseph Jame, Henry Suchman, J. Alton Bradbury, Sol Raives and Clarence Cohen.

In the New York Sunday News of November 18 a complete page was devoted to National Motion Picture Day in which National Education Commissioner John J. Tigert and others told of the wonderful advantages of National Motion Picture Day.

National Motion Picture Day will remain a definite institution among the theatres of the United States and will be celebrated annually.

Knickerbocker Exonerated

Washington, D. C.—The Knickerbocker Theatre Company is not responsible for the falling of the roof of the Knickerbocker Theatre on January 22, 1922, which resulted in the death of 98 persons and the injury of 103 others, under the verdict of a jury in the District Supreme Court in three of the many damage suits which have been brought against the corporation as a result of the catastrophe. The three suits covered by the verdict were for $10,000 each, two of which were for indemnity for death and the third for personal injuries. An appeal was noted from the verdict of the court.

In his instructions to the jury, the presiding justice pointed out that the theatre was to be held responsible if the jury believed it negligently maintained a dangerous situation which resulted in the damage to the plaintiff. It was the contention of the theatre company that it had accepted the theatre building in good faith from the contractors, following both Federal and District inspection and approval of the structure, and that it had no greater knowledge than any individual of any condition which may have existed and which resulted in the falling of the roof under the heavy weight of snow which caused the crash.

Claim Added Strength

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

The decision of the United States Supreme Court that the combination of motion picture companies to restrict distribution of films violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Law confirms the view of the Federal Trade Commission and will operate to strengthen its investigation of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, et al, according to a report from the commission at Washington, D. C.

The commission does not figure in the enforcement of the anti-trust law, but works under the law and under provisions of the Clayton Act, which was passed by Congress to supplement the Sherman law.

Last week the commission completed the taking of testimony in Los Angeles and the respondents now are to present their side of the case. The first hearing for this purpose will be in Jacksonville, Fla., but the date has not been set.

Hodkinson Urges Percentage, Decries Advanced Admissions

INCREASED prices of admission for motion pictures, advocated in some sections of the industry as a means of combatting the waste that has been characteristic of production, are not warranted under existing conditions, in the opinion of W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and a pioneer film man. Mr. Hodkinson said:

"I believe that any move intended to generally increase the admission prices of picture theatres at the present time, to offset the alleged waste in the industry, will result in failure. Pictures are having difficulty enough maintaining attendances at the present admission scale and it is my belief that increased quality in production is necessary in order to maintain even the present prices.

"As I discussed in a recent Colliers' article, there are four basic movements that must be made:

"First, the classification of pictures in theatres, and the movement to increase prices in certain houses on big pictures is in that direction.

"Second, a percentage basis of dealing between producer and exhibitor, whereby they are both concerned in what the product grosses from the public rather than engaged in the present efforts to 'sandbag' each other.

"Third, the abolishment of arbitrary lengths which cause the public to sit through five reels of padding in which the producer has an investment of $100,000, to see an idea expounded that could have been better done in fifteen minutes with an investment of $10,000.

"Fourth, that some system of refereeing between the two factions, production and exhibition of the business, must be set up; whether it is a mere arbitration between producer and exhibitor; whether it is a big figure from outside the industry with integrity enough to equitably serve both factions and not be dominated by either, or whether it is a practical business organization functioning between the producer and exhibitor, is immaterial. The referee principle must be established.

Relative to percentage booking, it is undoubtedly true that only by the producer and exhibitor agreeing on the principle of percentage booking can future progress be made. It is interesting to see nearly all producing and distributing factions uniting on this principle, as well as the editorial minds.

"We are still a long ways from our goal, however, while the exhibitor so generally rebels against the acceptance of the percentage principle. However, he is not to be blamed nowadays. When we get some formulas worked out that are equitable to both producer and exhibitor then we can expect co-operation on the part of the exhibitor and real progress can be made."

Callaghan of Monogram Warns Exhibitors Against Impostors

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, has telegrams from a Minnesota exhibitor and a North Carolina exhibitor stating that "the representative of your concern has failed to return or even to advise us concerning our contracts made with him, and we desire definite confirmation at once."

Mr. Callaghan immediately got in touch with a leading detective agency and advised them of the facts, because Monogram sells to State Rights buyers only and at the present time has no road representative other than George H. Wiley. Evidently several impostors are taking advantage of the situation and Mr. Callaghan issues this warning that no one is authorized to take contracts for Monogram except himself, Mr. Wiley or Mr. North of the home office.

"All Monogram pictures, inclusive of the Fred Thomson series of Westerns, are sold on the State Rights basis only," said Mr. Callaghan, "and each buyer will equip his representative with proper credentials, showing he is authorized to accept contracts and deposits on Monogram Pictures in his respective territory. We will go the limit in ferreting out these imposters and seeing that they are given the full extent of the law in the event of their apprehension. For the safety of all concerned, it is my earnest desire that every State Right buyer on whom these representatives call ask to be shown credentials before commencing any negotiations whatsoever.

"The buyers of the different State Rights will be announced as these rights are sold, and in this manner exhibitors will know who are the authorized representatives of the concerns in their respective territory and be guided accordingly."

Credit Association Formed to Curb Irregularities in Industry

THE Film Laboratories Credit Association, born at a dinner conference of laboratory executives and representatives at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, November 15, is described as a permanent contribution to the "safe and sane" drive now under way in the picture industry. It is the avowed purpose of the organization to check waste and put a curb on "wildcat" producers, to the resultant benefit of the legitimate picture makers and distributors.

At the initial meeting, which was attended by virtually every important commercial laboratory interest, the name of the new body was selected and plans made for completing its organization by election of officers and adoption of a code of practice at a second gathering in the Astor Thursday, November 22. The association will begin functioning December 1.

The Film Laboratories Credit Association is the result of a spontaneous movement on the part of the laboratory men to protect themselves against unscrupulous promoters and distributors who order prints shipped C. O. D. and then refuse to accept them. Through these and other practices the laboratories suffer big losses annually, in addition to having their vaults jammed with many worthless negatives left as security for prints.

Charles B. Hoy, credit expert and founder of the F. I. L. M. clubs throughout the country, with Frederick H. Elliott, formerly executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, were requested to make a survey of the laboratory business and they reported to the meeting that their investigation revealed the imperative need of a credit rating system. Mr. Hoy outlined a plan whereby protection could be accorded the laboratories without interfering with the business policies of the individual companies, and a resolution was unanimously adopted favoring organization along the lines he suggested.

The association plan has, it is said, the indorsement of practically every important laboratory in the country, and at the outset will have a membership of about thirty concerns. The laboratories participating in the initial meeting, through official representation or telegraphic indorsement, were:

H. J. Stryckmans, Claremont; L. J. Sans, Craftsman; Harry Goetz, Erbegraph; Tom Evans, Evans Film Manufacturing Co.; J. Coenen and R. De Roberts, Filmcraft of Los Angeles; William D. V. Kelly and William T. Crispinell, Kelly Color; Mark M. Dintenfass, National; W. K. Hedwig, Rex Hedwig; William S. Gill, representing W. R. Rothacker, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. of Chicago and Rothacker-Allers, Los Angeles; H. J. Yates, Republic; John A. Kent and Abe Heller, Reelab; Edward Horn and Harry Glickman, Tremont; H. R. A. Tucker, Urban.

Beware of Impostor!

David Bernstein, treasurer of Loew-Metro, issues the following warning:

"Someone posing as a representative of Metro Pictures Corporation has been circulating drafts drawn on the Harriman National Bank of New York, bearing the name of 'A. Bernstein, Comptroller,' and has apparently succeeded in obtaining the cash for these worthless drafts. Metro Pictures Corporation never issues drafts in payment of any obligations."

Grainger on Way East

James R. Grainer, general manager of sales for Goldwyn Cosmopolitan, is now en route home from his three weeks' trip to the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, Cal.

New Exchange at Butte

The new Hodkinson Exchange on North Montana street, Butte, Montana, is now open for business, under the management of H. L. Burnham, formerly branch manager at Spokane.

Joins Hodkinson

Mack D. Weinberger is now associated with the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, where he will handle special work on the following Producers' Security Pictures: "The Mark of the Beast," "Dollar Devils," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Kingdom Within" and "The Lion's Mouse."

Shipman on Trip

Ernest Shipman has left New York for a three weeks tour of the southeastern states. No explanation of the trip was forthcoming at the Shipman offices but it is assumed that it pertains to his recent announcement that he intends to produce in the South.

Pictures That Have Made Money for Others—

Will Make Money for YOU!

MONEY-MAKING SECTION

Special Service Supplement to Moving Picture World, December 1, 1923

"Where the promise is performed," is the slogan of a well-known New York advertiser.

It is a slogan that might well apply to that department of Moving Picture World—Straight From the Shoulder Reports.

For here is where the promise gives way to performance, where judgment gives place to actual results, where "maybe" is replaced by "it did."

Moving Picture World has prepared the special section herewith in the opinion that no better service can be rendered the exhibitor than to point out to him features that HAVE DONE THINGS.

For here there is no guess work, here there is no doubt, here he need only weigh the words of other exhibitors, judge the applicability of results in their theatres to his own situation, and act accordingly.

"Every picture is a first-run attraction until it has been shown in your town." Someone said that a long time ago. In most cases it is a true remark. And particularly is it true of comparatively recent productions such as are represented in this section, but which are at the stage where they may be termed "good buys" for most theatre owners.

We present our first "Money Making Pictures" section to exhibitors in the knowledge that the pictures represented herein, as shown by the Straight From the Shoulder Reports of theatre owners, constitute a list of definite, concrete profit-producing value.

Goldwyn

GOLDWYN FEATURES. Have proved consistently good. Never get a bad print from Goldwyn and they don't hold you up on the price. Pictures satisfy. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

HUNGRY HEARTS. (6,540 feet). Stars, Bryant Washburn, Rosa Rosanova. A corking good picture of the struggles of a poor, indigent family in America. Well liked here. Played it on a Saturday night and it turned out to be an ideal picture for here on that night. Usual advertising and good Saturday evening attendance. Health seekers and tourists attend. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Lon Chaney and star cast. Excellent in every respect. Plug Chaney's dual role—scientist and ape man—and you have a winner. Used a special built front, pulled excellent attendance. Big city, draw transient trade. Admission 17-20. J. L. Stallman, Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

LOST AND FOUND. Star, Pauline Stark. Clad in a sunny smile and a bale of hay, this picture, a colorful, delightful episode of life in the languorous South Sea Island, portrayed Pauline Stark and co-stars to splendid advantage. The picture should please all seeing it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A masterful piece of acting; Chaney, in our opinion, doing the best work of his brilliant career. A little gruesome, part of it, but it all had a meaning. Book it, brother, if your people know good acting when they see it; this one will please, thrill and satisfy them. Moral tone, can't say for that. Suitable for Sunday, hardly. Big attendance, drawing fashionable class in city of 10,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star cast. Here is one of the best pictures I have ever shown. Lots of clean comedy and a fight at the end that lifted them out of their seats. If you want summer business, play it and boost it. Moral tone splendid. Suitable for Sunday, yes. Town of 3,000. Excellent attendance. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

STRANGER'S BANQUET. (8,531 feet). A very good production that pleased the majority. Did not have to pay a fortune for it. Had fair attendance, for hot weather. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. With John Barrymore. A very good picture and every one well pleased who saw it. Did a fine business. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Helene Chadwick and star cast. The picture pleased here a hundred per cent. One of the best pictures heretofore played at this theatre. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Preferred Pictures

DAUGHTERS OF THE RICH. A good picture, full of entertainment and interest from start to finish. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GIRL WHO CAME BACK. We class this as something very, very good. Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Miriam Cooper, Joseph Dowling all doing splendid work. We bought this reasonable. Certainly a fine picture from every side. Many producers would have charged five times the rental that Preferred is charging. Good stuff; you tell 'em! Nobbiest advertising you ever saw brought very good attendance. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

POOR MEN'S WIVES. An absolutely good picture, well liked by audience. Advertised big, and as "The Rich Picture of the year." Nat L. Royster, Alcazar Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

POOR MEN'S WIVES. Excellent picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. Went over very well in very bad weather. Everybody thought the picture was great and we think we could have run it longer. Advertised with extra newspaper space. R. L. Wood, Eastland Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. A classy society picture. Not much new to story but well produced, with great cast. Has Prizma titles. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. One of the real big ones out this year. Don't cost a lot of rent, but has drawing power and pleases all who see it. You can go out for business with this. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. Splendid cast in an excellent picture from every standpoint. Drew well and pleased about every one. Received dozens of good comments from patrons. And the price was certainly reaonable. Good attendance. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SHADOWS. Lon, as usual, makes good. This is splendid entertainment and with some comedy injected at intervals this would have been a real special—it is rather sombre as it is at present. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. Excellent picture with an exceptional cast. Pleased everybody. While story is not new, it is put over in an effective way. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. A fine picture. Pleased a hundred per cent. So far (in this) Preferred has released "the" picture of the year. Estelle Taylor is excellent in her part. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. A pleasing picture. Many favorable comments. Could use more like it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. Star, Thomas Meighan. Corking good picture that pleased 100 per cent. Clean as a hound's tooth and rich in entertainment value. Book it, play it and boost it. Advertising about usual. Patronage high class. Good attendance. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CAPPY RICKS. Star, Thomas Meighan. A good Meighan picture. My patrons getting to like Meighan better every day and I am well pleased with him. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

CITY OF SILENT MEN. Star, Thomas Meighan. You need not be afraid to meet your patrons when they're coming out from seeing this. Far more entertaining than most specials. More favorable comment than any other picture shown in six months. A La Valla, Bethel Community House, Bethel, Connecticut.

CIVILIAN CLOTHES. Star, Thomas Meighan. Will please all. Heard favorable comments on this for a week afterward. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

CONQUEST OF CANAAN. A regular picture. Pleased a Sunday crowd one hundred per cent. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

EASY ROAD. This picture is all right and with Meighan as star it satisfied. F. M. Harvey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

FRONTIER OF THE STARS. They liked this one. Tom Meighan has a role similar to that in "The Miracle Man." R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. A very good picture. Meighan does fine. Book it. Thos. J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

MALE AND FEMALE. Star, Thomas Meighan. A splendid picture and many comments from my patrons. A. Wertenberg, Woodlawn Theatre, Schenectady, New York.

MIRACLE MAN. One of the biggest and best pictures we ever played. Those who saw it said it was good. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. Star, Thomas Meighan. This is the best Meighan has had since "Bachelor Daddy." Patrons all pleased. Meighan always pleases. A picture which should be a good one in any small town. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE? Star, Thomas Meighan. This one pleased them all. The print was in excellent condition. Meighan gains in popularity here with every picture in which he stars. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE? Star, Thomas Meighan. A superb picture in every respect, with a splendid cast. You can't go wrong on this one. If you haven't played it, book it. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

Pictures that show the way to BIGGER BOX OFFICE RETURNS

Here are 5 pictures with the breath of the great outdoors, the greatest variety of scenic grandeur ever shot—and a powerful, picturesque appeal to back up splendid drama. There is the realism of the Canadian West added to the heart-touching stories of Ralph Connor.

"The Man from Glengary"

with Pauline Garon

Stands out from ordinary pictures like a forest giant above the timber line. A Ralph Connor story, set where logs and laws are playthings.

"The Critical Age"

with Pauline Garon

From another immortal Connor story. Winning title, a big name, love, the great outdoors, the age factor.

"The Rapids"

with Mary Astor and Harry T. Morey

This picture will sweep them in. Swift in action, with a strong current of love.

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted"

The Royal Mounted always get their man. And this picture will get any audience anywhere.

"God's Crucible"

Another picture set in the last West. Adapted from "The Foreigner," Ralph Connor's supreme literary achievement. An all star cast.

Educational

HOKUS POKUS. (Christie). A comedy that made them laugh. What more is there to be desired in a comedy? Advertised with posters, pulled the better class, with fair attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SPOOKS. (Educational). An extra good two-reel comedy. It more than pleased. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

GOOD SCOUT. (Educational—Mermaid). This comedy produced good hearty laughs from our audience. If it does that I say it is all to be desired as a comedy. Usual advertising. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

EXTRA! EXTRA! (Educational). This had some good gags in it which got the laughs and must say that Hamilton is making a reputation for good comedies. Usual advertising. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth. Pennsylvania.

'TIS THE BULL. (Educational). Christie Comedy. A good laugh producer, saved our show because feature was very poor. Better class comes. Attendance was poor. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SIMP. (Educational). First time Lloyd Hamilton shown here. Pleased the crowd and had them laughing at his clever antics. Comedies like this always please. Film was good; photography was excellent and it (the film, I mean) was all there. Used ones. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FOR LAND'S SAKE. Educational-Mermaid). This is a real comedy, one of the best seen for some time. If you play it—tell them all about it! They will eat it up. Used photos and ones. Very good attendance. Prices 10-20. City of 15,000. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

FREE AND EASY. (Educational-Lige Conley). A crackerjack, two-reel comedy with oodles of action. Kept the audience in a roar from first to last. Played with "Roof Tree" and kept the program from falling down. Boys, it will make the regulars laugh like they've never laughed before. Used one-sheet only. Fair attendance. Draw general type, town of 1,000. Admission 10-20 to 25-50. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THREE STRIKES. (Educational-Mermaid). Star, Lige Conley. As usual, one of the best two-reel comedies released. You can tell them it is as funny and entertaining as is to be seen. Tie-up with baseball club gave fair attendance of general class in town of 2,500. Admission, 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker. Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

CAPTIVATING CAPTIVE. (Educational-Christie). Fair comic. Very novel eloping scenes. Town of 2,800, draw factory people. Admission. 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre. Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Ernest Shipman

RAPIDS.—Star, Harry Morey. Insertion of pulp industry and views of steel mills makes an interesting move for different pictures. An outdoor picture. Suspense is held until the end thereby holding the interest of the spectator. Not a big picture but nevertheless good amusement. Seemed to please. Good print. Used newspapers, program. Had typical summer attendance. Draw better class in city of 35,000.

CRITICAL AGE. (4,500 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. This is a charming little picture, just the thing for warm weather. Five reels and contains many scenes of delightful beauty. Pauline Garon is becoming exceedingly popular. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

CRITICAL AGE (Hodkinson). Star, Pauline Garon. Another entertaining Connor story. Above the average. Pleased young and old. Photography shaky throughout, although clear. Excellent comedy situations made the audience "roar." Regular newspaper and programs brought average attendance. Draw University students and better class in city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, The Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. Very good. One of the best Northwest pictures we have ever played. Good attendance of mixed class. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. A very good picture. Had lots of favorable comments on it. Buy it; you won't go wrong. Fair attendance of high class patronage. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. Very good of its type. Scenic views make it worth while. A trifle melodramatic, but pleased. Fair, high class attendance. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. People like this Northwestern Mounted Police story. Well made and played. Good attendance, mixed class. Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. Personally I think this one of the best pictures I have run to date. This type of picture is almost a sure-fire for any exhibitor. Advertising, I put a little extra behind this and results were satisfactory. Good neighborhood attendance. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. An excellent picture. Pleased all who saw it. Extra fine scenery. Rural class. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. Very good picture; not a knockout, but good entertainment. Fair attendance of all classes. W. L. Landers; Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

First National

PENROD AND SAM. (Star cast. All the fun in a lifetime in one fleeting hour of glee, will be seen in "Penrod and Sam." This picture is one of Ben Alexander's best. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Most pleasing picture we ever ran. Extended run to increasing business. If we had known just how popular it was going to be, we would have started an advertising campaign sooner and advanced prices. Everyone came out of the house either smiling or laughing out loud. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. A true to life picture of small town domestic squabbles. It's hard to tell which one does the best acting. They are such natural kids. Leave your grouch at home when you go to see this one or you will lose it. Everyone liked it. Said they laughed, shed a few tears, and had a good time. Had a fair crowd. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Great picture. A roar from start to finish. Drew well in spite of heat. Advertising slants, freckled face contest. Had good attendance. Draw wealthy and medium class in city of 75,000. Admission 28-40-55. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre, Pasadena, California.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. The most popular audience picture we ever ran. Pleased one hundred per cent. Many came back second time. Usual newspaper brought good attendance. Draw best class. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. Here's a real picture with a kick in every foot of it. I am not kidding you when I say it is one of the very best pictures produced this year by anybody. Pleased as near all of them as it is possible for a picture to do. It is a gem among pictures; the best of the best. Thanks. Moral tone best in the world; suitable for Sunday (or any day). Had big (pleased) attendance, drawing fashionable class in city of 10,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pellard Theatre (800 seats). Guthrie, Oklahoma.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent entertainment. Pleased all. Paid a little high, but made one of best net profit weeks. Had good attendance. Draw best class in city of 53,000. Admission 10, 15, 30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, (569 seats), Macon, Georgia.

CIRCUS DAY. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent picture. Very entertaining, and Jackie's latest and best picture. Large patronage, all pleased. See it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CIRCUS DAYS (First National). Did not draw the adults as expected but more than pleased those who came. Made money at that; second night better than first. It's a very good picture and better than "Oliver Twist." J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

PLAY SAFE

You can play safe with your business if you will save your patrons from being bored by over-padded features. You must give your patrons ENTERTAINMENT or you are lost. Give them DIVERSIFIED ENTERTAINMENT—with plenty of SHORT SUBJECTS.

Educational Pictures

will help you build up your ENTERTAINMENT, as is proved by these reports from exhibitors in one issue of Exhibitors Herald (November 17th issue).

Let us write your "insurance policy" and let this trade-mark guard you against loss.

E. W. Hammons

The Kick Out (Educational), with Lige Conley.—Two reels. Boys, grab this and talk about it as much as you want, but be sure the premium on your tornado insurance is paid up before you let the youngsters get their eyes on the screen. Except the "polite" comedies are the most desirable, this one should be a bear, and I believe that some of the dignity of the better class might stray away for a while, at that.—Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. theatre, Grand Gorge, N. Y.—Small town patronage.

Rapid Fire (Educational).—Two reels. Here's a comedy that will get the laughs. This comedy saved the show, as we happened to have a bum feature. We find the majority of Educational comedies good.—Ben. L. Morris, Temple theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.—General patronage

High Power and Choose Your Weapons (Educational).—Two reels. "Spice of program" is right. All are good, but some are best. High Power is better than Choose Your Weapons. These are some of the best two reelers we get.—V. E. Sager, Southern theatre, Akron, Ohio.—General patronage.

Moving (Educational), a Cameo comedy.—This comedy is better than lots of the two reelers. In fact, they are all good. I have not had a bad one this year. We look forward to a Cameo date for we know we have a good short subject that will brace any weak feature. One reel.—Hugh C. Martin, American theatre, Columbus, Ga.—General patronage.

Navy Blues (Educational), a Christie comedy, with Dorothy Devore.—A snappy comedy with a little patriotic interest. Much favorable comment. Two reels.—John W. Hawkins, Capitol theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—General patronage.

That Son of a Sheik (Educational).—a Christie comedy.—A knockout and one that's a pretty good burlesque on The Sheik. Two reels.—C. W. Langacher, New Glarus theatre, New Glarus, Wis.—General patronage.

No Luck (Educational), with Lloyd Hamilton.—Has plenty of action and will get the laughs. I consider this one of Hamilton's best. Two reels.—Hobart Wickens, Dreamland theatre, Kiowa, Kans.—General patronage.

Back Fire (Educational) with Lige Conley.—One of the best. If you have this one booked, don't be afraid to get behind it. If they don't laugh at this one there is something wrong with them. Two reels.—Walter H. Musson, Queen's theatre, Hespeler, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Close Harmony (Educational).—This is the first of the "Sing 'Em Again" series, a novelty reel introducing three old songs in which the audience is supposed to join. Our people were slow taking hold, but the reel went over big and drew applause at the finish. It is seldom that a feature is applauded here and when they applaud a single reeler it must be good. One reel.—John W. Hawkins, Capitol theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—General patronage.

Ocean Swells (Educational), a Christie comedy.—This is a good comedy. The photography is splendid. It is a high class comedy that will please the kids as well as the adults. More of this class of comedy would be welcome. Most Christies are good. Two reels.—Ralph R. Gribble, Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—General patronage.

Mile a Minute Mary (Educational).—Another good Educational short subject. —Two reels.—C. W. Langacher, New Glarus, Wis.—General patronage.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Consolidated Co., Indiana, Goes Into Receiver's Hands

About the most startling bit of news in Indiana theatre circles this week was the announcement of the appointment of a receiver for the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, which owns and operates a number of picture theatres in some of the larger cities of the state. Fred A. Sims, of Indianapolis, formerly chairman of the State Tax Board, was named receiver for the company on a petition filed by the Hatfield Electric Company, which alleged the company is indebted to it in the sum of $1,000.

R. L. Martin, president of the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, said the company has ample assets to clear up the outstanding indebtedness, said to amount to about $60,000, but lacked enough money to meet its obligations at this time. He announced at the time the suit was filed that none of the theatres would cease operation.

The corporation owns and operates the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, the Murray and Murrette theatres in Richmond, the Capitol in Clinton, the Victory and Strand and the Sonntag hotel in Evansville, the Pantheon in Vincennes, the Orpheum in Fort Wayne, and the Strand in Kokomo. It also holds a ninety-nine year lease on the Park Theatre property in Indianapolis, and owns the Consolidated building in Indianapolis, a business site in Fort Wayne and a tract of land in Anderson.

Another suit asking a receiver for the corporation was filed in the Allen county superior court at Fort Wayne by Mrs. Carolina C. Schmidt, who claimed the company had failed to make payments for the last three months on property it had leased from her. It is understood that since the filing of the receivership suit in Indianapolis, Mrs. Schmidt will only ask for a receiver to take charge of the Fort Wayne property.

Following the filing of the Indianapolis suit the Strand Theatre in Evansville was closed by Frank Holland, manager, on order of Mr. Martin, president of the corporation. The theatre had been running a combined program of pictures and vaudeville. The receivership proceedings has not affected the operation of the Sonntag hotel or Victory Theatre in Evansville.

F. H. Gruneberg, Sr., of Chicago, was president of the company until a few weeks ago, when he suffered a nervous breakdown. On the advice of his physicians he retired from the company and was ordered to another climate for his health. He was succeeded by Mr. Martin, who until that time was secretary-treasurer of the company. A. P. Kester, of Sheridan, succeeded Martin as secretary-treasurer.

The Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, at the time it was organized, took over the Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, which operated the Liberty in Terre Haute and the Orpheum in Fort Wayne. Since then other theatres were acquired and in the last few years the corporation has made some large real estate purchases, which, it is understood, required considerable ready cash to complete.

Fred Le Comte, manager of the Liberty at Terre Haute, is acting as general manager of all the theatres in the Consolidated chain, and temporarily at least all bookings of films will be made through him. It is planned to continue the operation of the theatres on an economic and business basis so that the outstanding indebtedness may soon be cleared up.

Offices in Terre Haute and Evansville, from which stock in the company was sold, were closed two weeks ago.

Photoplays and other moving pictures are to be produced in Indianapolis soon, it was announced this week following the filing of incorporation papers by the Cavalier Motion Picture Company, a newly organized Indianapolis concern. The company is capitalized at $1,000,000. The incorporators are Roscoe Carpenter, Lyons; William Eickenberry, Kokomo; Frank J. Hows, Indianapolis; Bert Hendren, Universal, and James T. Jeffers, Lyons.

According to C. C. Hendren, of the Hoosier Distributing Company, which will sell the securities of the motion picture concern, the company is to acquire ground somewhere in Marion county for the location of a studio. The Cavalier Motion Picture Company is a reorganization of a company by the same name now producing pictures in a studio in Jersey City. It was originally organized for the production of Bible pictures, but has branched out into the production of plays, news reels and educational films.

Ray Frisz, who resigned recently as assistant manager of the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, has been transferred to the Indianapolis office of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Company, which owns and operates the Liberty.

Henry A. Wallis, assistant treasurer of the Hippodrome Theatre at Terre Haute, is suffering from a badly sprained knee. Despite the injury he has been continuing his duties at the theatre.

Ben Van Borssum, proprietor of the Crescent, Majestic and Savoy theatres in Terre Haute, has added several new employes to his organization.

The Palace Theatre at South Bend celebrated its first anniversary last week. An enviable record of attendance has been established in the theatre's first year. It has operated continuously every day in the week since its opening.

The Ohio Theatre in Indianapolis has been redecorated and repainted. New Turkish carpets have been laid on the mezzanine floor and in the women's restroom. Harry Koch is manager.

The American Theatre in Terre Haute was opened last week under the management of Joseph Oten. It recently was extensively remodeled and redecorated.

New curtains and scenery will be installed soon in the Grand Theatre at Washington, Ind., according to an announcement this week by Guy Hammitt, manager.

Freuler Leases Milwaukee's Butterfly to La Crosse Man

A. J. Cooper, president and general manager of the La Crosse Amusement Co., of La Crosse, Wis., has taken over the Butterfly Theatre, downtown Milwaukee house, under a long term lease. The lease was obtained from John R. Freuler, owner of the building, who has operated the showhouse for several years.

With the arrival of Mr. Cooper and with the announcement that he would devote considerable time to his latest acquisition, Stewart Walker has stepped out as manager, a position which he held for more than a year for the Freuler interests. Just what his plans are has not been revealed.

The Butterfly under the new management will immediately switch from a policy of second run to first run pictures and as a result will likewise undergo an advance in admission price, Mr. Cooper has announced. The theatre will be renovated and it is likely that an orchestra will be hired. The staff will remain intact, with Henry Taylor as house manager.

The house contains 1,250 seats, including a balcony, and until several years ago was one of the leading houses in the city, it reaching its highest point under the management of Leo A. Landau, now director of the Alhambra and Garden theatres.

The La Crosse Amusement Co., besides the Butterfly, now controls the Casino and Strand theatres in La Crosse, Wis.

L. P. Charles of Chetek, Wis., has been elected president of the newly organized Northern Wisconsin Theatre Owners' Association, which includes in its membership twenty-two exhibitors. Other officers are: C. H. Edwards, Spooner, vice president, and Mrs. M. E. Zimmerman, Cumberland, secretary and treasurer. The annual meeting of the association will be held in May.

Milwaukee this week is being treated to the simultaneous presentation of two widely different pictures based on the same kind of story. While Eddie Weisfeldt is drawing crowds to Saxe's Strand with Pola Negri's "Spanish Dancer" as the attraction, Leo A. Landau, one block away on the same street, is running to capacity at the Alhambra with Mary Pickford in "Rosita." Meanwhile, because of the unusual situation, both pictures are drawing a special amount of publicity in the newspapers, with critics giving them joint reviews.

With the opening of "Little Old New York" scheduled for Nov. 23, Roy C. MacMullen, manager of the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, is laying elaborate plans for the big event. Working hand in hand with the Hearst publication in the city, Mr. MacMullen has arranged for a society night on Nov. 23, special invitations being extended to the best families in Milwaukee who are expected to attend in their full dress. For Saturday, Nov. 24, Mr. MacMullen has outlined plans for a children's party in the morning.

Local Lafs, patterned after the famous Fun From the Press, but confined to Milwaukee wit, is making a big hit with Milwaukee theatre patrons. Starting at the Strand and Miller theatres, two Saxe houses, several weeks ago, the Lafs now are also being shown at approximately a dozen theatres in the city, among them being the New Milwaukee, the Parkway, Regent, Colonial, Juneau and Tivoli.

Lafs are submitted through a leading Milwaukee newspaper which awards cash prizes to the winners in addition to putting the product of their funny bones on the screen.

The Goetz Bros., who control houses in Janesville and Beloit, Wis., have opened the Crystal Theatre at Watertown, Wis., which has been closed for some time.

Kansas

The Kansas City Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, at a recent meeting, unanimously endorsed Motion Picture Day, which is being sponsored by the M. P. T. O. of America. Other matters of interest taken up at the meeting of the association were: A plan of financing the organization through an advertising slide, and the music tax question. It was merely stated that S. A. Handy, who is legal counsel for the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, has been retained by the Kansas City Exhibitors' Association.

Charles H. Barron, who recently purchased full interest in the Kansas Theatre at Wichita, Kas., has purchased the Elite and Cozy theatres from John Callahan at Pratt, Kas. Mr. Barron announces his intention of closing the Cozy and concentrating on the Elite, which will be known as the Kansas.

T. C. Block is building a new theatre at Odessa, Mo., and will be finished about the first of the year. The house will be known as the Dixie.

Jay Means and F. A. Gibbons, owners of the Murray Theatre and Prospect Theatre, Kansas City, won their fight for an injunction against the picketing of their theatres by the Operators' Union and the local Musicians' Union. The decision was rendered in the circuit court of Jackson county, and stated that the owner of the theatre is also the owner of the sidewalk space in front and adjacent to the theatre, for the purpose of ingress and egress for himself and employes and his patrons, and for the use of pedestrians. The method of picketing was pointed out to be a violation of the rights of the theatre owner.

W. Dahler of the Cozy Theatre, Grove, Kas., is the proud possessor of a new son.

A. E. Lamkin of the Star Theatre at Stockton, Kas., severely injured his left hand recently. He is also the owner of the town newspaper and his hand was caught between two wheels on the press.

N. W. Huston is building a new theatre at Columbus, Kas. The house will seat 350 and will be opened about March. Mr. Huston will continue operating the Liberty Theatre also.

Out-of-town visitors seen this past week have been: M. W. Hubbell, Hubbell Theatre, Trenton, Mo.; Gus Kubach of Abilene, Kas.; Lloyd Ware of the Varsity Theatre, Lawrence, Kas., and L. D. Metcalf of the Grand Theatre at Ash Grove, Mo.

Cincinnati

For the third time within a year the Hippodrome Theatre, Newport, Ky., just across the river, was visited by burglars, who robbed the safe of $1,000, after knocking off the combination. The money stolen represented the day's receipts of the Hippodrome and Temple theatres, both of which are owned and operated by I. Frankel, of Cincinnati.

William James of Columbus, who recently took over the State and Vernon theatres to operate them in connection with the James, Broadway and Grand, has promoted Joe Wilson from assistant manager of the James to manager of the State. Harry Doyle, treasurer of the Broadway, will pilot the Vernon henceforth. Harry Egar, exploitation man, has taken Wilson's place as assistant to J. Real Neth, manager of the James, while Earl Pepper becomes treasurer of the Broadway. Manager James reports that $50,000 will be spent in improvements on the State Theatre, which was never completed in its entirety by the former owners, the Deusenburys. A new $35,000 pipe organ will be installed at the Grand.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is being shown at the Cox Theatre for a five weeks' run, to be followed by a legitimate attraction. "The White Sister" is also booked for a showing in the early future.

Many Chicago Orphans Await Levine's Thanksgiving Treat

Manager Paul Levine of the Adams Theatre, near State and Adams, is arranging his annual Thnksgiving treat for several hundred orphans and this year will show them Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days." A large number of folks will lend their automobiles to take the little ones to and from the orphan homes, and with plenty of popcorn and peanuts the orphans are in for "some" holiday.

The Vitagraph Theatre of the Lubliner & Trinz circuit on Lincoln avenue has been redecorated and fixed up with a new electric sign that can be seen for several blocks.

Manager Guy V. Martin of the Illini Theatre at Bloomington, Ill., has booked "The Covered Wagon" for three nights and two matinees the last of this month, and will get $1.50 for his main floor and down to 50 cents for gallery seats.

Plans for the new Schoenstadt house to go up at Archer and Robey avenue will soon be ready for inspection and the boys will put $500,000 into the new structure.

Manager George Madison of the Kozy Theatre on Clark street, one of the pioneer houses of the Loop district, is using a cane these days, as he slipped on a wet sidewalk a few weeks ago and twisted his ankle badly. It takes more than a twisted ankle to keep George away from business.

B. J. Boyle has added the new Lyric Theatre at Walcott to his chain of houses and will improve the program.

Manager Jack Hoeffler of the Orpheum Theatre invited the orphans from the various homes at Quincy to be his guests at the showing of Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days."

Ned Holmes, well known here for his management of "The Four Horsemen's" record-breaking run at the La Salle Theatre, is here again as manager of "The White Sister" at the Great Northern Theatre, which opened this week to capacity business. C. S. Primrose is assistant manager and Joseph Giaranomni has charge of the orchestra of fourteen pieces with the production. A large chorus of singers is also used during the church scenes of the feature and the picture is booked here for an extended run.

The Bryn Mawr Theatre at Bryn Mawr avenue and the Elevated is celebrating its second anniversary. Manager Lou Weil not only provided a fine program for his patrons but bought himself a new automobile for the occasion and fixed the house up for the big week.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy are pushing work on the remodeling of the Caldwell Theatre at St. Joseph and the house is expected to be ready for reopening during the next few weeks. The improvements will cost $50,000. Work will also start soon on the new house to be erected by this firm at 145th and Center street that will cost $125,000. This firm has a large building program for the coming year and is optimistic over the business outlook in the picture field.

The report that a new theatre is projected for the new Palmer House block that is going to be erected at State and Adams street to take the place of the old Palmer House, now on that site, has been denied by the management of the hotel. The high cost of land in this part of the city would make the cost of any theatre prohibitive.

Charles A. Bengart has sold the Illinois Theatre at Champaign, Ill., to the Zenith Company, who will improve the house.

Several of the boys are interested in the new National Medical Film Company, organized last week at 736 South Wabash avenue with a capital stock of 150 shares of no par value. The principals are G. E. Moring, Morey Cohen and Harry A. Kyler.

B. Leo Steif, architect, reports he is not drawing plans for a movie theatre at 64th street and Cottage Grove avenue, as was reported.

Fred Hoffman has given up his plans to erect a movie house on Monterey avenue, owing to the high cost of construction.

H. T. Reynolds is having plans drawn for a new movie theatre he proposes to build at 345 Michigan avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Spencer and Miller plan to open their new movie theatre at Highland Park, Ill., next week, if the marquee and other equipment are installed in time.

Earl Williams has opened the Playhouse at Knoxville, Ill., and is featuring good musical programs with his pictures.

Manager Harry Greenman of the New Monroe Theatre is turning out a lively house organ under the name of The Loop Photoplay News. The management is laying plans for a new organ to be installed soon. Jack Capone is on the job as assistant manager. George Smith has been made display manager for the house and the lobby is now a most attractive spot.

McVickers Theatre management put over Comedy Week in a big way and Buster Keaton in "The Three Ages" brought plenty of laughs for the bill. Will Rogers in "Passin' Thru'" helped the funny cause along and the house had good business for the seven days.

The big feature of the Chicago Theatre bill last week was the tie-up of the International News with the Armistice Day program. The crowds gave the old war scenes plenty of applause.

One of the most deplorable accidents in recent years was the death of John Prizeske of the Milda Theatre at 3138 South Halsted street. He was changing the sign for the next day's show when through some unknown reason he grasped a live wire and was instantly electrocuted. His many friends in the trade extend sympathy to his family.

"If Winter Comes" is now playing the neighborhood houses and Manager Sam Atkinson of the Calo Theatre reports a fine business on the three-day booking at his house.

S. N. Graham has bought the Rex Theatre at LaGrange from Mrs. L. V. Cottrell and will improve the house.

Kentucky

Rumors to the effect that J. G. Brown, owner of the $7,000,000 new Brown Hotel, Louisville, Ky., would rebuild the unroofed Ha-Wi-An Gardens building with a theatre building, or fifteen story office building, were set at rest today when Brown announced that the building would be repaired and continued as heretofore for a period of two and one-half years at least.

It was reported from Newport, Ky., on Nov. 12, that safe blowers had wrecked a safe at the Hippodrome Theatre, early on that morning, and escaped with $1,000 in cash.

Harry Switow, son of M. Switow, head of the Switow Amusement Co., and himself manager of the Kentucky Theatre, one of the Switow chain, became father of a daughter on Nov. 5.

Fine open weather in Louisville is making for excellent attendance at the local theatres, and things are now rolling along in fine shape as a whole. Exhibitors are finding very little excuse for complaint.

J. W. Sayre Defends Screen in Seattle's Latest Controversy

Attacks made on picture shows and city playgrounds by Mrs. Elizabeth Harris, dance hall matron supervisor, in an address before the Commonwealth Club last week, brought swift announcement from J. W. Sayre of the Greater Theatres Company: "I defy Mrs. Harris to point out one picture show that has been shown in this town in recent years that had such an effect on the minds of the young folks as she intimated in her speech. "There is no basis for her attack on either the movie or the playground. There is no comparison between these two places. I have no objection to make to the dance halls, but I certainly do resent the reflection that has been cast on the shows and the playgrounds."

Frank A. Graham of the Grand Theatre, Centralia, Wash., reports that he not only broke every house record with Vitagraph's "Pioneer Trails" but also broke all records for any theatre in the town, in the face of very strong opposition.

The Proctor Street Blue Mouse held its formal opening Tuesday evening, November 13, in Tacoma, and was unhesitatingly pronounced one of the most beautiful suburban houses in the entire Pacific Northwest. Mayor Fawsett of Tacoma made the opening address before a crowd that filled the house. The opening attraction was "The Green Goddess." The house is under the direction of John Hamriek. A speed record was established by B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, who had the contract for complete furnishings, equipment, lighting and interior work, completing the installations in eight days.

Whittington and Smith have taken over the Liberty and Grand theatres in Bend, Oregon, formerly owned by J. B. Sparks. Mr. Sparks also owns houses in Redmond and Prineville. He will be in Seattle early next week.

The Heilig Theatre, C. W. McKee, resident manager, has installed a new organ with the announcement of its new feature photoplay policy.

William Morelock, who operates the Arcade Theatre in Cottage Grove, Oregon, will build a new 800-seat Arcade Theater costing around $75,000. The new house will be ready about January 15. He will close the old house upon completion of the new.

Mr. Miller, owner of the California Theatre in Los Angeles, was a visitor in Seattle this week.

W. H. Storey, formerly with the D. & R. Theatres Co. in Centralia, and more recently cashier with the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Company in Seattle, returns to the exhibition end of the game this week as manager of the Arcade and Liberty theatres at Hoquiam. Dolan and Ripley have bought these houses from Newman and Connell. J. R. Robbins, a newcomer in the film business, replaces Mr. Storey in Seattle.

Mrs. Sadie Klinger has sold her Klinger Theatre in Connell, Wash., to Mr. and Mrs. Roy Kemp.

Seattle is to have another new suburban house. Report states that a $15,000 house will be erected at 2352 Beacon avenue for the Prefontaine Theatre Co. It will be a frame building.

Manager Fey of the Madison Theatre was host last week to members of the Yale Club at a special preview of "Columbus," distributed by Pathe Exchange. The audience of literary, professional and educational members prominent in the city appreciated the authority of the version.

Warfield Theatre Has Four World Premieres in a Row

What is believed to be a record in world premieres has been established at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, with four first showings in four consecutive weeks. If any house has a better record than this, Manager Charles M. Pincus would like to hear about it. The run started with Buster Keaton's "Hospitality" and was followed by Constance Talmadge in "Dangerous Maid," Louis B. Mayer's "Pleasure Mad" and "Long Live the King," with Jackie Coogan.

The premiere of "Pleasure Mad" was made quite an event, owing to the keen local interest in the production. It is from the book, "The Valley of Content," by Blanche Upright, San Francisco novelist, and Mrs. Upright attended the opening, as did also Louis B. Mayer, the producer, and several members of the cast, including Norma Shearer, Huntley Gordon, William Collier, Jr., Mary Alden and Winifred Bryson.

An Oakland exhibitor in connection with the showing of "The Covered Wagon" in that city advised patrons over the telephone not to spend $1 or $1.50 to see this production at the Lurie Theatre, where it was shown for two weeks, but to wait a month and see it in his house for 25 cents. This advice was given despite the fact that bookings have been so arranged that this production will not be shown again in Oakland during the season of 1923-24. The matter was brought to the attention of the Better Business Bureau of the Oakland Advertising Club, but at the request of the management of the Lurie Theatre no definite action was taken against the misleading offender.

Harry Arthur, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Dave Bershon, general booker, were recent visitors at San Francisco to confer with A. M. Bowles, manager of the Northern California division. An announcement will be made soon of the plans to erect a theatre at Fresno, Cal., which will be the largest and finest picture house in the San Joaquin Valley.

B. Getz, Inc., is building a business unit of eighteen stores and a theatre at West Portal avenue and Vicente street, San Francisco, to serve St. Francis Wood and Westwood Park, declared to be the finest residential park in the world. The theatre will be approached by a court with fountains and gardens.

The Granada Theatre, San Francisco, is celebrating the second anniversary of its opening with a special program. The main film feature is "The Virginian" and there are special concert numbers and other attractions. The Granada Theatre is built after the architecture of old Spain and is one of the most beautiful picture houses in the world.

Nasser Brothers, Robert McNeil and their associates in the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, San Francisco, have purchased the Strand and Rialto Theatres in the suburb of Alameda from Louis Kaliski at a price said to be close to $250,000. The deal was consummated through the offices of J. R. Saul and increases the holdings of this combination to thirty-five houses. Coincident with the transfer of interests Maurice F. Lowery, formerly with the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, was named manager of the Strand Theatre, Alameda.

J. J. Wood, popular theatre owner of Redding, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row. He is known as Mayor of the Sacramento River and directs aquatic sports in the summer season. Just now the chief sport there is the garnering of salmon steaks, fifty-pound salmon being taken frequently.

Tom O'Day, of Vallejo, Cal., has acquired the Liberty Theatre at Marysville, Cal., from Mrs. F. E. Smith, who has conducted this house for years.

Ed Byard of Byard & Byard, who operate a circuit of theatres out of Ferndale and Arcata, Cal., was a recent business visitor at San Francisco. Formerly films were routed from house to house over the circuit, but bookings now are being made separately for each theatre with the idea of securing films of a certain type for certain days of the week.

The Lyric Theatre at Stockton, Cal., has been taken over by Leichter & Abrams, who also operate the Spot Theatre in that city. Frank Parker, former owner of the Lyric, has other theatres at Modesto and Concord.

The Orpheum Circuit, which owns property at Broadway and Twentieth street, Oakland, Cal., is preparing to erect a theatre seating 2,400, plans for which have already been prepared.

A huge organ has been installed in the new Alexandria Theatre to be opened shortly at Nineteenth and Geary streets, San Francisco.

The West Coast Theatres of Northern California, Inc., which operates the T. & D. Theatre at Richmond, Cal., is planning to refurnish and reopen the old T. & D. Theatre, which has been closed ever since the opening of the new and larger house.

The plan of the management of the New Fillmore and New Mission theatres, San Francisco, to alternate the service of the orchestras between the two houses, is being frowned upon by the organized musicians.

A Japanese picture concern, the Star Film Distributing Corp., has been incorporated at Sacramento, Cal., with a capital stock of $250,000. The directors are Sadakichi Oku, San Francisco; Takaski Matsue, Visalia, and Kaichi Hirata, Sacramento.

Texas

Joe Singer and Lou G. Bissinger have taken over the management of the Queen Theatre, Dallas. Mr. Singer also is interested in the Fox Theatre and Mr. Bissinger for a number of years has been manager of the Washington Theatre.

Paul Scott of Mineral Wells has purchased the Haskell Avenue Theatre, Dallas.

Thomas Nickelson has been appointed manager of the Crescent Theatre at Austin, succeeding J. H. Thompson, resigned.

The Albany Theatre has been opened at Albany, Texas, with Fox, Paramount and First National pictures as the policy.

G. H. Boynton, Jr., has reopened his Royal Theatre at Hamilton, Texas, with an increased seating capacity and handsome interior decorations.

The Lura Theatre at Augusta, Ark., is being improved and redecorated.

Givens Bird has been appointed manager of the Rialto Theatre at San Antonio, Texas.

The New Mission Theatre has opened at El Dorado, Ark.

Messrs. Callahan and Ray have reopened their Best Theatre at Palestine, Texas.

Competing Albany Programs Little Hurt by Big Special

The success which marked a week's run of "The Covered Wagon" at the Capitol Theatre, Albany, N. Y., at admission prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50, served to answer the query which has been going the rounds of exhibitors and film exchanges in that territory ever since the first announcement was made of the admission prices which would be charged. The picture, which came as the first to be shown at the new Shubert house here, which has been given over to the legitimate up to the present time, opened Monday night with every seat filled with the exception of a few of the less desirable in the front rows. The picture drew extremely well throughout the entire week, with the matinees also making a creditable showing.

That $1.50 pictures will do business in a city of 115,000, providing that they are of the right sort, was demonstrated by the box office receipts. Other theatres in the city, with prices ranging from 28 to 50 cents, reported that they had felt no inroads because of the higher priced feature at the other house.

Paper mills in northern New York, and especially in the vicinity of Fort Edward and Corinth, have been forced to close down through low water conditions. As a result, Lew Fisher, of Fort Edward, owner of theatres in that village as well as Ticonderoga and Port Henry, is suffering from lessened patronage. The low water has thrown hundreds of the employes in the paper mills out of work for the time being.

An 1843 dollar, bright and shiny, and which had probably served someone as a pocket piece, was taken in at the Mark Strand in Albany the other night, and is now the property of Herman Vineburg, house manager.

J. M. Moran, who runs a house in Coxsackie, is branching out and has just acquired a theatre in the neighboring village of New Baltimore.

Myer Schine, head of the well known circuit bearing his name, with headquarters in Gloversville, has booked "The Chronicles of America" for his entire circuit.

"Little Old New York" stood up extremely well the past week, its second at the Leland, in Albany. The picture broke all house records during the first six days and drew above the normal amount of business during the second week.

The 1920 census enumeration credits Hoosick Falls with a population of 4,896. This population is big enough, according to Charles McCarthy, veteran showman of that village, to warrant his latest bookings, including "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York." Mr. McCarthy is a firm advocate of showing big pictures whenever obtainable, and claims that the returns at his box office back up his contention.

The drawing power of such a picture as "The Call of the Wild" when combined with vaudeville, was aptly shown at Proctor's Grand, in Albany last week, when fully 95 per cent. of the audience remained in their seats at the close of the vaudeville program. Having demonstrated their strength, better pictures are being booked in connection with vaudeville programs in this part of the state.

Sol Manheimer, manager of the Avon Theatre in Watertown, played the part of host last week to Frank O'Brien and Lou Golder, of New York City, on a duck hunting expedition along the St. Lawrence river.

L. J. Cartjey, manager of the Strand Theatre in Carthage, did a land office business the past week with a Fashion Show in which New York models were featured.

Colby Shaw, former director of the Mark Strand orchestra in Albany, has gone to the west coast, according to postals which have reached the Capital City during the last few days.

The Hippodrome Theatre in Carthage, N. Y., which has been dark for the past few months, reopened the past week. The house has a capacity of 700 persons and will be open on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of each week.

Louis Buettner, who owns several houses in this part of the state and who hails from Cohoes, shot a deer the past week. Moreover, it was the first animal bagged by anyone in Mr. Buettner's party.

"Pioneer Trails" broke the house record at the Albany Theatre in Schenectady last week. Manager Shirley did a great deal in the way of exploitation, including a parade of real Indians.

The many exhibitor friends in northern New York who know Vic Bendell, now with Hodkinson, will be sorry to learn of Mrs. Bendell's serious illness, following an operation of last Monday.

Morris Silverman, owner of two houses in Schenectady, filled in on the board of arbitration of the Albany Film Board of Trade, last Monday, in the absence of the regular appointee.

"Lightning" Bissell will be back among the exhibitors of northern New York, looking after Goldwyn's interests. While calling on the exhibitors in Malone some weeks ago, Mr. Bissell was stricken with appendicitis and almost immediately operated upon. Later on, pneumonia set in.

According to all reports, James Papayanakos is not averse to acquiring a theatre in northern New York. His brother, Harry, has one in Gouveneur, and another brother, Alex, owns one in Canton. The three brothers were the veterans in the picture theatre business in northern New York and cleaned up big before retiring from Watertown, only to later on again engage in the business.

"The Green Goddess" did a most satisfactory business the past week at the Lincoln in Troy. Waiting lines were before the theatre each night.

William Shirley, manager of the Farash Theatre Corporation of Schenectady, did a good stroke of business on Armistice Day when he dug up a reel which he himself had taken five years ago and which featured the Schenectady boys returning home.

In connection with Union College Night at the State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., season passes to the State, the Albany and the Strand theatres were auctioned off, the proceeds going to the Union College endowment fund. The same fund also realized handsomely from hundreds of tickets to the State Theatre, which had been sold by the students themselves.

Following another two weeks of splits, the Mark Strand in Albany will play straight weeks during a good part of the winter, showing such pictures in the near future as "Ashes of Vengeance," "Circus Days," Ponjola" and "A Woman of Paris." The management plans to increase the amount of its display advertising.

Crowds at the Leland Theatre in Albany became so great last Thursday night in connection with the second week of "Little Old New York" that Manager Oscar Perrin ordered no more tickets sold at 8:30 o'clock. The companion theatre, also handled by Mr. Perrin, did a land office business last week with "The French Doll."

R. V. Erk, owner of two houses in Ilion and the Barcli in Schenectady, buys pictures like a flash, but nine times out of ten his judgment from a box office standpoint can't be beat. On Wednesday Mr. Erk bought a total of 61 pictures.

If you happen to drop in at the State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., remember to take a look at a peculiar lamp which adorns the lobby. It is imported and is said to have cost the purchaser about $1,500. Mr. Shirley had it at his Strand Theatre for some time before bringing it to the larger house.

Buffalo

Dipson & Osborn announce the opening of their new Family Theatre in Batavia, N. Y., on Thanksgiving Day. Dusty Rhodes has been engaged to preside at the console of the $16,000 pipe organ. The house has been practically rebuilt with beautiful interior decorations, electric fixtures and every modern equipment. Luxurious furniture has been placed in the rest rooms and beautiful carpets and hangings enhance the attractive appearance of the interior. Gold and glass frames adorn the lobby. The mural work has been done by Chicago artists.

James Cardina has issued invitations for the opening of his new Varsity Theatre on Bailey avenue, Buffalo, on the evening of November 28. "Pioneer Trails" will be the feature. Mr. Cardina also operates the Kensington Theatre, Buffalo, and the Glen Theatre, Williamsville. The new Varsity will be a fireproof, modernly equipped house and will serve one of the most rapidly growing sections of the Queen City of the Lakes.

Exhibitors and exchange men will be glad to know that Charlie Babcock of the Babcock Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., is recovering from an operation in the Buffalo General Hospital.

Ten thousand cards are being mailed each week to exhibitors from the Buffalo exchanges as part of the campaign to put over the repeal of the admission tax. These cards are being sent out by the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., and the first one sets forth that "Co-operation is the First Important Step to Accomplish the Repeal of the Admission Tax." A new card will be sent out each week, according to J. H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the state organization, who urges other states to follow a similar policy.

Mrs. Jessie Carlson, owner of the Carlson block in Westfield, N. Y., has awarded to Bailey & Company of Brocton a contract for the rebuilding of the Grand Theatre, recently destroyed by fire. When the new house is completed on April 1, 1924, it will be leased and operated by the Zicofe Corporation of Buffalo, composed of Fred M. Zimmerman, M. Cohen and George Ferguson.

Al Sherry is managing the New Academy Theatre on Main street at Seneca, which has been reopened with tabloid musical comedies and pictures.

In order to stop spooning in picture houses, exhibitors of London, Ont., have instructed their operators to throw the spotlight on offending couples.

Simon Wertheimer has made application to the city council for permission to build a picture theatre in the rear of his new business block on Hertel avenue, between Saranac and North Park, just one block from Shea's North Park Theatre.

Rochester, N. Y.

Manager J. H. Finn is finding his Sunday programs at the Temple meeting with popular favor. "The Fog," the film feature last Sunday, attracted a capacity audience.

Manager William Fait, Jr., has installed a new bronze ticket office at the end of the Eastman lobby. All concert tickets are sold at this office as well as loge and mezzanine seats for the picture presentations.

Attractions on Rochester screens the past week included: Eastman, "The Bad Man"; Regent, "The Marriage Maker"; Piccadilly, "Mothers-in-Law"; Victoria, "Temptation."

Philadelphia's "Movie Week" Exceeding All Expectations

Every expectation of even the most zealous of the advocates of National Motion Picture Week seems realized in Philadelphia. Reports from sectional managers were that promises were being realized and that the earlier expectations of but a 60 per cent. participation by the picture houses had been considerably exceeded. Among the string theatres co-operating were the Wimer and Vincent, Carr and Schad, Chamberlain Amusement Company, Hunts Theatres, Inc., Comerford Amusement Enterprises, Stiefel interests, Columbus Stamper, Rappaport chain, Becker Brothers, Smith interests of Tacony, Dr. Samuel Morris, Michael J. Lessey, Green and Altman, John Hays, Dr. A. Stumphig and the string of theatres in Atlantic City under the management of Eddie O'Keefe.

In commemoration of the Thirteenth Anniversary of the Nixon Theatre and of its 673 consecutive weeks under his personal direction, Fred G. N. Nixon-Nirdlinger has arranged a series of special attractions for this week. In conjunction with the picture program, headliners from the leading companies playing in the city appeared during the course of the week before large audiences. Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger asserted that no matter how extensive his interests might be he would never fail to give personal attention to the theatre which bore his father's name and which thus far has entertained audiences aggregating 3,000,000 people. His own association with popular entertainment began when he became manager of the People's Theatre, September 7, 1896.

Postponement of the new $2,000,000 Fox Theatre, 16th and Market streets, from last Monday until next Monday was announced during the week as a result of a conference on Friday between William Fox, Erno Rapee, managing director, and William Fried, supervising contractor. Postponement was due to incompletion of the store front adjoining the main entrance on Market street.

The Orpheum Theatre under the Nixon-Nirdlinger control during the week put into effect a change in policy and a reduction of prices. In response to many requests from patrons the management decided to show films in conjunction with five acts of Keith vaudeville. There will be two changes of shows each week on Monday and Thursdays. The opening film was "The Little Red School House" and the second one "The Streets of New York."

Under directions of the Mayor of Philadelphia, proprieors of all theatres in the city, including picture houses, were notified during the week that there would be rigid inforcement of the Act of 1911 regulating public exhibitions as regards the proprieties. Including the ban will be undressing scenes, dope scenes, female impersonations of a certain kind and violence.

There was welcomed into the family of Boyd Chamberlain, of the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, a baby boy, the second member of the family group.

There visited the Philadelphia exchange houses during the week Alfred J. Davis, head of the Davis Amusement Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and whose headquarters are located at 711 State street, in the Smoky City, from where he conducts the management of the firm's string of theatres. While in the city he was the guest of Dave Miller of the Universal Company.

Pittsburgh

Howard Perrott Dawson, owner of the Colonial Theatre, Beaver Falls, died on November 2 from peritonitis following an operation. He was one of the most popular of the younger business men in the town, being a member of the Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, Y. M. C. A., and other local organizations, was assistant superintendent of St. Mary's Episcopal Sabbath School; member of Beaver Valley Lodge 478, F. & A. M.; Harmony Royal Chapter No. 206; Beaver Valley Commandery No. 84, Knights Templar, and Syria Temple, Pittsburgh. Also an active worker in the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania. He is survived by his widow, three children, his mother, two sisters and two brothers.

"Thundering Dawn," Universal-Jewel production, is making a big hit in the local territory. In Pittsburgh during the week of November 12, three theatres were playing the film, the Cameo, Alhambra and Garden. At the first-named house the film was in its second week. It had originally been booked for one week only, and the management of the house did no more than usual advertising, yet the business built up each day, so that at the end of the week, it was decided to hold the production over. Each house reported big business.

Thomas Meighan spent several days in Pittsburgh recently, having been called here to attend the funeral of his father, a lifelong resident of this city. The Rowland and Clark Theatres sent a huge floral emblem as a token of their sympathy, and the following men from that organization attended the funeral: Harry Thomas, J. P. Donovan, Sam De Fazio and Tom Gilbert.

Among the out-of-town visitors seen on Film Row recently were: C. E. Gable, Sharon; Charlie Feinler, Wheeling; Walter Silverberg, Greenville; Jack Marks, Clarksburg.

Charles Richelieu, who for years conducted the Richelieu Theatre at Bedford with much success, is to open a new Richelieu Theatre in Blairsville on Thanksgiving Day, having disposed of the Bedford house some time ago. He and Mrs. Richelieu were in town several days ago film shopping, and stated that the opening attraction would be Leah Baird's "Is Divorce a Failure?"

Pershing, St. Louis, Asking $1.65 Top for "Scaramouche"

The Pershing Theatre, Delmar boulevard near Hamilton avenue, St. Louis, which has recently been remodeled, decorated and furnished by the St. Louis Amusement Company at a cost of $50,000, will reopen November 24 with "Scaramouche" as the feature attraction. The picture will run indefinitely. A $1.65 top will be charged. The advance exploitation for the picture included trailers in eighteen of the leading theatres of the city. A feature of the Pershing improvement is a special parking garage for patrons of the house, which has been established just west of the theatre.

The Shubert-Jefferson Theatre, Twelfth Boulevard at Locust, will be forced to obtain new quarters after November 1, 1925, as the Union Electric Light and Power Company has just concluded a forty years' lease on the entire eleven-story building of which the theatre is a part. George H. Lighton, manager, said that the Shubert interests have not yet decided on the location of their new house, and had several very desirable sites in view.

Skouras Brothers' Enterprises has purchased 20,000 special souvenir booklets costing 10 cents each to exploit the showing of Douglas McLean in "Going Up" at their theatres. This is said to be the largest single order for such expensive souvenirs ever placed by a theatre.

S. E. Pertle of Jerseyville, Ill., was a caller of the week. Other out-of-town exhibitors seen along picture row were: C. E. Brady, Cape Girardeau; Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Princess, Alton, and I. W. Rodges, Poplar Bluff and Cairo.

The building at the southwest corner of Jefferson and Lucas avenues, St. Louis, is being remodeled for a picture theatre. The structure will also contain lodge rooms, offices and stores to be used exclusively by negro tenants.

Herschal Stuart, manager of the Missouri Theatre, the Paramount first-run house in St. Louis, has announced that during the two weeks beginning Monday, November 19, the proceeds of the theatre, with the exception of the Sunday shows, will be divided for the benefit of Father Dempsey's Day Nursery, 1209 North Sixth street, a well known local charity, which was established in 1910 as a haven for poor children whose mothers are obliged to work.

Cleveland

The Stillman Theatre, for seven years a "continuous performance" theatre in Cleveland, changed over to "two-a-day" Sunday night, November 18, playing "Scaramouche." For five days previously the advance sale of seats was on, and this sale was record-breaking. Marcus Loew, who was in the city Wednesday, stated that the first two days' advance sale came within $50 of the entire advance sale in Chicago, and it was very good there.

The house was entirely sold out the opening night fifteen minutes before the performance began, and every day since there have been lines at the box-office. The opening night had less than 25 pass seats occupied.

Massachusetts

Postmaster Roland M. Baker and the members of his staff were the personal guests of Manager Robert M. Stenberg of Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre, Boston, one evening last week at a showing of the photoplay, "Loyal Lives," depicting the hazards and hardships of the postal service.

Papers were passed last week and recorded at the office of the Registery of Deeds at Salem, conveying the Federal Theatre, the Empire Theatre and the Salem Theatre, in Salem, to the Gordon interests, who own and manage the Olympia chain of theatres, which dot New England in several states. A new policy has been inaugurated at the Federal Theatre under which four vaudeville acts and feature pictures will be shown. "Win" Danielson, for six years organist at the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, will preside at the organ in the Federal Theatre and will lead the orchestra. The sale is said to involve the payment of approximately $340,900, and the properties were sold by the Koen brothers.

Among the continuing screen offerings at the Boston picture houses are "Scaramouche," which is just concluding its second week of what is expected to be a very long and highly successful run, if all indications are not at fault; "The Spanish Dancer," which this week is ending its second sensational run at the Paramount unit theatre, the Fenway, and "The Hunchbach of Notre Dame," which for the past ten weeks has been enjoying a popularity of remarkable durability at Tremont Temple.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

Associated Exhibitors

HARBOR LIGHTS. (5 reels). Star, Tom Moore. Tom Moore and an unknown English cast, that with one exception (the chap who played the genteel heavy) ought to be "shot at sunrise." Tom Moore a great actor and does the best he can with an impossible part. This picture was taken in England and they should have kept it there. Usual advertising brought attendance that was better than the picture. Drew health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STORMY SEAS. (4,893 feet). Good picture full of action. You can't go wrong when you play Associated Exhibitors programs as they are all good. Had good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

UP IN THE AIR ABOUT MARY. (5 reels). Star cast. One of the best I have used out of this company for an age. A very good line of paper on this. Had good attendance. Draw transient patronage. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

F. B. O.

DAYTIME WIVES. (6,651 feet). Star cast. A picture that will pull and not disappoint any one. Extra good. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

MIRACLE BABY. Star, Harry Carey. It seems that Carey is getting worse in his features. Got no pep to his stuff. They should make him work. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance, drawing working class in city of 13,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

QUEEN OF THE TURF. (5 reels). Star, Johnny Walker. Much advertising about nothing. Pleased probably fifty per cent. Would have made a good one reeler. Used two threes, two ones, 11x14s, slide, phone. Had fair attendance. Drew rural class in town of 125. Admission 10-25. George J. Heller, Pastime Theatre (125 seats), Kanona, Kansas.

WEST BOUND LIMITED. (5,100 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Helped pay for the poor ones. Packed to the doors. Has very good moral tone and is suitable at any time. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

First National

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. A very good program comedy with all in it of a detective story. Pleased nearly one hundred per cent. and did good business in both houses. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harvey, Strand & Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville & Dixon, California.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,500 feet). Features Strongheart (dog). Rather old but pleasing picture. Not as good as "Silent Call" which also features dog. Some beautiful scenes in this picture. Print in good condition. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A dandy little picture that pleased them all and sure drew them in. The first Coogan I have run here and judging from results will have to get some more. Regular advertising brought very good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. (5,182 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Fair picture and well acted. Katherine MacDonald is very pretty, but is not cared for in our district. Picture was a little draggy. Usual society drama stuff. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

FIGHTING BLADE. (8,729 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Patrons walked out on this one. Another very ordinary costume period picture with no drawing power and priced to the sky. When will the producers learn that Americans prefer American stories? Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Very poor attendance in railroad town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture held the interest of our audience through the greatest part of it. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats). Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet. Star cast. As a western, head and ears above the others. Plenty of thrills and excitement. Good business both nights. Used posters, mail, etc. Good attendance of neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. An excellent picture and well worth seeing. All classes will like this one. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A good picture but somehow failed to draw with me. Kerrigan don't mean much now until he builds up a following. The picture will back up your exploitation however. Has fair moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

HAIL THE WOMAN. (7,222 feet). Star cast. Unusually good for me, but don't pay too much. Has extra good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (247 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Production well liked from all angles. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Next to the "Hottentot" this is the best picture of this star that I've run. Raymond Hatton, as in the former picture, brings some hearty laughs. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. About as sorry as any picture could be. Print in very poor condition and altogether no show at all. Usual advertising brought poorest attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

BOSTON BLACKIE. (4,522 feet). Star, William Russell. This is one of Bill Russell's best and it pleased a majority of the fans. Pictures of this type are well suited to Russell. Can be played anywhere as a first class program picture. Go heavy on the circumstantial evidence in your advertising, but lay off the prison reform stuff and you will get them in. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BRASS COMMANDMENTS. (4,829 feet). Star, William Farnum. A fine western of the Farnum type, more than the usual amount of action, which keeps the fans interested throughout. Ran it with "Birthday Cake and Jungle Pests" which made a fine show. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR. (5,787 feet). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A good picture, but rather slow. Our patrons liked it though. Cast was very good. Had some clever comedy situations. Sweet love drama, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance of middle and lower class in big city. Admission 10-15 matinee, 10-28-35 evenings. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco, California.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Goodbye, Buck. Many more like this one and you will be up Lost Creek without a paddle. May have been a good picture with an emotional actor in leading part, but fans were sitting on edges of seats waiting for Buck's customary action. They waited five reels in vain. Fox had better start calling him "Buck" again and put him in "hot shot" westerns where he belongs and where the fans want him. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FOR BIG STAKES. (4,378 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good western, but somehow Mix don't pull 'em in like he used to. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

LONE STAR RANGER. (5,250 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The best liked Mix picture since "Tony." Went over big. The larger cities and the reviewers may like Mix in "fancy" pictures, but I think the small towns like him best in straight westerns. This picture did more business than any of the last dozen big specials. Draw all classes in town of 4,000. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Very good. First time for star here. Didn't draw very well but seemed to please those who saw it. The second one drew better. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

SECOND HAND LOVE. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Quite good if they like westerns. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. (5,957 feet). Star, William Farnum. A very good picture. Farnum is a good star for us. The picture is very interesting from beginning to end. Print in good shape. Had fair business. Draw farmers in small town. Jack Schneider, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Iowa.

Goldwyn

CHRISTIAN. (8,000 feet). Star cast. I expected much and was disappointed in "The Christian," but probably because I first saw it on the stage and acted by capable actors. Most of 'em liked it, but I didn't. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUNGRY HEARTS. (6,540 feet). Star cast. Excellent picture and business. This picture liked by most of 'em that saw it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Jack Schneider writes a letter. It's on the bum print problem—a problem as important to the small town exhibitor as any he has to face.

Jack is absolutely right and a lot of you feel the way he does, so the letter is put before you on the next page.

Mr. Schneider thinks exchanges ought to pay damages for bum prints; very likely justice in a court of law would say the same, if anybody tried it—but suits cost money.

E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio, had the easier way in the letter he had in Straight From the Shoulder a while back.

He argued that if the exchange didn't come up to par on prints, he quit dealing with that exchange.

If enough of you did that—the exchanges would wake up to the importance of the matter.

VAN.

LOOK YOUR BEST. (6 reels). Star, Colleen Moore. A very ordinary picture that I played on a Saturday night and put in a strong line of fillers and in that way escaped censure. You can play this, but be careful of your accompanying selections and buy it right. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LOOK YOUR BEST. (6 reels). Star cast. Nice little comedy-drama. Very light in construction. Seemed to please. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. Nine great reels. Our audience was a bit taken aback when we announced a nine-reel picture, but when they saw it they wanted more. Clever plot, well written and superbly played. Not new but a good bet in any small town. Story and actor played big in advertising; fine attendance. Draw factory people in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Hodkinson

BULL DOG DRUMMOND. (5,000 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture. Lots of compliments and no kicks. Had good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Although a trifle longer than desirable, our patrons forgot the hard seats in their absorption in the picture. A distinct novelty, for which we paid a real price, but were repaid by excellent attendance two nights. Has fair moral tone and is doubtful for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

Metro

ENTER MADAME. Star, Clara Kimball Young. A fair comedy; nothing extra. Suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of working class in city of 13,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. A clean-cut, high-class picture that seemed to be over the heads of our audiences. Star has absolutely no box-office power. Few liked this one except the manager. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had terrible attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Patrons said Miss Murray was too affected in this one. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for week day better than Sunday. Had light attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS. (6 reels). A fine picture. A change from the regular grind, and very educational. Good photography. Pleased ninety-five per cent. Had very good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Nothing but praise for this picture. It has good pulling power and sends them home feeling they have had their money's worth. The cast is splendid. A suitable attraction for any day, anywhere. Print was in fine shape. Attendance very good. Would advise any New England exhibitor to play it and watch the cash roll in. It will make friends for your house. Draw townspeople and farmers, town of 800. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats). Chester, Vermont.

Paramount

EXCITERS. (5,939 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Well liked here and did nicely. A good picture of its kind. It's all about the frolicsome flapper and her athletic tendencies, but it pleased here. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

EXIT THE VAMP. (5 reels). Star, Ethel Clayton. A picture that got some healthy laughs from our audience at spots. Only a program offering. Will go where they are not too critical. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GLIMPSES OF THE MOON. (6,502 feet). Star, Nita Naldi. Not much of an excuse for this one. Lots of money was spent but it isn't worth it. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HEART RAIDER. (5,075 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Not bad at all if bought within reason; it's frothy. Agnes wears and don't wear several striking costumes, and it's produced with class. Would say this would be a trifle better than an average program picture and should be bought at that price. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. One thousand laughs, one thousand tears, one thousand sensations and the colossal surprise of the time. "Hollywood" is a remarkable picture in many ways, and calculated to appeal to every lover of motion pictures everywhere. It is significant of the importance of the picture that it was made by James Cruze, creator of "The Old Homestead" and "The Covered Wagon." William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Something to get behind and advertise for all of Meighan's pictures so far have been excellent. Will please everyone. Print good. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw university students and better class in city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre (610 seats), Champaign, Illinois.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,153 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Best Gloria Swanson I've played yet. She has never pulled any business here but did fair in this one. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing family and student classes in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A very good picture. Should please most of 'em. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Very good picture that pleased immensely. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good picture with fine cast. Dorothy does well with De Roche and Kosloff. Picture was well liked here. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

LEOPARDESS. (5,621 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Pleased but few. Production is adequate but Miss Brady disgusts with her awkward and feeble attempt to do a native dance. Her work in this picture reveals no genius. Montague Love is good, but story is weak and unconvincing. Advertising slants, South Sea Island scenery, Mr. Love. Had average attendance for Saturday. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty Theatre (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. This one will sure please them, many compliments. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

MARRIAGE MAKER. (6,295 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Advertise this as different and be sure you are not at the door, when the crowd gets out for they'll sure tell you how different it is. A real waste of time of this splendid cast. Moral tone good if they can understand it. Suitable for Sunday. Had very poor attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

MORAN OF THE LADY LETTY. (6,460 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. I believe it might have been alright, but the film was in such bad condition that I couldn't judge. The salesman erred when he told me they had a new print on this, but that is nothing unusual for a salesman. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Drew residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Where does Paramount get the idea that Hiers can take Reid's place? Half of audience disgusted. Bull fight only in press book. Used slides, ones, photos, paper. Small town. W. T. Waugh, Empress Theatre, Grundy Center, Iowa.

SHARK MONROE. (5,000 feet). Star, William S. Hart. As usual, good. Print in very good shape. Little rainy but not enough to hurt. Did very fair business. Five houses open all this week. Too much and too many places to go. Makes business light. This is the third time the William Harts have been run in Salina and they still go very good. Better than the average program pictures. They are not a bad buy if you can buy them right. One thing sure, they will please. Put a two-reel comedy with them. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SHEIK. (6,579 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Book it. You can't go wrong, provided you get it at right price. Pleased one hundred per cent. Used ones, threes, newspaper. Suitable for Sunday. Had extra good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

SILENT PARTNER. (5,866 feet). Star cast. Extra good, pleased one hundred percent and no kicks. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SINGED WINGS. (7,788 feet). Star cast. Very poor for this town. Many walked out. We wanted to also. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw local patronage. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

SIXTY CENTS AN HOUR. (5,632 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Average picture; contains some laughs however. Jacqueline Logan in support is very clever but doesn't do much. Hiers won't create much sensation. Clean comedy suitable for Sunday. Good attendance of middle and lower class in big city. Admission 10-15 matinee, 10-35 evening. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SNOW BRIDE. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Fair picture. Rather slow and long drawn out. Poor Alice, she's through as a drawing card. She tries though and that's something. It is suitable for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre, (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SNOW BRIDE. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Can't say much for this one. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Mr. Schneider Writes

"How does it come that a small town theatre has to put up with all the poor prints that an exchange has on hand?

"Now, the people in a small town pay hard cash to see a good show as well as the people in the larger places.

"As a rule Vitagraph gives the best service in good prints as long as I have been in business, which has been two years.

"There should be a law that the exchanges should have to pay an exhibitor damages for each and every time they send him a poor print. We pay for good service and we should have it; our patrons pay for good service and they should have it."—Jack Schneider, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Indiana.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. "Say, you want cod fish? We have only mackerel today." Has harmless moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday nor any other day. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TIGER'S CLAW. (5,297 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Just one of those pictures that can hardly be classed as average entertainment. I would not advise playing it as there are too many others far superior. T. H. Whittemore, Newcsatle, California.

TIGER'S CLAW. (5,297 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Star, as usual, does good work, but this is quite a ways from being his best picture. Pleased fairly well. Had very good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

TIGER'S CLAW. (5,297 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This picture did not please; something lacking. Picture was weak, with poor settings, especially the breaking of the dam was poor. Poorest Jack Holt picture in some time. Jack Holt a favorite here, but if they put him in weak pictures he will soon lose his popularity. Had good attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Excellent picture. Should please ninety per cent. of the audiences. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Another good western that pleased my patrons one hundred per cent. My patrons are not any too stuck on westerns but this one sure brought them in and had the largest Saturday night crowd I have ever had. Regular advertising brought extra good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

TWO WEEKS WITH PAY. (4,136 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Well Miss Daniels had two weeks full of absorbing interest, and the picture will interest anyone seeing it. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. Some liked this one and some didn't. Play it up with a good comedy and you might get by. My patrons didn't get very enthusiastic about it. Fair attendance, drawing general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This one was big, no use talking, but too darned long. No one has time to squat for two hours and a half to see Miss Marion cut a few capers that could be cut in twenty minutes. Marion, you stall too much.

You will have to cut your act down. We can't spare the time. We are busy folks. Had poor attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE. (5,703 feet). Star cast. It is a modern society drama in which a married man trifles at a southern resort. The story is elaborately mounted and costumed and is very well done all the way. The story is not a pleasing one and hints at something that is really not done. Would not call it a big special. However, it got us big business three days. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Pathe

WHY WORRY? (6,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. The phrase, "His latest and best," can be used with meaning. Oh! what a picture, a positive knockout. Box office record held by "Safety Last" and will be equaled if not broken. Grab it quick. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harver, Strand and Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville and Dixon, California.

Selznick

MILLION IN JEWELS. Star, Helen Holmes. A picture made for the cheaper houses. I played it with real fillers and did not get censured. Without a very fine program to hold this you'll get in trouble if your patrons are particular. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

United Artists

MAN WHO PLAYED GOD. (5,855 feet). Star, George Arliss. Not a special production but a great deal better than the ordinary program picture. Invite your ministers to see this. It is a clean picture. Regular advertising brought poor attendance. Draw rural class in town of 955. Admission 10-30. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre (250 seats), Nelson, Nebraska.

ORPHANS OF THE STORM. (13,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. A screen masterpiece. A wonderful film filled with dramatic suspense and exciting climaxes. It is a picture of matchless beauty-scenes of luxury beyond compare and a love scene that is a classic and in a class all by itself. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RULING PASSION. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Just let us add our bit to the chorus of praise that has gone up from every exhibitor for this picture. It is one of the ones where the story is all there and the people who act it are real. It is one of the good ones all the way. Has best moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. A very good photoplay. Mary acts her part well. This picture was liked by those who saw it. Here is the rub: We paid high for this show for two nights and had to raise our admission thereby. First night's attendance was very poor. Did not take enough in to pay film rental. Poor attendance second night also. We did not receive a good print from the Exchange especially when you consider the price we paid. Print was full of rain and sprocket holes were badly cracked and parts were missing. We pay a very high film rental to United Artists, but four times out of five we receive a poor print. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Two Late Ones

ROUGED LIPS (Metro—Viola Dana). Dana always a good box office bet here, but this is better than usual. People talk about it. Can be called a special at regular prices. Has fair moral tone and I see no objection to playing it on Sunday. —J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

COMMON LAW (Selznick—star cast). A fine picture; good entertainment. List of stars reads like a Blue Book: Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle excellent. Play it. Artist colony love drama, suitable for Sunday.—Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco, California.

Send tips on late ones as well as on old releases. They all help and exhibitors are asking for every tip they can get.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. A very good picture in every way. Well acted and directed but the print I got was rotten. Made several stops on account of bad splices breaking apart. Has good moral and I ran it on Sunday. Attendance regular Sunday crowd. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. There is only one Mary and "Tess" is good but not as good as the old one. Supporting cast was not very well known here. Picture went over though. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A good little program picture that received quite a few comments. Will please all who like Mayo and some of them who don't. Average attendance, drawing general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

CHAPTER IN HER LIFE. (6,330 feet). Star cast. A very interesting and entertaining picture. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DEAD GAME. (4,819 feet. Star, Hoot Gibson. Hoot hooted the usual program picture but he should hoot as a screech owl or scream like an eagle and get out of the program business. It's in him, why not hoot it out? William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FLIRT. (8 reels). Star cast. Pleased the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THE FOX. (7 reels). Star, Harry Carey. An old one that draws them in because of good paper. Only a very ordinary picture, but the title puts it over, so we played to a full house. Usual advertising gave extra good attendance. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Just a fair program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star cast. A "special" is right. Played to and pleased the greatest attendance since "Over The Hill." The title gets 'em thinking, and the picture keeps 'em at it! Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent moral tone. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). H. A. Snow production. This picture is the greatest thing of its kind that we have ever had the pleasure of showing. It pleased one hundred per cent and that's aplenty. Used twenty-four, eight, sixes, threes, newspaper, heralds. Attendance good. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

LONE HAND. (4,875 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Gibson's best. You can't go wrong if your patrons like westerns on this one. Used ones, threes, two ones, 11x14, phone. Had S. R. O. Draw rural class in town of 125. Admission 10-25. George J. Heller, Pastime Theatre (125 seats), Kanona, Kansas.

MAN TO MAN. (5,629 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A very good western picture; much better than "The Fox" but we drew another rotten print. It seems that every day and every way they're getting worser and worser. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw loggers, farmers and fishermen in town of 400. Admission 15-25. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (5,020 feet). Star cast. You know our friend Carl Laemmle is somewhat of an optimist when it comes to his own pictures, he gets all excited and wants all the readers of the "Saturday Evening Post" and the "Ladies Home Journal" to write home after they have seen one of his productions and tell him where he is wrong, if he is wrong, but on "The Merry-Go-Round" he is absolutely right in telling to the world over his own signature that he has a picture and the unusual part of it for a country audience to like, is that it is an out and out love story without any comedy relief in it at all, and they like it. You know they did. We did not break any house records, but did a very nice business against opposition in the way of a big home-talent. The picture will grip and hold both the better class and the class that craves action as few productions of this type will. Suitable for Sunday. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

NOBODY'S BRIDE. (4,861 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Very good; in fact, all of the Universal program pictures are good. Print O. K. This one did not get me what was expected. Poor title for this house. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

RAMBLIN' KID. (6,395 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This is the best that Gibson ever did and whenever you beat him for Western stuff you will have to step some. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

TOP O' THE MORNING. (4,627 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. Nice little comedy-drama; as good as anything Walton ever made, in my estimation. Harry Myers cast.

Had poor attendance. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (7,785 feet). Star, Rockcliffe Fellowes. A very good picture and could have been made a lot better. Buy it, it's no "Four Horseman" just a shade better than program and keep that in mind when purchasing. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Vitagraph

DIVORCE COUPONS. (5,249 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A good entertainment, pleased one hundred per cent. Good comments. Bought right. Made some money on it. It's a Vitagraph. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw country and small town class in town of 2,200. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture and a money getter. Packed them in for three nights. Ran it second run after my competition ran it for three days. Had capacity attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Flopped gloriously for us as we played it in our best house where the clientele does not care for action dramas. It is a good picture, but crammed and jammed with fights. Has good moral tone and is hardly suitable for Sunday. Had terrible attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This one a sure winner. Starts where others finish. Plenty of action and punch. Patrons came out praising picture. Book this one for a box office record. Has good moral tone and is suitable any day. Had good attendance. Draw general class. Bob Montgomery, Lyric Theatre, Perry, Oklahoma.

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. (7,650 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Very good. The Irish people will come at this one, besides others. Every one was pleased with it that saw same. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Every tip you send helps many exhibitors. First run, or two years old—if you run it—tell about it. USE THE BLANK BELOW

NO DEFENSE. (5,700 feet). Star, William Duncan. An outdoor picture that will please the average audience which "leans" to Western themes. Edith Johnson good. Has fair moral tone and would pass for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

TRUMPET ISLAND. (6,000 feet). Star cast. One of the most pleasing and entertaining productions we have used this year. If properly exploited will mean a clean up for the small town exhibitor. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Warner Bros.

HEROES OF THE STREET. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. A one hundred percent picture. Will satisfy all classes and ages and send them out smiling and eager to come again. The best picture I have seen Wesley in. Boost it. Used slide boards, window cards. Had fine attendance. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

MAIN STREET. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Played this second run in this city, and despite the fact that there were many who did not like it first run, it drew well for us, but was not a generally likeable picture, although characters were true to life. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had about capacity attendance. Draw best and middle classes in city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. N. L. Royster, Capitol Theatre, (340 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

Comedies

AN EASTERN WESTERNER. (Pathe). A great comedy, a continual laugh. Good on any program. One of Lloyd's old ones. Condition of film good. Is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

COBBLER. (Pathe). Like all the rest of the "Our Gang" pictures. A laugh from start to finish, the kids almost get convulsions laughing at them and big people too for that matter. Ran with "Yankee Doodle" making a good show. Draw different classes for different pictures in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ENTERTAINING THE BOSS. (F. B. O.) Got a giggle or two along toward the finish. Wonder if the DeHavens can play "Mumble Peg." Draw regular small town class in town of 2,500. Admission 5-10, 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

HEAR 'EM RAVE. (Pathe). Another reissue and they sure "eat em up" here. In fact Lloyd could run for President here and win by a "landslide." Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

HELLO PARTNER. "Pee Wee" the bowlegged cowboy will never miss fire in this theatre. People seem to appreciate this brand of farce better than any other obtainable. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

PAY DAY. (First National). A good Chaplin comedy but prices too high and it takes the joy out of running it. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats). Irvington, California.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE. (Educational). This comedy saved our show from being a flat failure. There are some good comedy situations in this one. A good Christie. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TRAMPS OF NOTE. (Universal). The first Neely Edwards comedy that has delivered the goods. This one brought the laughs. More action than the general run of star comedies. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THE WAY

by Emerson

Indians, Soldiers, Settlers, Wagon Trains, Battles, Escapes Love and Adventure in the Stirring Days of '47 ! ! !

No finer, more stirring and colorful story was ever put into a picture than this great work by Emerson Hough

It takes you from a "before the war" fine old Southern plantation out to the mountains and plains of the West that was a howling wilderness. You see startling attacks by Apaches upon the wagon trains of the settlers; you see battles between the Indians and the blue-coat soldiers; you see the Gold Rush; you see a heroine as brave as she is beautiful and a hero who has to go through blood and fire before he can call her his own!

Produced by C. W. PATTON

Pathéserial and

Of A Man

Hough

(Author of "The Covered Wagon", "North of 36", etc, etc,)

Great cast with Allene Ray, Harold Miller, Bud Osborne, Whitehorse, Lillian Gale, etc.

A BIG production with many scenes so big that they are a real spectacle.

NOTE: with "The Way of a Man" Pathe establishes a noteworthy innovation. Coincident with the production of the serial there was also produced a FEATURE, with the same big cast, story and production. This feature is the kind of attraction that the best houses need and demand. The feature will be available about Dec. 1st; the serial on Jan. 20th.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Half Tone Cuts Are Not Good Unless the Newspaper Can Reproduce Clearly

GETTING the wrong slant on a series of recent comments on the advertisements for The Isle of Dead Ships and The Huntress, Walter F. Eberhardt, of the First National publicity department, rises to take exception. He says in part:

In the last issue of the Moving Picture World, pages 232 and 233, you take quite a slap at producers who give exhibitors press sheet advertisements using half tones. It just happened that the two illustrations cited are from a First National press sheet.

While I admit the fundamental soundness of your arguments in the examples cited (although some allowance must be made for the fact that the cuts are more blurred in your reduced illustration than they were in the original newspaper ad) I do want to take exception to the implied charge that the press sheet is at fault. If you only knew the demands we get from exhibitors for half tones you would realize more fully how we are trying to meet the needs of everyone. Some merely want line cuts and others want half tone illustrations. Our press sheets, if you will look them over, offer a large variety that should satisfy everyone. I know that Mr. Einfeld, who prepares a large percentage of our press sheets, has this constantly in mind and is trying to get up the advertising matter so that everyone will find his requirements met.

The fault then, as I find it and as I think it ought to be pointed out in your section, lies with exhibitors who use half tones when the newsprint paper used by their newspaper is all too poor a grade to carry them. That, as I see it, is the crux of the whole matter, and I don't think that the man who gets up the press sheet should be held responsible. As a matter of fact, I don't think he is even at fault, because there are many places in which a half tone is far more suitable than a line cut. It is simply a matter of letting the exhibitor choose, from a varied selection, the material that is best suited to his location and advertising mediums.

Not Quite That

Comment was made on the fact that the half tones on these two subjects did not seem to be up to the First National standard, but the big idea was that exhibitors persisted in using them merely because they were half tones.

In other words, we were not shooting at First National, but at the numerous class of manager who seems to feel that a line cut is crude and vulgar and that the half tone represents the last word in elegance, no matter what the local printers may do to them.

Mr. Eberhardt puts his finger on one of the sore spots of the business when he writes of the exhibitor demand for half tone material in the prepared advertisements.

Mostly Bad Medicine

First National, or any other company, would be remiss did they present an entire series of advertising mat displays without half tones. There is a legitimate demand for these, and the press bureau naturally seeks to meet this demand. That is as it should be. The point is that hundreds of exhibitors are using half tones who have no business having any traffic with screen cuts.

Comparatively few newspapers get good results with half tones, even of the proper screen. The rising costs of print paper leads to the use of a cheaper quality. This, in its turn, gives increasingly poor results. There are newspapers which could not give decent results with a thirty screen cut. Between poor paper and worse ink, even the line cuts are poor and the half tones are mere blots—in a double sense.

Lay Off, If You Must

This being the case, managers of theatres in these towns have no business using half tones. They are trying to sell the idea of amusement, and to do this they must strive to create an air of elegance and refinement. This cannot be done with a smear of ink. The reverse of the effect aimed at is gained, and the result hurts instead of helps business.

And yet, because they feel that line cuts are less elegant than half tones, they use the half tone mats where they have at their command a good line of finely executed line cuts.

Sometimes they have only to cut apart a combination to get just what they want, and yet they pay extra space bills to spoil what might otherwise be a good display.

Makes Good Line

No company in the business contributes better line work than First National. This has been one of their strongest points ever since the inception of the idea, and it is discouraging to have Mr. Eberhardt dwell upon the fact that the managers cry for half tones like children for castoria.

It is stupid in the extreme to pay perhaps half as much again as is needed just to SPOIL a display with a badly reproduced half tone, particularly where there is so much good line material available on the same subjects.

Of course, we could have told Walter all this on the telephone and perhaps have brought a smile to his face again, but this message is less to him than it is to the managers in towns where press work is not good, and today that means most towns.

If you live in one of those places, why not think this over—and save money?

Added an Olio

Because he is a regular First National franchise holder, Earl M. Fain, of Loew's Vendome Theatre, Nashville, gave the orphans a chance to see Circus Days, enlisting the aid of the fashionables to transport the kiddies.

That doesn't get his name in the papers, but he added an olio of circus acts, and that is why he breaks into print. Made the kiddies twice as happy and let the reporters write a longer story. If you have no vaudeville connection, you can at least put in a clown to work the lobby.

A New C. & D.

Recent Crosset & Dunlap issues include The Eternal City in a photoplay version at popular price, which will materially aid the sale of the play through store hook-ups. Most of the stills are exteriors of Italian scenery and emphasis is given to the fact that the play was filmed in and about Rome.

Don't waste good exploitation on an ordinary picture. Save it up.

These three police dogs were used for a ballyhoo during the showing of Where the North Begins at Loew's State Theatre, New York. They were a good general advertisement, but were particularly useful in drawing the attention of lovers of dogs.

Appeals to Schools for History Group

Having contracted for the Chronicles of America, the Stanley interests, Philadelphia, inaugurated a campaign to put over these Pathe releases.

A week before the showing of the first subject, Columbus, the theatre sent a personal letter to the principal of each school, inviting him to bring his faculty to the Stanley to see the picture at the Aldine. Practically all responded, expressing their interest in the series, and most of them asked for more than the original enclosure of five tickets, having been told that tickets would be supplied for all teachers.

Building up on this appeal, the company also sent letters to the heads of the city departments and to representative clergymen, lawyers, physicians and welfare workers.

In this way the work on one picture directed attention to the entire series and will work for some time to come, these pictures being released about one a month.

This is a scheme which all exhibitors will probably follow, since the greater value will come from the interest of teachers and others who can direct public opinion to their viewing.

Window Trailer Is Big Help in London

Horace Judge, who is doing the exploitation direction for First National Pictures in London and Great Britain in general, stuck another big feather in his cap when he set out to tell that Potash & Perlmutter had opened for business at the Pavilion.

He hooked in to Selfridge's, the most famous department store in the world, with a window showing of the three-minute trailer, mostly given over to the model scenes and Abe's cabaret party. This was projected on a daylight screen every ten minutes until the police, despairing of handling the crowds, asked that the stunt be withdrawn. But the thing had already run four days, and Judge was satisfied.

For another angle he used sandwich men, the original form of theatrical publicity in London, but instead of sending out three or four, he used—well count them yourself. Walter Eberhardt says fifty, but we figured it as 64. First time we ever heard of a press agent underestimating. Walter is liable to expulsion from the Ananias Club, if he is not careful.

The big point is that it put the picture over as well as it went over here. Ralph J. Puch, managing director of First National, George King, Judge's assistant, and H. Seek, of Selfridges, were accessories before and after the fact.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

The chorus of women's voices has caught on in great style, and for variety these singers were used to augment the orchestra for the overture, "Pomp and Circumstance," the week that "The Common Law" was the photoplay attraction. Besides this, the chorus appeared in another number, Songs of Long Ago. In addition there was the Symphonized Jazz and a group of dances by the ballet.

For "Pomp and Circumstance" the orchestra was hit by two 150-ampere dome spots, one rainbow color and the other orange. Two entrance spots, light pink, crossed on the canopy above the musicians. Borders of the large stage were full blues and greens one-half. The silver draw curtains of the small stage were used as a transparency, behind which was a deep blue plush cyclorama hit by one light green and one deep blue box lamps from the side. Two light amber and two orange spots from the sides shot across and forward, against the silver draws. Green borders small stage. One amber and one orange arch spots on the silver draws. The chorus was seated with the orchestra, to the left, garbed in black robes. The voices came in on the finale, with full orchestra, and as they stood for the finish they were hit by an orange spot from the booth.

Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite of dances opened with Waltz of the Flowers by eight girls in drapes and flower-petaled dresses. At orchestral prelude two flower wheels on lamps in the footlight trough threw falling rose leaves upon a blue neutral back drop and continued through the dance, the girls at the close also strewing rose leaves upon the stage. Two set piece flower stands at either side were the only props.

The second, the Chinese dance, was done by four girls in correct costume, before a plush cyclorama. Two long Chinese-lettered strips came down from the flies, and a set Buddha was centered. Two of the girls had three-foot sticks with a cross piece upon which was suspended two Chinese lanterns. A string of illuminated lanterns ran across the cyclorama beneath the borders. Front lighting was two booth Mestrum floods, medium green, on the orchestra. Two light green transparent windows, one each side. Two medium green entrance spots crossing on canopy fabric. On the set from the sides were two light green, two magenta and an orange spot.

The third was the Dance of the Sugar Doll, a solo by Mlle. Francelli, premiere danseuse, in white Yama Yama costume trimmed with black pom-poms. The back drop was blue cyclorama, against which at either side was a revolving column painted as stick-candy. No lighting was used except two pure white spots from the dome that followed the dancer.

The fourth and final dance was the Russian, with eight girls, half costumed as girls and four as men—typical Trepak dress. The small-stage lighting on the dance was four orange and amber spots from the sides, and same color of foots. Orchestra windows orange; red coves, large borders reds full and white one-half. Background was Russian set wall before neutral blue drop.

The Symphonized Jazz introduced four banjo players who double on saxophone, and marimbaphonist featured. Four popular tunes were specially orchestrated. At opening the proscenium llama cloth curtain was closed and upon it played a light pink booth flood and a rose purple, with two light pink dome floods and blue foots. At the center of the number the curtains opened and the lighting named above was left on the draw curtains of small stage, augmented by one lemon, one flesh pink, one amber and one straw arch spots on the pleats, from the sides. X-rays were light blue, with blue foots, blue coves and straw transparent windows. The fabric columns at proscenium were light green.

Songs of Long Ago included five old favorites. The set was Colonial house exterior back drop, with set piece piazza. At opening the chorus, in Colonial dress, was seated across the set, some on the porch and others on benches to the sides. "Long, Long Ago" had light green and light blue box lamps on set from side. X-rays were light blue and magenta, with blue foots. Side spots were amber, orange, pink and blue. Second number, "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," dimmed off the x-rays, and the dancers, also in Colonial dress, some as boys and some as girls, entered from the left in pairs for various poses during the song. Third number, "Sweet Genevieve," dimmed off the box lamps, and tenor entered from right to escort soprano up-stage for the duet. Fourth number, "Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes," was also duet with chorus. Fifth, "Bells of St. Mary's," had all front lighting off, which had been as follows during the numbers: Two booth spots, violet, on orchestra sides. Two dome floods, deep blue and violet, on orchestra. Purple borders large stage. Top of columns light green. Stage strips left half red and other half blue.

A FLOCK OF SANDWICH MEN EMPLOYED TO PUT OVER POTASH AND PERLMUTTER IN LONDON

The sandwich man is still the favorite of the London managers, but they scorn to use fewer than half a dozen and here there are five or six dozen employed by the London Pavilion where this exceedingly funny comedy opened with a rush that duplicated the success of the picture on this side of the big wet. There was also a window display that the police had to stop.

Gave His Cutouts Realistic Backing

Achieving a realistic result with a minimum of work was the achievement of Fred Turner, artist for the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., of which E. D. Turner is the manager.

Using the poster cutouts from Penrod and Sam, he framed these in a lobby shadow box and gave a fine effect with a judicious use of foliage branches, which obviated the necessity for elaborate paintings. The lighting from the back of the drapery gave exceptional prominence to the display, and supplied the house with a strong lobby appeal at a minimum of cost and trouble. The base of the frame was built up with other cutouts.

Cutouts are always useful, but now and then they can be dressed into a tableau and their selling value increased tenfold. Study the simplicity of this display and then plan something of your own. If you have to build a box, build one that can be taken down quickly and stored for re-use.

AN UNUSUALLY GOOD LOBBY TABLEAU FROM ASHEVILLE

Manager E. D. Turner and Fred Tipton, his art director, contrived this nice display for Penrod and Sam, building up cutouts with branches of fir to achieve a convincing background. The idea appealed to the adults and tickled the kiddies.

Winnipeg Capitol's New Trilby Stunt

Out of consideration for our readers we have signed a pledge not to reproduce any more shoe or stocking hook-ups for First National's Trilby. They are the same all over because they are national hook-ups, and all off the same piece, but the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, offers something new and so good that it more than makes the grade, and without changing gears.

Of course they got the free socks and when they could not find an agency for the national shoe hook-up, they sold a local dealer into a donation of $25 worth of merchandise in return for the advertising, but then Clare Appel, who does the exploitation for this Canadian string, pulled a whizzer.

Model was Hidden

Borrowing a window from a prominent store, he put an artist inside to draw pictures of Trilby, apparently working from a concealed semi-nude model. The sketching got attention, but after the novelty wore off the crowd still hung around waiting in the hope that the model would appear. She did not, because the artist was working from the First National stills, but hope sprang eternal.

In the cut are two pictures taken an hour apart, one at three and the other at four. In the three o'clock picture a bicycle with a self-standing rack will be noted at the left. At four o'clock the rider is just mounting, while the same three bicycles are shown at the right. A note adds that at six o'clock the photographer could not get close enough to make a decent shot.

The details do not show clearly in the cut, but the artist is equipped with a drawing table and is apparently engaged in turning out posters showing the familiar bare legged seated pose of Andree Lafayette. These are displayed as drawn, the collection bringing cumulative advertising. The model is supposed to be behind a screen. If you can get a girl and expose her bare feet, so much the better.

The best exploitation is that which not only puts over the title, but which also persuades the spectators that the theatre using the stunt is the home of the big things. Exploit both house and title, if you can.

THE CROWD HUNG AROUND ON THIS TRILBY STUNT FROM THE CAPITOL, WINNIPEG

The picture on the left was taken at three o'clock and the other an hour later. In the first you will note a bicycle on the left. An hour later the owner is just preparing to mount and ride away. The owners of the three bicycles on the right are still hanging around in the hope of seeing the model the artist in the window is supposed to be drawing from.

A United Artists Release

LIGHTED A PARADE TO TELL OF PICKFORD PRODUCTION

This generator from the Pickford studios was set into the Moose parade in San Francisco the opening night of the Legion convention and told 75,000 persons that Rosita was coming to the Strand Theatre in a few days. Good work, and inexpensive.

Loaned a Generator to Get in a Parade

Generally when picture exploitation gets mixed up with a parade, the ballyhoo comes at the end of the line, as the people are turning away, but the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, managed to horn into the very center of the Moose parade which was given on the evening the American Legion opened its convention.

The Moose wanted lights and M. L. Markowitz arranged for the loan of one of the generator outfits used in the Pickford and Fairbanks studios for night and other work. This supplied the current for four big arcs and a number of smaller lights, and was placed in the center of the big parade, where more than 75,000 persons had to read the huge signs which told that Rosita would shortly be seen.

Generator wagons are familiar to Los Angeles, but it was more of a novelty to San Franciscans, and so it interested in a double aspect, and all of the interest was diverted to the coming of the play.

Not many managers can borrow picture equipment from the studios, but it is always possible to plan for some sort of an intrusion on a local event if the wants of the promoters are studied.

Cloakey Campaign on Green Goddess

Appreciating the color values of Oriental designs, Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, made a drive on oriental art for the run of The Green Goddess.

Jewelry stores were persuaded to parade their oriental and pseudo oriental ornaments for a window display with a card, furniture concerns dug out their rugs for dressed windows and even the drug stores found a way to follow in with incense burners and powder. Oriental backings were painted for department stores willing to use them, the dresses being as much in harmony with the backing as possible, and for a last kick he borrowed the stage dressing for his prologue from a concern, insured the goods for the week and got co-operative windows and newspaper ads from both the store and the insurance firm.

Fifty Special Cards

Fifty special window cards were painted and cut out to suggest the outline of an Indian temple, and in one window he had a temple setting with a large opening down front through which the display could be seen. This was presumably to heighten the realism, but in fact it served to accentuate the green lighting on the display. An oriental attendant kept incense burning and stuck around the window to give motion to the display.

A candy store was hooked to the Green Goddess kisses and a drug concern to a perfume of the same title. Several soda fountains handled Green Goddess sundaes, with colorful mirror announcements and the tea hook-up from the press book was shown to have real value.

Music stores featured oriental numbers such as Chanson Indouen and even an automobile concern told how much the Green Goddess would have appreciated one of the cars of their make.

The prologue was a solo by a man in a costume similar to that worn by Arliss.

Spread the Circle

Jack Rosenthal got The Hottentot for a belated run. He figured while his Model Theatre was a neighborhood house and the picture had played many other Philadelphia theatres, there must be in each territory some persons who had heard of the play after it had left their neighborhood house.

His ballyhoo was a pair of boys in silks mounted on good looking horses, so he not only thoroughly covered his own territory but sent the boys far afield.

Watching the doors demonstrated the fact that he did draw from new territory. Not only were there many new faces in the crowd, but some people told the attendants that they had come some distance to see the picture they had heard so much about.

This is a point city exhibitors are apt to overlook. On a two or three day run, the verbal advertising on specially good plays gets in its work too late to bring all in, and another house in adjacent territory may be able to pull them in, and possibly bring them back for other shows.

If you exploit every picture, you are no better off than though you exploited none.

Six Day Kiss Poses Help Sell Picture

The six kiss poses used on the large sheets for Six Days have given inspiration to a lot of managers. The Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, built a false dome in the lobby with six divisions, in each of which was one of the kissing poses, properly lettered, and lighted at night by concealed bulbs. Taken in connection with the name of the author, this suggestion helped to sell the Goldwyn to exceptional business.

But not all of the reliance was placed in a lobby stunt. Good use was made of the news service posters, which the stores seemed glad to get, and a lavish use was made of the heralds which are a reproduction of the 24-sheet. The "How to win a wife or husband in Six Days," copy for which is supplied in Eddie Bonns' valuable yellow sheets, was also effective.

A CASE WHERE TWO HEADS WERE BETTER THAN ONE

H. B. Clarke, of the Casino Theatre, Greenville, S. C., used cutouts from both the 24-sheet and the six for A Man of Action. The use of the double cutout gives a better balance than where either is used alone, the side frames helping the effect.

New Zealand Used a Cyclorama for O. T.

One of the most effective lobbies on Oliver Twist comes from New Zealand, where the Empress Theatre, Wellington, made an unusually elaborate effort to put Jackie Coogan over.

The box office is masked in by a picture of Jackie asking for more, and this is backed by a clever cyclorama covering the entire inner wall space of the lobby, cut for the entrances. The painting shows the streets of London as they appeared in the time of Dickens, with the character cutouts from the lithographs peopling the thoroughfare. Above is a partly cut out banner, with two old-fashioned lanterns hanging in front. Pillars on either side are lettered with the name of the star and the production and there is a second banner above the one just mentioned.

Of course the color values are lost in a monochrome reproduction, but some idea of the effect may be gained in black and white, and we do not recall anything used during the first runs here to match this careful and effective appeal.

Almost as good is a display from the same house on Fury, designed by Harold Righton. This suggests a Pinafore set, but with a cutout of Barthelmess standing by the box office. On top of this structure is a ship's bell which is struck by the cashier whenever she has a spare moment. Back of the set is a wind machine on a motor driven gear, and a flasher system contributes fairly realistic lightning.

Lightning seems to be the weak point in lobby work and a flasher is about the best anyone has yet done in the way of a mechanical effect. The employment of a man to operate the carbon and file is often too costly.

We should like to see someone try out a scheme whereby a carbon mounted on a slow moving wheel strikes a file surface at some point in its revolution. It would appear that this should give a better flash, and the building would not be very elaborate if a brush feed is used.

If anyone tries out this scheme, we will appreciate a report and if possible a photograph of the device clear enough to show the details of its construction.

It would be not unlike the sandpaper "puff" on animated locomotive cutouts.

ANOTHER EFFECTIVE DISPLAY FROM THE EMPRESS, WELLINGTON

This was designed by Harold Righton for Fury, and the sight effect is supplemented by a storm wheel and flasher lightning. A ship's bell on the box office is rung by the cashier at odd moments.

Governor Endorsed a Picture Theatre

Getting the Governor to write a warm letter of congratulation and approval was one of the ways Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., put over his sixth anniversary—and it was only the sixth monthly anniversary, at that. He put it on the screen and it got a hand at each showing.

In its essential paragraph, the letter runs: "The people of Pawtucket should feel justly proud of their possession of so splendid a playhouse and I feel sure that they appreciate the efforts of your company to provide the high type of entertainment which has been typical of the Leroy Theatre."

Outside of asking the Governor to make it a legal holiday, you could not look for much more than that.

The celebration bill was The Green Goddess, and the Governor does not have to be ashamed of endorsing that. The mailing program also lists the underlines and Mr. Storin seems to have most of the good ones and few of the poor offerings. He is commencing his anniversaries early, but the more the better. Here's looking forward to the sixth yearly anniversary!

Serial Signs

It's not easy to startle Sandusky citizens, for anything that is out of the ordinary is promptly blamed on George J. Schade. That's why the citizenry refused to thrill with alarm when painted signs recently read "Look out, bootleggers. K. K. K." The people just smiled and wondered what was coming to the Schade Theatre.

They found out a few days later when the completed sign read: "Look out, bootleggers. Every K. K. K. will see Within the Law. Schade Theatre, Sun., Mon., Tues."

They just laughed a little and joined the K. K. K. to this extent, at least.

According to the First National publicity, Mr. Schade does not believe in window work, arguing that the goods display will detract from the theatre announcement. He declares that blank walls and similar places in good locations are much more striking. Even at that we should be afraid to offer Schade a window if we didn't want him to use it. We think Walter Eberhardt is goleming again.

LONDON STREETS MADE NEW ZEALANDERS HOMESICK

This striking lobby was worked for Oliver Twist by the Empress Theatre, Wellington N. Z. A litho cutout of Jackie dresses the box office, and the remainder of the lobby is masked in with a cyclorama depicting other characters in Old London.

Black Cyclorama Lights Up Nicely

At the Rivoli Theatre the other evening we noted that the metallic cyclorama seems to be black or a very deep blue, taking colors from the spots with a new and very pleasing effect. It does not reflect as much light as a gold or silver curtain, but it gives a change from those backings, and if you have an old curtain too badly tarnished to be effective, perhaps your druggist can suggest some wash which will blacken the surface without destroying the luster.

Another good effect can be obtained through the use of a black scrim drape over a metallic curtain. As in the other effect the contrast of the black with the coloring gives emphasis to the value of the lights.

The lighthouse might have been lost in a large lobby, but in the Classic Theatre Stratford, Ont., it loomed large as a beacon even though it was not provided with illumination. The stunt was useful in selling The Isle of Lost Ships to capacity.

The Small Display Suffices Small House

One advantage of a house with a small lobby is that a small display is amply sufficient. A profile light house for The Isle of Lost Ships is all the Classic Theatre, Stratford, Ont., required, where a larger lobby would have lost this single appeal in a maze of frames. The Classic keeps its frames on the side walls and the seven foot lighthouse was a big flash because it had nothing to fight.

This was not even a practical lighthouse, for there was no provision for a lantern, the entire piece being on the flat, but the white paint caused it to loom large before the pedestrian and it pulled in as much money as a larger display would have done in a wider opening.

A narrow lobby is not always an asset, but it does help to keep down costs in that it requires less decoration to achieve an equal effect. This small lighthouse gives the same suggestion of a big production to Stratford that would require a costly construction in a wide lobby. It's all a matter of relativity, as old Doc Einstein would tell you.

Trailed Baseball to Scatter Ashes

Last year the Branford Theatre, Newark, did so well with a small sign below the player board on which the world's series championship games were reproduced by the Ledger that this year the management made even more of an effort and the sign was twice as large. It was just below the automatic scoreboard and read: "Start the day right by reading the Newark Ledger for full accounts of the world's series, then go to the Branford and see Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengeance."

With football following baseball, there is a chance to get an unusual pitch for about eight months of the year. It may cost more than a board in a vacant lot on some side street, but it costs less, per reading, and is really cheaper.

If you want to make it still more interesting, make a photograph each afternoon, ring some of the faces and give free tickets to those who find their pictures in the paper, permitting this to appear as an evidence of the newspaper's enterprise, so they will contribute the space. It will more than double the crowd and double that double crowd's interest.

The ringed photograph is always a big winner. Work it in.

Likes Colors

Because they get especial attention, W. H. Lawrance, of the Lyric Theatre, Duluth, a Finkelstein and Ruben house, used a two color and black full page advertisement for five weeks in succession on Why Worry, The White Rose, Ashes of Vengeance, The Common Law and Richard the Lion Hearted.

The displays were so attractive that when he came to send them in he could find only one, the page for The Common Law. This is in red and yellow, with the red sparingly used to pick out the yellow. It is well done, both as to layout and coloring, but it will not reproduce.

Mr. Lawrance avoids the temptation to use too much of either color, knowing that to do so will defeat the display. He writes that he found the attraction value to be greater than the additional cost. In other words it was a good buy.

Color work is seldom used these days, and we have not yet seen anything to equal the color displays S. Barret McCormick used to get out for the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. After all these years they still stand in a class by themselves.

Cleaned with It

Will R. Winch, of the Wigwam Theatre, El Paso, Texas, got the Fox pictures of the Japanese earthquake before the other news reels came in, and he felt so exultant over the beat that he preceded the film with a special slide which read:

"In presenting the first pictures of the Japanese earthquake, the Fox Film Corporation has beaten all other news reels by several days. The second lot of the Fox pictures will be shown here by the time the other news reels get out their first ones."

There is a nice, swift kick to that last line.

Kid Mats

Tod Browning is using the kid matinee at the Olympic Theatre, New Haven, and finds that it helps to make business better with his adult patrons.

The kiddies pack the house Saturday mornings with a ten-cent admission and talk the rest of the week about the pictures.

Mr. Browning has another and newer stunt. A nearby garage will park the cars of the Olympia patrons at half the regular charge. It is glad to do this since most of the business is brought in through the evening, when the business rush is over, and it is more or less found money.

In towns with time limits for parked cars this idea will make real business.

The Small Cut Can Make Large Space

probably regard as an extravagant waste, but that white space is the most profitable investment represented, since it gives to a two column display the prominence of a three without the additional cost. Throw that panel out to the edge or even to within a quarter of an inch of the edge and the effect will be lost. It will be a two column display in a two column space, but with a one inch margin you cannot kill that display with anything else on the page except more white space, and it is hard to kill even with that. Coming as it does on a page largely given to heavy cuts, black type and splashy hand drawn titles, it stands out like the moonlit window in a dark barn. You cannot pass it by, and having stopped, you remain to read. Mister Smith's is a little sister to the Circle, and good work is to be expected, but we think that in this display li'l sister beats big sister at a smaller cost.

Too Much Filling Hurts This Effect

There is a little too much type in this oblong from the Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, to give the best artistic effect, but it is difficult to suggest any copy to drop. For that matter it would not even be well to cut the boldface italic to a lighter line. This might make for effect in the art display, but it probably would not give the same emphasis since there is so little talk, so it might be as well to declare this all around good, even though it does seem to be a little too well filled. As a matter of fact there is such good selling copy that it would be a shame to waste any, and there is not too much, at best. It's the right approach, not extravagant, but with an appreciation of the excellence of this production and just enough reference to the initial version to back up the "new" in the circular title. More, there is a nice appreciation of the need for hand work in the circle that is equalled only by the avoidance of this form where type was possible and preferable. It is a well considered layout 65 lines across six, which gives ample, though not extravagant display. It's not a beautifully artistic advertisement, but it is far from being inartistic and it is intelligent and hardworking. The chief achievement to be noted is the display value of the circle and the care taken not to kill this with a too heavy border or too large a mass of cuts. That circle is something to remember and copy, but if you use it, keep large cuts away. A circle with large scene cuts on either side—and scene cuts are a terrible temptation to most artists—would have been a bust.

smaller face, because then it would have been easier to read, and the star names would have been plenty large in an 18 point, which would have given a little more spacing to throw the title into greater prominence, but after all the Pittsburgh busts, this is a sightly and effective contribution.

are not as good as line drawings. The problem here seems to have been whether to use type and line or reverse and half tones. The latter were decided upon, probably because it was felt that the strips would increase the prominence of the space, which is four tens, by the way. Set together so that star and title joined, this would give a black band that would cut off from the rest of the type, but by splitting it up and using a cut on the right to drop down, the entire space is practically framed by the two cuts and the reverse strips. It is a workmanlike job throughout, though we do not like so much all capitals.

More Fancy Letters Spoil Display Value

Here's another good argument in favor of type for displaying a title. This is from the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland and offers a good proportion of type talk, with line cuts for the chief characters instead of halftone blotches, but the artist has lettered the title and with an outline letter he gets about a tenth the value of a similar sized letter in honest bold face type. Sometimes hand lettering will help a title display, but this is merely a slight departure from a regular outline letter, and even an outline type of the same size would have been better and a bold would have been greatly to be preferred. It might be suggested that since Arliss is the star and since his name will sell above the others that his picture should have been larger than the others. This could very easily be done without material interference with the remainder of the layout, and Arliss in this fascinating character is so well remembered from his stage presentation of the same role that not to make fullest use of both title and star is to throw away money. the space with a mess of type message above and below. The handling of the type display is capitally done, though good type display is too characteristic of the present Stillman spaces to call for especial mention. This layout would be noteworthy if it came from some cities. It is not a poor display from any angle, but it is not as good as most of the recent Stillman appeals and is capable of material improvement without much work. The selling talk is mighty nice writing. The space is 150 by 4; a curtailed quarter page. This is larger than most cities use, but Cleveland is getting back to the large spaces though it has not yet come to the half pages used a few years ago.

evidently a plan book cut. It has been set to the left of a panel because the figure faces that way, and it gives an effect that could not be bettered were the cut specially made to fit this particular space. The credit line in the circle, which has come almost to be a Paramount trademark is replaced by type where the circle would have been much better, but apart from this the result is excellent, though the cut does not come up very well. A space such as this is to be preferred to one carrying two to four single column figures. But one of these days we shall welcome with shouts of joy an advertisement in which appeal is made on Miss Swanson's acting as well as her gowns. Her acting may have been a joke in the earlier days, but lately she has shown such decided improvement that it would be well to call attention to her work.

but we think it is too meaningless to do any ticket peddling. The space might better have been used to get a larger display for the lines crowded over to the left. These are large enough to be legible as they stand but with space at command, it would have been better layout to use only the one cut and swell these lines. This seems to be an all too common error about cuts. Too many agents lay out their work to get in all the cuts they can accumulate. They seem to feel that cuts will sell. They seldom do, and surely not when they do not get over a real idea. One good cut helps in that it gets attention to the space. If it is characteristic of the story, as in the present instance, it may help sell the story though its own appeal in addition to getting attention for the type, but it is seldom that two cuts will sell a penny better than one, and to use a second where the one is as good as the single figure is simply to throw away either money or space, or both. Get one good cut, put it where it will show to the best advantage, and then ride on that cut. It's much the better way.

policy will clean up a lot of money with a fifteen hour run each day, and even at the heavy advertising costs in Chicago it probably paid well. The open letter is no longer the startling novelty it was a few years ago, but it can still go into a page of small displays, in which no house gets much more than 200 lines and hog the attention. On a crowded page, heavy with hand lettering and solid frames and all of the other devices for making small spaces seem large, this stands out like a monument on a prairie, the first thing you see when you come to the page and the last thing to be seen as you leave the division. It will be noted that there is comparatively little of the space given the story itself. The premiere, the director, the grind and the stars are all more important selling points than the story itself and so these are sold over the play itself because they will sell more through offering unknown factors. People know the director and players and are more apt to buy them than the story, so the Orpheum puts its weight on these points, while not neglecting the plot. It is well planned in spite of its apparent simplicity. Every word is weighed, as it should be where words cost money.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

THE exhibitor has his choice of presenting Warner Brothers' picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel either as "Lucretia Lombard," the original title of the book, or as "Flaming Passion."

AND therein lies a most emphatic answer to the horde of lay and newspaper critics who have taken motion picture producers harshly to task for changing titles of plays and books when the latter are made into screen productions.

WE stress the importance of this idea of changing titles in this department largely because we believe that a well known title is bought chiefly because of its supposed advertising value. But we are not going into a lengthy discourse as to the comparative merits of an "original" title as opposed to a "box office" title. All we are interested in is advertising and advertising values.

We don't know how many copies of "Lucretia Lombard" were sold or how many persons read the book. But we do know that to the large majority of fans the title "Lucretia Lombard" means little or nothing. There is no denying, however, that Kathleen Norris' name means a lot at the box office. The question is, therefore, how much more does the title "Flaming Passions" mean in an advertising sense than the title "Lucretia Lombard?"

It will be interesting to learn just what percentage of exhibitors choose the original title and what percentage choose to present the picture under its "box office" title.

This six-sheet on Mae Murray's forthcoming Metro production adapts itself particularly for use as a marquee cutout. The single figure may also be used alone as lobby cutout. Other posters in the line also are good for cutouts.

UNDER Warner Brothers' plan the choice of title is put up squarely to the exhibitor, and the degree in which the plan meets favor with exhibitors may be a gauge to producers in the future as to what course to pursue regarding titles—and may be a means of proving to the critics just whose "fault" it is that titles are changed.

THIS is the first time, to our knowledge, that a picture has been released under a choice of titles, with the exception of a state right picture issued some months ago, which did not get such a national distribution as the Warner release is assured.

The decision to give exhibitors the option as to the title under which to present their picture was a last-minute proposition with the Warner executives, we are informed, and for that reason there is only a limited amount of advertising matter available under the title "Flaming Passion."

Included in this latter is a twenty-four-sheet, a six-sheet, a three-sheet and a one-sheet, as well as a special slide. There is also ready, of course, a special main title and a special trailer. These are not illustrated or mentioned in the press book, due to

Famous Stars Tell Who Is The Meanest Man They Know

Cut No 4. Cut. 3½ Mat. 10c

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Oct.—I had often read of the different means employed by actors and actresses to put themselves in the moods of their characters. And so when I heard that Bert Lytell was making "The Meanest Man in the World," I wondered just what, if anything, he did to make himself feel mean. Everyone knows what a kindly chap Bert is, so I knew he would have to do some fine acting to register meanness.

I trailed him to the Principal Pictures Corporation studios, where I say some dirt my eyes as I wandered on Stage Four. To the tune of "Lenore" by the Montmartre Jazz Orchestra, Bert was fox-trotting with Blanche Sweet, who plays opposite him in the picture. It was between scenes and everyone was in a gay mood. Bert told me later that Eddie Cline, the director, believes firmly in maintaining high spirits at all times on a comedy set—that the effect of genial moods on comedy artists' acting is most noticeable.

Interviewer Feels Mean

So, while the property boys were re-dressing the set for the next scene, the orchestra was entertaining the cast. I felt like the meanest girl in the world for intruding business into this fun, but Bert ran true to form, was his gracious, charming self, and put me at my ease at once.

"Oh, yes, yes," he told me with a deep frown. "I practiced being mean every minute of the day. I did some of the meanest things you ever heard of. I got up an hour earlier every day and read my neighbor's morning paper. I cut my wife's allowance in half. I made her re-trim last season's hats and dye her old dresses. I stole pennies from blind men and collected a nickel from everyone who used my telephone. I charged my neighbors dues on the books they borrowed of me. I stopped giving tips. I disheartened the servants and made my wife do the housework, and washing. I wrote anonymous letters to my friends and told them what I thought of them. I drove my automobile through mud puddles and splashed pedestrians. I chopped up my uncle's wooden leg and used it for kindling.

"Help!" I cried. "I don't believe one word you've said. Now, do be serious and give me some pointers on what a movie star does to make himself feel he's part. This role is such an unusual one—for a hero—that I that by virtue of composition and subject matter particularly lend themselves to advertising and poster layouts, as well as to box office angles that help sell theatre seats.

Actors Tell Who Is Meanest Man

Here are the opinions of some well-known screen artists on "the meanest man in the world":

Blanche Sweet:
The man who takes money out of the blind man's cup.

hoped you would have some interesting secrets to disclose to your fans.

"It is evident you have never seen the play," he said, seemingly, and correctly. "I'll explain it."

"This fellow in the story is not really mean at all! Far from it. He is so soft-hearted and human that he cannot get any business. He is a lawyer with a million friends but not a single client. A friend of his, another lawyer, with a flourishing business, tells him that if he wants to succeed he must be mean, as mean as he can be, and then wish he were meaner. He tries to do this, but it happens that the first time he tries it, his victim turns out to be a beautiful young lady who owns a lot of money.

Falls in Love

"Well, he falls in love with her and has a terrible time trying to convince her that he really isn't mean and was only trying it as an experiment. She believes him eventually and things work out so well that it isn't necessary for him to practice meanness any more. So you see I am not the meanest man in the world at all.

"Now there is a 'dirty guy' in this story. He is the kind of a fellow who would take candy from a child. He tries to rob a helpless orphan girl whose father had been his benefactor. He endeavors to ruin her business so that he can foreclose a mortgage which he holds. You might see him," Bert suggested.

"Who is the mean man?" I inquired.

"There he is, over there; Carl Stockdale, one of the kindliest men I know. So it goes; fellows like myself, of immeasurable shortcomings, are cast for 'hero' parts, while gentle characters like Mr. Stockdale are given roles of this mean kind. It would seem that we best portray that which we are not."

Reproduction of the newspaper feature story in the "Meanest Man" press sheet. An idea carried out by First National on every release. Good newspaper stuff, say we—the sort that should get lots of free space.

the fact that the press book was completed before the decision to release with an option of title was reached.

AND in passing we might mention that the press book prepared on "Lucretia Lombard" is fairly comprehensive. It includes the usual high-class line-up of aids furnished by Warner Brothers, among which are one or two clever novelties and exploitation ideas.

We also have on our desk one of the de luxe books issued on this subject. It fully lives up to the reputation set by its predecessors, and has some particularly striking dramatic stills.

Speaking of stills reminds us of the news item this week to the effect that Eric Von Stroheim has "shot" exactly 648 stills on his forthcoming Goldwyn production, "Greed." Of course this is an extraordinary number of stills to "shoot" on any picture, but it recalls to our mind the fact that stills have not improved much lately.

There are only comparatively few directors in the business who realize the value of stills—who realize that a good set of stills often means considerable added money in the gross of a picture.

Some of the best stills for advertising purposes come out of Universal City, where, we understand, a certain number of stills, especially on big productions, are "shot" solely for the use of the advertising department—stills

THE Independents seem to be right up with the pace-makers when it comes to press books and advertising aids on pictures. We have on our desk a press book issued by Monogram Pictures Corporation on "The Mask of Lopez." The work of Tom North, the book shows a keen sense of showmanship on the part of its maker, and we know of few Westerns that have received a better promotional send-off than is given this initial Monogram release. Newspaper ads, posters, slides, oil paintings (of which there are eight), etc., are of high calibre, and the exploitation suggestions can hold their own with the best of them.

A RATHER unique exploitation bulletin has been issued by First National on "The Meanest Man in the World." It is in the form of a sixteen-page booket, and is sent out under the signature of Sol Lesser, of West Coast Theatres, Inc., who tells "How I Am Going to Put Over 'The Meanest Man in the World'."

In the pages of the booklet Mr. Lesser reviews virtually the entire campaign prepared by First National, with a few additions of his own. He goes into extreme detail, explaining the use of every aid. Reproductions of posters, ads, etc., are contained in the pamphlet, and the personal note of from-exhibitor-to-exhibitor helps make it sound sincere.

THINKING of First National reminds us of two outstanding items issued as part of their regular work. One is a feature story which is a part of every press sheet. This feature story is unusual in that it is a real newspaper feature story, and has not the usual strong taint of press agentry. The other item is a syndicate service of paragraphs written by Matt Taylor, which include items on stars of other companies as well as on First National stars.

Warner Brothers' last-minute decision to give the exhibitor the option of presenting the picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel either as "Lucretia Lombard" or "Flaming Passion" resulted in the preparation of optional twenty-four sheets, which are reproduced herewith. There are also available a "Flaming Passion" six-sheet, three-sheet, one-sheet and trailer. These are not mentioned or illustrated in the press sheet.

"The Eternal City"

Modernized Version of Hall Caine Novel Is Pictorially Beautiful and Has Strong Audience Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In screening "The Eternal City," Sir Hall Caine's celebrated novel which was written many years ago, the story, with the consent and collaboration of the author, has been brought up to date and we find the hero, David, as a leader of the Fascisti in their successful struggle with the "Reds." There are shots of Mussolini, the leader, and even a flash of the King of Italy, as well as scenes showing the triumph of the Fascisti.

Against this thoroughly modernized background we follow the tempestuous romance of David and Roma to its ultimate happy outcome. While many who have read the book may probably regret the changes in the story, for the large number who are unfamiliar with it, the bringing of the action up to the present time and having it deal with events which have been widely publicized in the press will add additional elements of interest.

"The Eternal City" is a big production and one which should have a strong audience appeal. There is a strong love story which reminds one of the old adage that true love never runs smooth; the element of patriotism is also an outstanding one, and the point that Rome is "the eternal city" is strikingly brought out, for against the ruins of another civilization we see the action of modern romance and political upheaval.

There is effective drama in the romance of David and Roma, and in the conflict between Bonelli, who is behind the Reds, and David, as a leader of the Fascisti, both loving Roma. There is excitement and thrills in the big, swirling mobs as they rush through the streets of Rome, and suspense in the scene where they entirely fill the ruins of the coliseum awaiting David, who has been trapped by Bonelli.

In filming this production, which First National is distributing, an American cast was sent to Italy under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, with the result that the backgrounds are absolutely authentic. Great care was used in their selection and the scenes have been beautifully photographed with the result that they form a beautiful and striking point in the appeal of the picture.

The action of the picture is concentrated in the hands of but few characters. Barbara LaMarr as Roma does effective emotional work and was an excellent selection for the role. Bert Lytell gives a good portrayal of the role of David, while Lionel Barrymore in the unsympathetic heavy role of Bonelli gives a fine performance. Entirely satisfactory is Richard Bennett as the whimsical scapegrace Bruno and Montagu Love as a prominent "Red."

Cast

Donna Roma ..... Barbara LaMarr
Baron Bonelli ..... Lionel Barrymore
David Rossi ..... Bert Lytell
Bruno ..... Richard Bennett

Based on novel by Hall Caine.
Scenario by Onida Bergere.
Directed by George Fitzmaurice.
Length, 7,800 feet.

Story

David, a waif, is taken in tow by Bruno, a tramp, and is later adopted by Roma's father, as the little girl wants a playmate. Bruno is given a job in the vineyard. When the great war breaks out, David and Bruno join the army and David is reported as dead. Roma, with a talent for sculpture, accepts help from Baron Bonelli, goes to Rome, and as Roma Valonna achieves great success. David returns and is unable to locate her; joining the Fascisti, he becomes Mussolini's right hand man in his campaign against the Reds, who are causing strikes and terror. David, believing the Valonna woman is Bonelli's mistress, denounces her. She goes to David, denies the accusation, and they make up. Bonelli, who is secretly the power behind the Reds, determines to break up this affair. He tells Roma it is he who is responsible for her success and arranges with the Reds to capture Rossi and cripple the Fascisti movement. In a fight Rossi kills Bonelli and, leading the Fascisti, entirely overpowers the Reds. Roma takes blame for Bonelli's murder, thereby convincing David she has not betrayed him. David hastens to shoulder the blame himself, but is pardoned for his service to Italy, and he and Roma finally find happiness.

Universal Production for Hoot Gibson Keeps Up Fast Pace of Entertaining Action

Between the Hollywood scenes in the first half and the Sheik atmosphere in the last, this picture keeps up a highly entertaining trend of action. Hoot Gibson is at his best. This attraction is above the average program picture and should please beyond the star's usual clientele.

In addition to a good supporting cast, a number of screen celebrities are seen. A light touch of comedy, broadening now and then into burlesque, colors the entire picture and makes it very agrecable entertainment. Clever subtitles add to the amusement.

The hero's experiences in the making of various moving pictures which he succeeds in ruining are full of the awkward blunders that make Hoot Gibson effective. As a Roman guard, he has one or two really hilarious scenes. Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry, Reginald Denny, Hobart Henley and King Baggot, Edward Sedgwick and Laura La Plante are seen in studio scenes for brief moments. They increase the picture's appeal and have no obtrusive effect on the actual trend of the story which is entertaining from start to finish. The desert scenes and the seige of the town furnish a picturesque and melodramatic close. Billie Dove, playing opposite the star is charming and beautiful and the picture has all the important factors of a popular attraction.

"Vincennes"

Intensely Interesting Subject Is Third Number of Pathe's Historical Series

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

One of the deeply affecting situations in history gives this third number of the "Chronicles of America" series a great realistic force. It is another credit to the producers, the Yale University Press. It shows a splendid appreciation of the drama in the development of America, which, without the slightest resort to hokum, is tremendously appealing and thrilling.

The gallant campaign of George Rogers Clark, who faced the opposition of the British and the Indians in claiming the Northwest for America, is an intensely interesting subject as treated here. In the first reel the dangers of the proposed expedition are suggested in an impressive incident. A man, accompanied by his wife and two sons, proceed on horseback to make their home in the West against the advice of friends. Only one of the party, the elder son, lives to tell of the Indian massacre which befalls the family.

From then on, the greater issue of the nation's progress claims the interest. Clark's expedition to Vincennes, undertaken in the dead of winter with miles of swamp land to traverse, hunger, sickness and Indian treachery to contend with, and finally the fight with the British who were in possession of Vincennes, is a picture that no one should miss. Leslie Austin gives a splendid interpretation of this role. Robert Gaillard is a commanding, interesting figure as the British Military Governor, Henry Hamilton, and a brief impressive glimpse of Patrick Henry is afforded by the performance of William Walcott.

"Vincennes," in three reels, is shorter than the first two of the series, but includes fully the same amount of dramatic interest and action.

"Anna Christie"

First National Version of Big Stage Success Has Unpleasant Theme But Is Intensely Dramatic

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Eugene O'Neill's play, "Anna Christie," which was a big success on the stage in New York and which created considerable discussion because of its unusual theme and treatment, has been transferred to the screen by Thomas H. Ince and is being presented by First National.

The theme is not a pleasant one and the story deals with the lowest elements of mankind, the very dregs of society, and of primal passions of sex, with the locale along the waterfront of a big city, in a saloon and aboard a coal barge. The characters are a sailor, who neglects his family, his daughter, whom he believes to be innocent but who has been betrayed by her own cousin and tasted the dregs of life, a woman of bad reputation who is the companion of the girl's father, and a big, burly, boasting, heavy-drinking sailor who falls in love with the girl.

Such surroundings and characters form the basis of a tremendously dramatic story. Conflict of wills and emotions which forms the groundwork of drama is present, in every move and situation. There is hardly a moment during the entire story when there is not strong drama with continual conflict between the girl, her father and her lover.

It is a picture that will undoubtedly appeal to those who are willing to subordinate all other considerations, such as the unpleasantness of the story, its degraded atmosphere, its bare dealing with the seamy side of life, for its theme is a broad one and there is no mistaking the purport of the story. Many will not like and will even be shocked by the whole theme and particularly with the scene where the brow-beaten girl is followed to her room by her degenerate cousin and the clear inference of the scenes immediately following.

Practically no changes have been made in transferring the story to the screen and it would appear that the success of the picture has been staked on the tremendously dramatic story. It is a picture that should be given unusually careful consideration by an exhibitor before presenting it to his audience that he may decide whether it is the type of production which his patrons desire.

The picture is portrayed by an excellent cast. Blanche Sweet, who is featured, is an excellent type for the girl and gives a fine performance in a role that is not always sympathetic. William Russell is excellent as the blustering sailor lover, while Eugenie Besserer is unusually realistic as the degraded woman of the water-front. George Marion, who played the same role in the stage version, is cast as the girl's father and is exceptionally fine. His work is a delight.

Martha .....Eugenie Besserer

Based on Eugene O'Neill's play.

Length, 7,631 feet.

Story

Chris, a Swedish seaman, remains away from home for long periods, spending for drink the money that would take him home. His wife, wearied of waiting, comes with her baby Anna to relatives in Minnesota. Years pass; Chris, who in the meantime has not seen Anna, is captain of a coal barge. Anna writes she is coming to see him, and he expects to find her an innocent, pure girl. On arrival, she gets in conversation with Martha, a woman with whom Chris is having a disreputable affair, and tells her how she had been betrayed by her own cousin and then lived with another man until she had come to hate all men and was sick of the world. At Martha's suggestion she keeps this from her father and goes with him on a voyage on the barge. Chris, blaming "the old devil sea" for all his troubles, determines Anna shall not marry a sailor.

A wreck brings four men to seek refuge on the barge; one is Matt Burke, and despite everything, love ripens between them. Anna, rather than tell of her past, decides to go away. Chris and Matt get in a fight, and, disgusted, she reveals her past. Both leave her alone and go to drown their sorrows in drink. Chris saves her from suicide and later Burke, still under the influence of drink, returns and says no matter what she has been he still loves her and wants to marry her.

"Twenty-One"

Richard Barthelmess' Latest for First National Is a Production of Only Average Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Richard Barthelmess' newest First National production, "Twenty-One," is entirely different in type from "The Fighting Blade," "The Bright Shawl" or any of his recent pictures. It is by no means a pretentious production, and much of the action follows along familiar lines. To some this may prove a disappointment while others will welcome the change.

Barthelmess, as in his earlier starring pictures, appears in the role of a boy who is the victim of circumstances, but this time he is a rich youth whose mother makes a mollycoddle of him much to the disgust of his father. There is a romance with a girl far beneath him on the social ladder and the distinctive angle of the picture is the playing up of this point that he cannot go ahead and marry the girl anyway until he is twenty-one as his father would have the ceremony annulled. This gives rise to a situation in which the boy becomes a taxi driver and in a sequence which is out-and-out melodrama, he saves his father from thugs who have lured him to a garage.

Though the star has a congenial role and gets considerable sympathy, the story does not seem quite worthy of his talents, and despite the very good work of Dorothy Mackaill and a well-selected cast, and the direction of John S. Robertson, the production as a whole is somewhat disappointing.

Much of the story is interesting but at times, and particularly toward the end, the interest drops and the action becomes commonplace. Possibly under less capable auspices the picture would prove more satisfying, but we have gotten to expect more from Barthelmess and John S. Robertson than is brought forth in this picture. As it stands, it is but little better than the average program picture.

When Julian McCullough is seven, his parents come to the parting of the ways, but his mother agrees to avoid a scandal provided she can raise Julian without interference from his father. She raises him as a mollycoddle and when at the age of twenty his manhood begins to awaken he finds a kindred spirit in a poor girl, Lynnie. Returning from a dance, the car breaks down and they remain at an inn, registering as brother and sister.

Much to the disgust of his father, Julian expresses a desire to marry Lynnie, but his father threatens to annul the marriage and also arranges to pay another suitor to marry her. Julian makes his living by driving a cab and finally saves his father's life when he is attacked by thugs in the other suitor's garage. This causes a reconciliation between father and son and when Julian recovers from the injury received in the fight, he finds Lynnie waiting for him, as it is his twenty-first birthday.

Paramount Introduces Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Who Promises to be a Success

Press-agented as "the real American boy of the screen," Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. steps forth and to a charming degree makes good this tremendous reputation. He is a new type among juvenile stars. His picture makes a great appeal to youth and has something that all the fans will enjoy.

While his famous name will no doubt attract widely upon the occasion of his initial appearance, the young star is possessed of a personality and ability that, once introduced, needs no "prop" whatever. He is natural, genuine and altogether winning. His performance shows a degree of poise and good taste that will swing public opinion at once in his favor.

Richard Harding Davis' story, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent" furnishes material that is breezy and entertaining It transports the boy from a college dilemma to Turkey, a setting for much intrigue and action. It is all brightened by bits of good comedy and characteristic "Americanisms" that will be popular. Sentiment, too, is an important factor. The old college professor who flunks young Stephen in history, thereby losing his position and the rose-covered cottage where his sweet wife and he lived for years, is affectingly played by James O. Barrows.

The love element is absent but not conspicuously so. It is a boy's story but one that both sexes will enjoy, because of its wholesomeness and action. The cast has valuable personalities such as Theodore Roberts, Noah Beery, Frank Currier little Pat Moore and Harry Myers. Much of the picture's appeal is due to Joseph Henabery's excellent directing, and to fine photography.

Stephen Harlow, Jr., fails to graduate at Stillwater College, due to Prof. Gilman, who flunks him in history, despite Harlow, Sr., who has endowed the school. Harlow, Sr., is furious, sends the boy to Turkey to learn history first hand and then has Gilman fired. His son learns of this and decides to reinstate Gilman, who is not to blame. He gets mixed up with some Turkish revolutionists, saves the Sultan's son and wins the Grand Cross of the Crescent, which he sends to Gilman, supposedly for the books on Turkish history which he has written. Gilman is reinstated, Stephen returns and his father is proud of him.

Paramount Releases Six-Reel Feature Showing Adventuresome Cruise Around the World

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A honeymoon cruise among the South Sea Islands as undertaken by Commodore and Mrs. A. Y. Gowen brings the spectator face to face with some new degrees of savagery and many interesting sights. Commodore

Gowen of Cleveland, Ohio, made this sixteen months' trip, encircling the globe in a 98-foot motor boat.

Although the trip included a visit to a number of points that are centers of civilization, the main emphasis is upon the extreme savage types. Some of these are weird and terrifying in the extreme. For the average person these types seem to have a compelling fascination. Others, probably comprising a smaller class, will find more entertainment in the shots of Java for instance. There are a number of attractive glimpses of this city. A dance by small native girls is one of the most colorful scenes in the film and by far the most charming.

Among the places at which the "Speejacks" stopped are Samoa, Tahiti, the Paumotu Islands, Java, Genoa and New Guinea, and Australia. The Australian Aborigines show striking evidences of some of the most undreamed of brutality. The Bird Hunters of New Guinea are another savage race.

A personal note is more or less evident and adds a genial touch to the atmosphere. The spectator is made to feel something of the adventuresome spirit of the "Speejacks" cruisers and follows their voyage with an interest that at times approaches enthusiasm. Ira J. Ingraham, former head cameraman for Burton Holmes, was the photographer.

"When Odds Are Even"

Good Program Feature with William Russell as Star Presented by Fox

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

One of the best Fox vehicles which has recently been afforded William Russell is "When Odds Are Even." The star has been well directed by James Flood in an entertaining story of adventure and love interest. His admirers and in fact any average program audience should enjoy it.

The conflict is between two mining companies for the possession of an opal mine on a South Sea isle. The ocean voyage, the dramatic incidents on the island and the climax, consisting of the race to the mine, afford a well-constructed picture with good suspense. Good types and a fairly convincing atmosphere help to make these South Sea scenes interesting. There is enough heavy action to supply necessary energy to the picture, although William Russell has fewer fistic encounters than usual. He has, nevertheless, a strong role, which is almost sure to please all, and especially those who like to see him in the conventional rather than Western parts.

He is supported chiefly by Dorothy Devore, who plays with a zest quite in keeping with the rather adventurous character of the action. The other characters are well drawn and the picture should please average tastes anywhere.

Jack Arnold, by a last minute leap, makes the same steamer that is carrying a rival company to an opal mine on the island of Pago Tai. His rival, Clive Langdon, is accompanied by his niece, Caroline, and her fiance, Neal Travis. Caroline pays Jack's fare and they grow deeply interested in each other. Her uncle and Neal play upon her infatuation with Jack and trap him, trying to prevent him from reaching the mine. He is too much for them, however, and wins the friendship of the mine owner, which enables him to obtain the option. Caroline of course finds that her love for Neal is only a makeshift and gives him up for Jack.

"Wild Bill Hickok"

William S. Hart Returns in Paramount Drama of the West of Fifty Years Ago

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Bill Hart, his two guns and a horse, are once more a powerful combination in giving this star's admirers what they have been awaiting for two years. Despite a large and capable cast, it is really a one-man picture. Expert gunplay settles the disputes—and there are enough to give the picture ample suspense and excitement. Men, especially, will find it entertaining.

"Wild Bill Hickok" is a character who distinguishes himself to the extent of being commended by President Lincoln. A few authentic characters, such as Lincoln, Custer, "Bat" Masterson, Calamity Jane and others, are introduced to help give the picture a background. Wild Bill is told to move on from his Western shack by a gang of bandits—a threat which he accepts of course as a challenge. Hence the first big thrill of the picture shows Bill saving himself, his horse and his cabin by dynamic gun play.

His next feat is the cleaning up of a wild town. The battle is spectacularly staged with Bill standing alone in the street spotlight and the gang firing at him from behind barrels. The suspense is well managed, although his various achievements will impress some as being superhuman. His career is terminated because of blindness coming on, but when his arch-enemy remarks that Bill is losing his nerve, he has another chance for heroics, and in an amazingly swift battle of guns, he kills his opponent. There is good love interest, although the ending brings about a separation. The poker game introduces some effective comedy along with a strain of human interest. Altogether the picture should bring satisfaction to the houses where William S. Hart's reputation is high.

"Crooked Alley"

Laura La Plante Is Appealing in Featured Role in Universal Crook Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The story of a crook's plot for revenge against a judge of the criminal court is told in rather slow-moving style in this Universal drama. Its motive is not entirely convincing. Laura La Plante is appealing and where the plot will not be subjected to too close scrutiny, the picture may be a fair attraction.

Its greatest drawback is the slow, ponderous action. It has the atmosphere of tragedy throughout, with scarcely any relief except for Laura La Plante's pleasing personality. The theme does not seem to warrant five reels of this. It is not more serious than countless others that have been treated with a more human balance of comedy and occasional lightness.

The death of a notorious crook in prison is the actuating incident. The early scenes touching upon this are dismal and long drawn out and form the basis for Boston Blackie's revenge against the Judge who would not waver from the law sufficiently to allow the man to die in his own home. Things are complicated when Blackie's girl actually falls in love with the Judge's son whom she is to trick. There is a lack of realism throughout that will hinder the picture's popularity with a critical audience.

Fight Against Tax

New York Exhibitors Urge Congressmen to Act

The first big step taken by exhibitors and film exchanges in central and northern New York, in an effort to bring about the removal of the admission tax, occurred during the last few days when letters were sent out from Albany to every exhibitor as far west as Syracuse, north to the Canadian line, and south to Poughkeepsie and Binghamton, calling upon them, individually and collectively, to present the matter squarely to their respective congressmen. No effort will be spared in the fight which central and northern New York exhibitors will make to bring about a repeal of the present law.

While the exhibitors in the Albany section of New York State are unorganized with the exception of those in the Capital City, it is possible that a meeting may soon be called at some central point in order to present a solid front which will include every exhibitor within the district.

The Albany Film Board of Trade already has joined hands with the exhibitors in the campaign.

500 Showings

"The Covered Wagon" celebrated its 500th performance at the Criterion Theatre Wednesday evening, November 21. A gala performance was given and souvenirs were presented to the members of both afternoon and evening audiences. This remarkable picture opened at the Criterion Theatre on March 16 last and has played to capacity audiences at practically every showing in the past eight months. There has not been the slightest falling off in the attendance and it is safe to say that the picture will remain at the Criterion until next spring.

Harry H. Buzbaum, who has been district supervisor for Paramount for a period of four years, has joined First National forces in a similar capacity. Mr. Buxbaum's new duties become effective immediately.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Return Engagement

"Ponjola," Sam E. Rork's picturization of the novel of Cynthia Stockley, is one of the few pictures to play a return engagement in Los Angeles within a month after its premiere. After opening at Loew's State, the picture was brought back to the Alhambra Theatre for an additional week's run to satisfy the public's interest.

Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood play the featured roles.

"Elephant" Special a Hit Abroad

Pathe reports great interest already aroused in the two-reel special "Why Elephants Leave Home" which is described as a vaudeville, wild west show and circus combined. The production ran for twenty weeks at Moss' Empire Theatre in London and was hailed in England as a big success. It was filmed in Ceylon under government auspices and the scenes were secured during one of the great elephant round-ups which occur at intervals of from three to seven years. In addition to thrills, there are many interesting sidelights.

"Flowing Gold" Cast Completed

Richard Walton Tully has commenced production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" for First National release. Other prominent players engaged, in addition to Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nilsson, who will play the leads, include Josephine Crowell, who will play Ma Briskow; Bert Woodruff, cast for Pa Briskow; John Roche, who will be Buddy, and Charles A. Sellon for Tom Parker. There are several minor roles yet to be cast. Joseph De Grasse will be the director, and the picture will be released by First National.

What He Did to Society!

C. B. King, manager of the Crown Theatre, at Mobile, Ala., put across a publicity stunt during the three days that he ran the Hodkinson picture, "The "Drivin' Fool."

Under "Personals" in his local paper he inserted the following teaser ad: "Please, Sweet Daddy, go just a little faster so they can call you 'The Drivin' Fool'."

Harlan Will Star in "Poisoned Paradise"

As a reward for his excellent work in "The Virginian," Kenneth Harlan is to have the star part in "Poisoned Paradise," the story of Monte Carlo and Paris, a Preferred Picture that is just being started by B. P. Schulberg in his studios in Los Angeles.

Kenneth Harlan has played a wide range of parts in his recent Preferred Pictures. He was a young aviator in "The Broken Wing," a New York East Side scrapper in "April Showers" and a sturdy, strong-willed cowboy in "The Virginian."

In "Poisoned Paradise," a novel by Robert W. Service, he leads a life of adventure at Monte Carlo, finally coming into possession of a secret that seemingly gives him power to break the bank at the gambling resort.

The story is said to be the first authentic description of Monte Carlo ever written. Robert W. Service, the author, has lived in Monte Carlo for years and his novel tells the truth about the lives of the gamblers and notorious women of the famous resort.

Clara Bow, who first leaped into fame in "Down to the Sea in Ships" and who has added to her reputation by her work in "Maytime" and "Black Oxen," plays the girl from Paris.

The picture will be directed by Gasnier, who is thoroughly familiar with Monte Carlo.

Tourneur Sees Return of Shorter Features

That shorter feature productions will come back into favor among producers as a result of the present condition of the producing industry, is the contention of Maurice Tourneur, leading director, following a recent survey of producing and exhibiting conditions.

"The present slump in the producing industry has proved to film executives that it is a fallacy to make a so-called big production for the sake of achieving a physically big picture," says Mr. Tourneur.

"Splendor, tremendous sets and long footage will never prove good sales points to either the exhibitor or the public in the distribution of pictures. Big sets must have a reason for being in the picture aside from the belief that they offer an excuse for higher film rentals and higher admission prices.

"Since my affiliation with M. C. Levee in the production of First National pictures we have enforced a definite policy of telling our stories in six or seven reels. This policy has saved us from making the mistakes that have led others into trouble. It is my belief that this policy will be general in the producing industry within the next two months."

Many Exhibitors Think Highly of "Going Up"

Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" is "the best box office bet in years," is the opinion of L. B. Gross, manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal. Just after the beginning of what has proved a highly successful run, Mr. Gross informed J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors.

Showing at the Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac, Wis., "Going Up" scored such a hit that its run was extended, said E. C. Prinsen, the manager of that theatre. Manager H. S. Ford of the Olympic Theatre, Wichita Falls, telegraphed to Associated's branch manager in Dallas: "Douglas MacLean in 'Going Up' packing them in matinee and night."

I. M. Binnard, president and manager of the Liberty, Lewiston, Idaho, wrote to the branch sales manager in Spokane: "When we previewed 'Going Up' I was, as you know, very enthusiastic and thoroughly sold on the picture. I feel certain that 'Going Up' will prove to be one of the very finest entertainment pictures released this year by any company."

Breaks Records

"'Why Worry' at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre broke every record for the house during the first and second weeks of its showing and is now on the way to a new high-water mark for the third week," reads a dispatch received this week from Los Angeles.

The telegram adds that the new Harold feature for Pathe has proved a sensation and "has surpassed all of Grauman's expectations."

Reviewers Praise Hodkinson Film

The historical romance, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," built around the love story of that famous Englishman, Lord Nelson, has completed two very successful runs at the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md., and the City Theatre, New York.

The Baltimore Evening Sun says: "Here in all probability is about the loveliest woman the screen has ever brought us." The New York Daily News says: "The Hodkinson people have really got hold of something good in 'The Affairs of Lady Hamilton.' * * * And in it is the most beautiful English movie actress we have ever seen."

Metro Working on Service's Poem

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is the Sawyer-Lubin production which Metro will release in February as part of its extensive new-season schedule. Robert W. Service, who wrote "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," spent many years in the Yukon.

Clarence G. Badger has been selected to direct this production and Barbara La Marr is to portray "the lady known as Lou." Mr. Service is to assist in the production of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," giving Mr. Badger his first-hand knowledge of the Yukon.

Exploitation Aids for "Michael O'Halloran"

Supplementary exploitation aids are now being prepared for the Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran," adapted from Gene Stratton-Porter's novel.

The new booklet contains suggestions for putting across Boys' Week, "Be Square" clubs among boys and tie-ups with merchants on the "Be Square" slogan.

Enrico Guazzoni Arrives with Print of Big Film "Messalina"

Signor Enrico Guazzoni, prominent Italian director, arrived in New York November 9. He brought with him a print of his latest production, "Messalina," which is regarded as one of the most sensational European films of the year. Signor Guazzoni will best be remembered for his magnificent production of "Quo Vadis," one of the first elaborate spectacles to be made. It was released in this country during 1913 and is yet being shown. Signor Guazzoni has placed himself under the management of Ferdinand V. Luporini, who is well known in the film business, with headquarters in the Straus Building.

When questioned regarding conditions in Europe, Signor Guazzoni said: "The situation in the Ruhr has brought about an unsettled condition and it is the hope of everyone that the United States will intervene in order to help to bring about a settlement. In Italy there have been no more strikes since the advent of Mussolini to power. Everyone is working and happy.

"I came to the United States to attend to the sale of 'Messalina' after the re-editing and titling to answer the requirements of the American market. I have many plans regarding future productions but do not care to discuss them at this time. American pictures in Italy are well liked, particularly from the technical point of view. Conditions in Italy as to the production of motion pictures are on the way to improvement, after a period of stagnation which has been beneficial to the industry because it served to eliminate the spurious elements."

The production of "Messalina," following such films as "Cleopatra" and "Julius Caesar," was regarded with great interest by the King and Queen and others of the royal family, as well as the officials of the Italian government. They understood the far reaching advantages of publicity to be derived from the faithful reproduction of the Roman era. They were constant visitors during the construction of the settings and the filming of the scenes and extended all possible co-operation, including the use of the Italian cavalry.

The story of "Messalina" is laid in the year of 12 A. D. at the time when the Roman Empire was at its height. Messalina was a woman of rare beauty but of easy virtue, who lived in the Imperial Palace with her husband Claude, who was nephew to Emperor Caligula and a consul. Caligula was a great tyrant and Messalina took advantage of the hatred of his people to make her husband Emperor. Her friend and companion was an Egyptian princess, until they both fell in love with a young slave, famous as a chariot driver. The jealousy between the two, the plot to outwit each other and the hate of the princess for a young girl, a slave, with whom the driver was in love, brought about intrigue and drama which reached the climax in the death of the princess and Messalina.

The settings are tremendous and perfect as to detail, it is said. Exact reproductions of the arena, the forum and the rostrum were constructed of cement. The exactness of the atmosphere created may be judged by the fact that the minister of public instruction had all pupils taken to the forum so that they could obtain a proper impression of the grandeur of the Roman Empire. Historical societies and foreign students gave lessons there. The largest scene required the services of ten thousand extras. The fights of the gladiators and the uprising of the mobs have been pictured realistically, it is stated.

The picture has been purchased by the Pathe Company of London for England at a big price. It is not to be released until 1924.

ENRICO GUAZZONI

Picture Is Heavily Booked

"Pioneer Trails," Vitagraph Film, was booked in sixty houses for showings in fourteen days in Cleveland, Ohio, beginning October 29. Similar bookings for simultaneous showings in groups of motion picture theatres have been arranged for Toledo and Columbus territories. Special ad-

Ovation Given Young Douglas Fairbanks

The ordeal of having his hand shaken by hundreds of people who pressed forward Sunday evening in the mezzanine of the Rivoli Theatre to congratulate him upon his performance in his first motion picture was almost too much for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. For the truth is, young Doug is a regular, honest-to-goodness American boy and had a good book back at the Algonquin Hotel, which he had left right in the most exciting part, to be dragged over to the Rivoli to see just how New York people were going to like his first Paramount starring picture, "Stephen Steps Out."

Never was a first-night theatre audience more enthusiastic than was the throng that went to the Rivoli to see this young new star in his first screen appearance. Applause was frequent and spontaneous. The World critic said: "It is one of the very truest and best cinema comedies of the year, and it proves that the boy is a natural actor of fine pantomimic ability."

"He has a Fairbanks way with him," said the Tribune. "The impression that he made on the Rivoli audience yesterday was a most favorable one," said Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald.

Although young Fairbanks will not be fourteen for another month, he has much poise.

Work Progressing Rapidly on New Pickford Production

More than one-third of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," Mary Pickford's forthcoming screen production, has been filmed, according to W. W. Kerrigan, business manager for the Mary Pickford company. Over 300 scenes have been shot.

The gigantic gates to Rutland Castle have been duplicated on a stretch of land about forty miles from the Pickford-Fairbanks studio and this location is to be used next, according to present plans.

The cast for this screen version of Charles Major's novel of the same name, includes Allan Forrest, Claire Eamse, Marc McDermott, Anders Randolph, Wilfred Lucas, Eric Mayne, Estelle Taylor, Lottie Pickford Forrest and Malcolm Waite.

Fox December Releases Include 15 Big Films

There are fifteen pictures on the December release program of Fox Film Corporation. This list consists of four special productions, starring respectively, Tom Mix, John Gilbert, Dustin Farnum and Charles Jones; two Imperial Comedies, three Sunshine and two Educationals.

"The Net" is the first of the December specials. It will be released on the second of the month. It is a J. Gordon Edwards production, the story having been taken from a stage play by Maravene Thompson. The cast includes: Roscoe, Raymond Bloomer, Byron Douglas and Claire De Lorez. "You Can't Get Away With It," is set down for release on December 9. Written by Gouverneur Morris, the picture is a Rowland V. Lee production. The cast is headed by Percy Marmont and Betty Bouton.

"Hoodman Blind" is posted for release on December 16. It is the work of Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett. The lead is played by David Butler. Gladys Hulette is in a dual role. Frank Campeau and Marc McDermott have character roles. "Gentle Julia" will be released December 23. Taken from the novel by Booth Tarkington, this story has been transferred to the screen under the direction of Rowland V. Lee. The title role is played by Bessie Love. "Kentucky Days," starring Dustin Farnum, is put down for December 2. The story was written by John Lynch. "Cupid's Fireman," a Charles Jones release, is also booked for distribution December 2. It is founded on "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl" by Richard Harding Davis.

"The Wolf Man," starring John Gilbert, will be released December 9. Frederick and Fanny Hatton wrote the story.

Norma Shearer heads the supporting cast. On December 16 a Tom Mix picture with the temporary title "Eyes of the Forest" will be released. The author is Shannon Fife. "The Income Tax Collector," a Sunshine comedy, will be released December 2; "The Riding Master," December 16, and "Spring Fever," December 30. Imperial Comedy, "Monks A La Mode," is listed for December 23, and the Educationals are: "Johnny's Swordfish," December 9 and "The Canadian Alps," December 23.

Purchases Rights to "The Bandolero"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has bought the picture rights to "The Bandolero," a novel by Paul Gwynne.

Tom Terriss has been engaged to direct it.

"The Thrill Girl" Under Way

After spending several days filming horseback riding scenes and airplane stunts, the Robert Hill company has returned to Universal City to begin the interior scenes on "The Thrill Girl," Laura La Plante's first feature under her new contract with Universal.

Edward Hearn, juvenile character actor, will play the lead opposite Miss La Plante. Others in the cast are William Welsh, Frances Raymond, Albert Hart, Bert Roach, Margaret Cullington, Rolfe Sedan, Fred De Silva and Stanley Blystone.

Rex Beach Shearing

Rex Beach has been spending a good deal of his time lately at the Paramount Long Island studio assisting Lloyd Sheldon in editing and titling the Paramount picture made from his story, "Big Brother."

Preferred Planning Ten Big Productions; Studios Active

Plans for ten special productions, to be filmed as Preferred Pictures in the immediate future, are making the Schulberg Studios in Los Angeles one of the busiest spots on the West Coast.

Filming of three pictures is being started almost simultaneously. 'Poisoned Paradise," from the novel by Robert W. Service, has been begun by Director Gasnier with an all-star cast headed by Clara Bow.

With the completion of continuities, now being prepared, work will begin on "The Breath of Scandal," from the novel by Edwin Balmer, and "White Man," a screen version of George Agnew Chamberlain's novel.

Since the three stories are of widely differing characters, are laid in widely separated territories and involve the construction of settings of an elaborate nature, three armies of carpenters and technical men have been organized for the preliminary tasks that must be completed before cameras begin to grind.

"Poisoned Paradise" will be filmed amid the picturesque luxuries of Monte Carlo and the equally picturesque but not so luxurious slum districts of Paris. In both cases photographic reproductions of the actual districts to be shown have been used in order to make possible as realistic glimpses of Monte Carlo and the French metropolis as if the companies actually had worked abroad.

"White Man" is a drama of the jungle. One of the most interesting of the feats that must be accomplished during its filming is the moving of one of California's famous big trees from its natural habitat to the Schulberg Studios. Other settings include a genuine jungle, which has been located not far below the Mexican border, and a glimpse of the Metropolitan Opera House and its stage in New York.

"The Breath of Scandal," based on Mr. Balmer's story of modern society, required several elaborate American city backgrounds.

The remaining pictures, seven in number, will be filmed as rapidly as the physical requirements can be met, in order to make possible the release on schedule time of the fifteen Preferred Pictures announced as the season's output by this organization.

Noted Bostonians at Brilliant Premiere Given "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" was presented at the Park Theatre in Boston on November 12 last, marking another milestone in its meteoric career.

Its premiere there was as brilliant as those which greeted the appearance of "Scaramouche" in Washington, New York and in other cities. Boston's aristocracy was out in full force. The Park was filled to overflowing early and throughout the entire presentation a big crowd that could not gain admission was waiting outside.

Among those present were Archie Roosevelt, Rudolph Valentino, Charles Hammond Gibson, Nathan Haskell Dole, Desmond Fitzgerald, internationally known art patron; Mrs. Oakes Ames, Philip Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Philip Saltsonstall, Henry R. Warren, Robert D. Andrews, Miss Sally Bradford, Mrs. Oliver Crocker Stevens, Frank H. Beebe, Frank G. Hale and many others socially prominent, as well as representatives from the Cabot, the Courtney and the Curtis families.

Boston is taking a widespread interest in "Scaramouche." Arrangements have been made for the students of the various schools and colleges to come in a body on special nights to study the historical angles of the production. Among the colleges so represented are Harvard, Emerson College, Wellesley, Boston University, the famous Dana Hall School and others.

The Boston press accorded "Scaramouche" enthusiastic praise. Not only did the dramatic motion picture critics devote space to it but the art critics on the various Boston papers praised it highly because of its great artistry.

Vitagraph Film Given Showing

"The Man From Brodney's" was given a pre-release showing for critics of trade and fan publications on Thursday afternoon, November 22. This is the latest production by David Smith, director of "Pioneer Trails," and is a screen adaptation of the famous novel of India Seas.

Records Broken by "Three Ages"

A telegram from C. M. Morrison, manager of the Imperial Theatre at Jacksonville, Fla., to J. J. Burke, Jr., of the Metro Exchange at Atlanta, Ga., records the fact that Buster Keaton's "Three Ages" broke the season's record.

New York Reviewers Laud "Pioneer Trails"

New York City critics joined with those of London, Boston, Chicago and San Francisco in praising Vitagraph's super-feature, "Pioneer Trails," which was shown at the Rivoli Theatre last week. This is a David Smith production, in which Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Otis Harlan have leading roles.

The Evening Sun said: "It is a Western tale depicting the hardships of the early days and its remarkably swift action, expertly directed without a fumble in continuity, combined with pellucid photography, make it worth while inspecting."

New York Evening Journal: "You will be struck with the great beauty of composition of many of the scenes." New York Mail: "The film contained good old 'Western stuff' with fast and furious riding, a runaway stage coach and gun play." Evening World: "It's an enjoyable film and one we think you'll like." The News: "It means Alice Calhoun and Cullen Landis and these two members of the huge film force are by no means in the background when it comes to doing thrill stuff." New York American: "There are gorgeous shots of scenery, thrilling fights and hair raising action." New York Times: "David Smith, who made this film, has selected some really beautiful locations." Morning Telegraph: "This new Vitagraph picture has all the elements of popular success."

War Veterans in Gloria's Next One

World War veterans of four armies, American, French, English and Canadian, will appear on the screen in the Armistice Day scene in Gloria Swanson's latest Paramount picture, "The Humming Bird."

All of the soldiers used in these scenes were bona fide war veterans, many of them being sent to the Paramount studio by the Veterans' Service Bureau of New York.

Release Date Set for "Long Live the King"

"Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's Metro production, is to be released November 25. It is by far the largest and most elaborate picture Jackie has ever appeared in. Massive sets form the background before which Mary Roberts Rinehart's story is enacted.

Among the largest of the sets built at the Metro studios in Hollywood for "Long Live the King" were the enormous castle, a large opera house and a huge cathedral. The castle is a replica of the Castle of Neuschwanstein and occupied some 240,000 square feet of ground. The cathedral duplicates that in Herzegovina and the opera house that in Dresden. These sets are among the largest ever built in Hollywood and give some idea of the stupendous production.

"By far the best thing Jackie Coogan has ever done. His acting is nothing short of marvelous," is a brief excerpt from the Motion Picture News review. "By far the most ambitious production yet made for the juvenile star. Beautiful and lavish settings, splendid direction, a fine supporting cast and a good holding story," said Exhibitor's Herald.

"A big spectacular picture extremely rich in pathos and human interest with delightful comedy touches. Should pack any theatre," is the opinion of Moving Picture World.

School Kids See Dickens Film

Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield," on Broadway, New York, developed into a three weeks' engagement.

So strong was the endorsement of school teachers, and their insistence that pupils should see the presentation, that the B. S. Moss offices issued special tickets, admitting high school students at half price to all matinees this week except Friday and Saturday.

Butte Manager Signs for Metro Films

Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, Butte, Mont., recently signed a contract with the Salt Lake City exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation that goes on record as probably the largest ever put into effect in that territory.

Mr. Davis is one of the best known and best liked showmen in the West. For many years he handled the business of the Pantages Circuit in the State of Montana, in addition to overseeing the management of their various theatres in the territory.

Lewis to Produce

Word has been received from the Coast that Ralph Lewis, the F. B. O. star, will make his own starring vehicles and will enter the production field in the near future. The pictures he has been featured in for the F. B. O. were "In the Name of the Law," "Third Alarm," "Westbound Limited" and "The Mailman."

Exhibitors Praise Viola Dana Films

The first two of Viola Dana's series of five Metro features have already been released. These two, "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code," have again proved, more forcibly than ever, the great popularity of this star and the enormous following she has wherever motion pictures are shown.

"In Search of a Thrill," the third of Miss Dana's pictures for the current Metro program, has already been completed. It was recently reviewed by the critics and met with the same enthusiastic reception as did the other two. The two remaining pictures on Miss Dana's schedule are "The Good Bad Girl" and "Love and Lies." The first named is now in production and will be finished shortly after this appears in print.

Newspaper and trade press critics realize Miss Dana's value as a box office attraction. Excerpts from recent reviews on her Metro features include such lines as these: "Should do well anywhere," "Excellent vehicle," "Wide audience appeal," "Its novelty pep is delightful," "Played role with convincing vim and allurement," "Will go over big," "It is full of whimsical humor," "A clever little comedy," "Well directed."

Metro believes that the three Viola Dana pictures still to come on their 1923-24 program will go over even better than the two already released.

"In search of a Thrill" is an adaptation of "The Spirit of the Road," by Kate Jordan, and is being directed by Oscar Apfel. "The Good Bad Girl," is from Fred Kennedy Myton's story "Angel Face Molly" and is also being directed by Oscar Apfel. "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code" are stories by Rita Weiman, the former directed by Harold Shaw and the latter by Oscar Apfel.

VIOLA DANA

Excerpts from recent reviews prove that the newspaper and trade press critics realize value of the Metro star as a box-office attraction.

Exploitation Aids for "Tiger Rose"

In a message to exhibitors, the Warner Brothers declare that they have issued the most distinctive exploitation aids for "Tiger Rose," the screen adaptation of the famous David Belasco play in which Lenore Ulric is starred, that have ever been available for a Warner Classic.

For all outdoor advertising and exploitation, the Warner organization has supplied some striking and artistic posters. Each one can be utilized as a cut-out, when mounted, and is a sure eye-catcher. There is a beautiful twenty-four sheet, a six-sheet, two three-sheets, two one-sheets and a special banner in colors to be spread across the street or in the lobby. In addition there is a colorful window card that can be utilized throughout the town.

For lobby decoration, first of importance comes the fifteen framed oil paintings, depicting the most striking and tense scenes from the photoplay. Then there is a 14x36 pastel card which can be used for either the lobby or for window displays. An attractive pennant to hang from the markee has also been issued.

A special tie-up with the song, "Tiger Rose," published by F. B. Haviland, New York, affords a splendid opportunity for free advertising from music dealers.

Two Films Renamed by Paramount

Two changes of titles of recently completed productions are announced by Paramount. The William de Mille production adapted from Julian Street's novel, "Rita Coventry," formerly called "Holiday Love," is now "Don't Call It Love."

The Herbert Brenon production, "My Man;" starring Pola Negri, is now called "Shadows of Paris." This is an adaptation of the French stage play, "Mon Homme," by Andre Picard and Francis Carco.

Chaplin's Next Is a Comedy for United Artists

Charles Chaplin is working on his first comedy film for United Artists Corporation. It will be feature length, and Charlie will take the leading part himself. Also he will retain the "baggy breeches, the kinky cane and the diligent derby."

Contrary to his usual procedure, Mr. Chaplin decided there would be no long delay this time between pictures. A few days after he returned to Los Angeles after witnessing the New York premiere of his serious drama, "A Woman of Paris," he announced that he would begin production of his new comedy on November 12.

Alfred Reeves, Chaplin's studio general manager, went right to work assembling the staff. This will include among others, Eddie Sutherland, "Chuck" Reisner and Edward Biby, formerly with the Chaplin staff.

Universal Will Give Prize for Film Title

Universal is appealing to the exhibitors of the country for title suggestions for Baby Peggy's third Universal Jewel production. This picture was made under the working title "Custody of the Child." In order to spur exhibitors to help them in this quest the film company will give $100 for the winning title.

The board of judges of the Baby Peggy Title Contest consists of the editors of the four leading trade papers, an executive of the Universal Pictures Corporation, the president of Century Comedy Corporation and the editor of the Universal Weekly. They are: George Blaisdell, Exhibitors' Trade Review; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News; Robert E. Welsh, Moving Picture World; John S. Spargo, Exhibitors' Herald; P. D. Cochrane, secretary of the Universal Pictures Corporation. Julius Stern, president of the Century Comedy Corporation, and Paul Quick, editor of the Universal Weekly.

The titles submitted will be judged from a box office angle. They should be short enough to appear in electric lights on your marquee; they should have a distinct appeal to all classes and ages; they should suggest the theme of the picture, and they should apply particularly to Baby Peggy.

All exhibitors are eligible to enter the Baby Peggy Title Contest, whether or not they are among the few who have not booked any of her previous releases.

There are no conditions to the contest, except that Universal asks that no exhibitor send more than ten title suggestions, and that all suggestions be in the hands of the Contest Editor, Universal Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York City, before midnight, December 31, 1923.

In case the judges pick a title which has been submitted by more than one exhibitor, each one submitting the title will receive the full amount of the award of $100.

The synopsis of the Baby Peggy picture in question is published in the issue of the Universal Weekly dated December 1, 1923.

Catholic Parish Sees "Robin Hood"

The Rev. William F. Galvin, pastor of the Catholic Church of St. Eustachius, Portageville, Mo., showed his parishioners "Robin Hood" to raise funds for his church.

He wrote to William A. Shalit, St. Louis branch manager: "It was far ahead of anything we ever realized on a picture here, but we worked hard, did a lot of advertising and had nice weather, in addition to the fame of the great picture. We enjoyed it immensely, and are quite satisfied now that your charges for the film were justified."

Alma Rubens to Play Lead

Distinctive Pictures Corporation announces an important change in the cast of its forthcoming production, "Blood and Gold." Alma Rubens, who gave an outstanding performance in "Enemies of Women" and in "Under the Red Robe," will play the leading female role instead of Jetta Coudal, originally announced for the part.

Coogan Film Coming to Rivoli

The Eastern premiere of Jackie Coogan's first Metro feature production, "Long Live the King," is set for December 9, when it will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York.

Metro confidently expects that this pre-release presentation will set a new box office record at this large Broadway house. As is always the case with the offering of Metro productions on Broadway, the home office exploitation department will carry on a far-reaching campaign on "Long Live the King."

Lull in Production Will Mean Better Casts Says Schulberg

Theatregoers soon are to see the benefit of the temporary lull in picture activities on the West Coast, according to B. P. Schulberg. For the few pictures that are now being made will involve the use of casts that would have been impossible because of the prohibitive salary demands a few weeks ago.

An example of the bigger casts now available soon will be seen in the Gasnier production of "Poisoned Paradise," a Preferred Picture from the novel by Robert W. Service. B. P. Schulberg, who had listed the players to take part in the picture, immediately discarded the early selections with the announcement of the studio shut-downs.

"I am delaying the selection of players because I am sure I can find a better cast, not only for the principal roles, but for the minor parts as well, than ever before has been possible," said Mr. Schulberg.

"The list of genuine favorites now available for any big picture makes it possible for the careful producer to give theatre-goers a thing they seldom have seen—all-star productions that are all-star in fact as well as in name."

Clara Bow, whose performances in such pictures as "Maytime," "Black Oxen" and "Down to the Sea in Ships," have placed her in the first ranks of much sought featured players, will enact the leading feminine role. As the little Parisian millinery worker, Director Gasnier believes she will have the most promising part of her brief but meteoric screen career.

Offer Prizes for Best Essays on Five Pictures

Motion picture fans are given an opportunity of competing for $5,000 in prizes to be offered by the Producers' Security Corporation for essays on the Hodkinson releases, "The Mark of the Beast," "Dollar Devils," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Kingdom Within" and "The Lion's Mouse."

The money will be awarded in one hundred and sixty-six prizes. One thousand dollars will be the first prize, five hundred dollars the second and three hundred dollars the third. There will be three prizes of $150, ten of $50, fifty of $25 and one hundred of $10. In the event of a tie the full amount of the prize will be awarded to each winner.

Ballots will be furnished to exhibitors subscribing to the plan. These ballots will contain a column for a vote on each of the five pictures and a space for the contestant to state, in less than one hundred and fifty words, the reason for his preference of the five pictures voted upon. Slides and trailers will be furnished and exhibitors will be offered a special contract for the five pictures.

All votes are to be returned by the contestants to their local theatre, which will forward the six best contributions to the Hodkinson office. The branches will forward to the home office the three best contributions from each theatre. Judges, to be announced from time to time, will choose the winners.

The contest will last for six months, from November 20 to May 20. Because of the generous prizes, the great number of them and the length of time allowed, the contest promises to be very widely participated in.

Many Bookings for "The Virginian"

A large number of first run bookings on Owen Wister's "The Virginian" were recorded this week by Preferred Pictures Corporation. They include the Comerford Amusement Company's circuit throughout Pennsylvania and the following houses: The Orpheum, Springfield, Mo.; President, Washington, D. C.; Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn.; Melba, Dallas, Texas; T. & D. Theatres in Stockton and Oakland, Cal.; Tremont, Nashua, N. H.; Poli's, Meridan, Conn.; Bijou, New Haven, Conn.; Alhambra, Stamford, Conn.; Suffolk, Holyoke, Mass.; Colonial, Logansport, Ind.; the Pendrola, Lockaland, O.; New Family, Adrian, Mich.; and the American, Casper, Wyoming.

Hudson Goes to Coast to Supervise Production

Earl J. Hudson, production manager of the First National forces on the West Coast, left New York on Saturday, November 17, after a week's conference with First National executives concerning future production activities of that company. Mr. Hudson was in New York in time to attend the special pre-view of "Flaming Youth" at the Astor Theatre on November 14. This picture is the most ambitious effort of Mr. Hudson's organization to date.

First National will attempt to make "Sundown," a forthcoming drama of the West, one of the screen's epics, according to Mr. Hudson. "Sundown" records present day history—the passing of the old West, with its unfenced ranges and herds of countless cattle. Already scenes have been taken in Mexico of a quarter of a million head of cattle which were driven across the Rio Grande recently by American cattlemen, retreating before the advance of civilization in the western plains. Exclusive rights were obtained by First National for the filming of these scenes.

Independent producers now working on the Coast on pictures for First National distribution are Frank Lloyd, making Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk"; J. K. McDonald, producing "Boy of Mine," with Ben Alexander; Thomas H. Ince, making "The Galloping Fish"; Richard Walton Tully, at work on "Flowing Gold"; Norma Talmadge, appearing in "Secrets"; Louis B. Mayer, producing "Why Men Leave Home," and the M. C. Levee-Maurice Tourneur organization, at work on "Torment."

Gets Screen Rights to "Bread"

"Bread," rated as Charles G. Norris's greatest novel, has been acquired by Metro for screen production.

This information is contained in an announcement from William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, who recently closed the deal with Arthur H. Jacobs.

Al Hart Back with Hill at Universal

Albert Hart, veteran character actor and "heavy" of the screen, is back with the Robert Hill production unit at Universal City.

He is now cast for a character role in "The Thrill Girl," a comedy drama, with Laura La Plante, which Hill will direct. Production will start in a few days.

Pathe News Horse Race Views May Settle Raging Sport Controversy

Pathe News' views of the Zev-In Memoriam race at Churchill Downs last Saturday are in a fair way of becoming the center of one of the greatest controversies ever waged by the sport experts of America. At the same time, Pathe News, irrespective of the final decision that will be handed down by the experts, has won praise anew for its latest feat of resourcefulness and enterprise in screen journalism.

When Zev, conqueror of Papyrus, and In Memoriam, winner over Zev and My Own in the recent match race at Latonia, met again Saturday, November 17, at Churchill Downs, nobody foresaw how keenly contested would be the last few feet to the finish post. Pathe News was taking no chances, however, and so dispatched with its battery of cameras a slow-motion camera—the only slow-motion camera used at the now famous turf classic.

The race and its outcome are now history. So close was the finish that despite the verdict of the judges in favor of Zev there have been many among the thousands who witnessed the final moments of the great struggle who disagree with the official decision. In the general wrangle consequent upon this divergence of opinion, the Pathe News slow-motion views are very likely to be called into service in the settlement of the controversy.

The first step in this direction was taken on Tuesday evening, November 20, when racetrack experts and writers of prominence gathered at the Pathe News studio to witness a showing of the picture. Prior to the showing, Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, briefly described the exact conditions under which the pictures were taken so that the spectators in viewing the picture might make proper allowances for differences in the camera's angle of vision as distinct from the actual finish line as viewed by the judges. Mr. Cohen's description was illustrated by a chart wherein the true relations of camera, horses and finish post were indicated with mathematical accuracy. The chart and the computations involved were drawn up by Dr. Paul Sorel, professor of mathematics at City College, New York City.

As seen from the camera's angle of vision, the picture shows In Memoriam nosing out Zev across the finish line. The cameraman was standing eight feet in front of the judges' stand and only six feet beyond the finish line, facing the horses. In this position, the camera would slightly favor In Memoriam—being the horse farther away from the camera lens—in registering the positions of the horses in relation to the finish post.

Professor Sorel calculates that this "interval of favorable registration" by the camera would be four inches, figuring the angle of vision and the distance of the cameraman from both horses and the finish line at the time the horses cross the line. In other words, the difference between the vision of the judges and the angle of view of the camera lens, when reduced through a simple process of mathematics, calls for a correction of about four inches in eighty feet—eighty feet being the width of the race course, or the distance from the judges' stand to the finish post opposite.

"Were it possible to determine accurately how far In Memoriam was from the rail and how far Zev was from In Memoriam at the finish point," writes G. F. T. Ryall in the New York World of November 21, in discussing the Pathe News picture, "a calculation could be made that might prove In Memoriam winner mathematically beyond a question."

O'Hara Coming East

George O'Hara, star of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series, is nearing the completion of the pictures of the second series, with about three weeks seeing the wind-up. Feeling in need of a rest, Mr. O'Hara is planning to take his vacation in New York.

Crowds So Great, Stores Shut and Cops Perspire

"Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, broke records at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in the first week of its return to the metropolis. According to officials of the theatre, 102,424 persons attended the showings last week, paying more than $65,525.15.

Other records in addition to those of receipts and attendance, were broken at the Capitol Theatre last week. To accommodate the crowds, the doors were opened at noon for the first time in the theatre's history. Heretofore, they have not been opened until 12.30 P. M. The other night saw a repetition of the scenes of a week ago when 5,000 people were turned away. Again traffic was suspended for a half hour and a cigar store in the immediate vicinity was compelled to close its doors because of the long line of motion picture patrons in front of the box office.

It is now in its sixth week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and the business has never dropped below $22,000 a week, according to statements in Variety. It is also running to practically full capacity in London, at the Empire Theatre, where it is now in its 13th week.

N. Y. Letter Carriers Aid "The Mailman"

Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O., "The Mailman," opens this week at the Cameo with an exploitation campaign outrivaling anything ever attempted by the Film Booking Offices. With the full cooperation of the Post Office Department, uniformed parades, letter carriers' and postal clerks' bands, postal mail boxes and window tie-ups, the picture is getting off to a flying start.

In Movie Day parade, staged last Saturday, over two hundred uniformed carriers, carrying ten-foot banners and led by the postal clerks' band, swung down Broadway, advertising to the people lining the curb that the picture was coming to the Cameo Theatre. In the way of high-class exploitation Tiffany's window on Fifth avenue has in its window a silver cup to be presented to the New York letter carriers' band as winners of the national radio band contest. Hundreds of stores have been placarded, "Do your Christmas shopping early, think of 'The Mailman.'" Below this is a line about the theatre.

Even the post offices were used for billing purposes with signs advocating more pay for postal employes and an additional line advertising the picture. On Monday, November 26, the New York Letter Carriers' Band will parade from the City Hall up Broadway to the theatre for the presentation of the contest prize.

Premiere Next Week on "This Freedom"

Before an invited audience at the Central Theatre, New York, next Monday night, the William Fox screen version of "This Freedom," from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, will have its New York premiere showing. This is the second novel by the noted British author to be adapted by Mr. Fox, the first having been "If Winter Comes," which met with exceptional success in New York and throughout the country.

In the filming of both pictures, Mr. Hutchinson assisted in the direction, chose locations which he had described in his books and also wrote the titles. In some instances in "This Freedom" the titles were taken from the book, while in others Mr. Hutchinson wrote them especially for the scenes. The picture was directed by Denison Clift, an American, who recently joined the Fox organization.

Fay Compton, noted on the British stage and screen, and who has been seen in leading roles in many pictures in this country, plays the rôle of Rosalie Occleve, the woman who neglected her home and family for a career in the banking world. Clive Brook, equally well known throughout Europe, has the part of her neglected husband. A large cast of talented performers is announced in the supporting roles.

The novel, "This Freedom," aroused international discussion, particularly among women. The story is based on the question as to whether a woman can achieve success in the business world and at the same time be a wife and mother.

Davies Film Booked in 23 Cities

Cosmopolitan's Marion Davies picture, "Little Old New York," which is in its second big week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, between the 17 and 29 of November is booked in twenty-three of the important cities in the country.

The late November bookings are: Nov. 17, Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; Nov. 18, Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Nov. 20, Rialto, Norwalk, Conn.; Nov. 24, Grand, Bellingham, Washington; Nov. 24, Blue Mouse, Seattle, Wash.; Nov. 24, Blue Mouse, Tacoma; Nov. 24, Blue Mouse, Portland, Oregon; Nov. 24, Pershing, St. Louis, Missouri; Nov. 25, Circle, Indianapolis, Indiana; Nov. 25, Luna Lite, Marion, Indiana; Nov. 25, Arcade, Astoria, Oregon; Nov. 25 Strand, Witchita Falls, Texas; Nov. 25, Colorado, Denver, Colorado; Nov. 25, Merrill, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Nov. 25, Royal, Kansas, Missouri; Nov. 25, Lincoln, Troy, New York; Nov. 25, Palace, Hartford, Conn.; Nov. 25, Bijou, New Haven, Conn.; Nov. 25, Strand, Waterbury, Conn.; Nov. 25 Broadway Strand, Detroit, Mich.; Nov. 26, New, Baltimore, Md.; Nov. 26, Orpheum, Trenton, New Jersey; Nov. 29, Capitol, Dallas, Texas.

"Three Ages" Breaks Records in Washington

During "Three Ages" engagement at the Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C., it played to the biggest business the house has done in eighteen months. It is a fact, backed up by box office statements, that only one other picture has done better at the Palace than "Three Ages," the production being Rex Ingram's Metro feature, "The Four Horsemen."

It is a matter of record that Buster Keaton's first full length Metro comedy feature has established him as the leading drawing card among the present-day film comedians, says Metro. Exhibitor reports coming in to the Metro home offices are most enthusiastic in their praise of Buster and the fact that he is now making full length comedies.

Advance reviews on "Our Hospitality," Buster's newest feature length Metro comedy, are to the effect that it is even better than "Three Ages." Critics credit it with presenting more laughs and thrills to the foot of film than any comedy released in many months, Metro reports.

Strong Warner Cast for John Barrymore

A fine cast of players appears with John Barrymore in the Warner Brothers screen version of the famous Clyde Fitch play, "Beau Brummel." Harry Beaumont, who is directing the picture, obtained the finest screen personalities available. The players are: Mary Astor, Irene Rich, Willard Louis, Alec B. Francis, Carmel Myers, Richard Tucker, William Humphreys, Templar Saxe, Clarissa Selwynn, Andre de Beranger, John J. Richardson, Michael Dark, Kate Lester, Carol Halloway, James A. Marcus, Betty Brice, Roland Rushton, Rose Dione, Claire de Lorez, L. H. Challdecotte and F. F. Guenste. In addition a large number of extras appear as courtiers, soldiers, etc.

The settings are said to be the most pretentious ever undertaken for a Warner Classic. An elaborate castle set probably is the most impressive scenic element in the picture, and the interiors are also lavish and in keeping with the time when the action took place. The many exteriors furnish picturesque backgrounds for the unfoldment of the fascinating story.

Hodkinson Films Named Among Best Pictures

In an article analyzing the year's best pictures, in the current issue of "The Ladies' Home Journal," John Farrar, editor of "The Bookman" and noted literary and dramatic critic, mentions four recent Hodkinson releases as being of special interest and general merit.

The four pictures recommended by Mr. Farrar are: Elmer Clifton's whaling picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships"; Gene Stratton-Porter's picturization of her novel, "Michael O'Halleran"; the speed film, "The Drivin' Fool," and "Puritan Passions," the screen version of Percy Mackaye's stage play, "The Scarecrow."

In making his analysis Mr. Farrar reviewed the pictures of practically all the large distributing companies, and chose four Hodkinson releases, as compared to three, two or one of the other companies.

Minneapolis Critics Praise "Scaramouche"

Metro presented Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" at the Garrick Theatre in Minneapolis three weeks ago and the press rendered its tribute as it has done wherever else this massive production has been shown. Its opening was truly brilliant, as it was attended by the most prominent people of the city and was given added flavor by Governor J. A. O. Preus, who gave the following statement to the press: "I saw 'Scaramouche' at the governors' conference in West Baden, Ind. It is the finest film production I ever witnessed."

The Minnesota Daily Star said: "'Scaramouche' is a great picture." "'Scaramouche'," wrote the critic of the St. Paul Daily News, "is undoubtedly one of the great pictures. It may be ranked with 'The Four Horsemen'."

"Ingram has pictured the French Revolution as we have never seen it pictured before on the screen," wrote the critic of the Minnesota Journal. "'Scaramouche' has all elements of a great photoplay," wrote the critic of the Minneapolis Tribune.

"Why Worry" Accorded an Unusual Tribute

An unusual tribute to the box office prowess of Harold Lloyd's latest feature comedy for Pathe, "Why Worry?" was accorded this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which has booked the Pathe comedy for an indefinite engagement at its new demonstration theatre in Boston, the Fenway.

The production opens at this big first-run house on November 25 with special presentation features arranged by one of the country's most prominent showmen, S. Barrett McCormick, who has just been named manager of the Fenway.

The booking of "Why Worry?" at the new Paramount house, Pathe officials declare, possesses unusual significance in view of that organization's recently announced policy to engage for its demonstration theatres only the very biggest and most successful features of the screen.

School Head Endorses Ray Pilgrim Picture

R. J. Stimmett, of the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, in a contract he closed with Associated Exhibitors this week booked the super-feature, Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," for the two weeks starting December 22 and ending January 4.

An official statement issued by Susan M. Dorsey, superintendent of public schools of Los Angeles, encourages pupils to see the picture, and says:

"The Board of Education has granted this permission because in their judgment 'The Courtship of Miles Standish' has educational merit, especially in view of the fact that the poem on which it is based is one studied in all our schools. The photoplay embraces that part of American history from a time during the voyage of the Mayflower to a period two years after landing in the new world, portraying graphically the adventures of the Pilgrims."

Harry Rapf Plans Broadway Picture

Harry Rapf left New York for the West Coast last week where he will supervise his next production under the Warner Brothers banner and will also make plans for his productions that will follow. Mr. Rapf has already made the final arrangements for filming "Broadway After Dark," the play by Owen Davis, who has contributed more plays to the American stage than any other living playwright, and whose dramatic success, "Icebound," won the Pulitzer prize last season.

"Broadway After Dark" is to face the cameras under the direction of Monta Bell, who assisted Chaplin in the direction of his productions the last two years. Harry Rapf intends not to make a scenic of the great metropolis, nor to spend a fortune on elaborate sets, but to dramatize it in a simple story of human emotions. It is understood that an all-star cast of players will be seen, with Adolphe Menjou playing the leading masculine role.

Marion Coakley to Make Film Debut

Marion Coakley will make her motion picture debut in Richard Barthelmess' next starring production, under the direction of John S. Robertson, "The Enchanted Cottage."

Although Miss Coakley has appeared in numerous successful Broadway productions, her last having been "Barnum Was Right," she has never yet appeared before the motion picture camera.

Submarine Rescue Shown in Fox News Weekly

A timely achievement by Fox News is its presentation in the current release of the rescue of two seamen who were imprisoned thirty-one hours in the United States submarine O-5, which was sunk in Cristobal harbor, Panama, following a collision with a steamship of the United Fruit Line.

Photographed by R. G. Lewis, the film graphically depicts the descent of navy divers to the sunken craft, the raising of the wreck and the actual rescue of the limp and exhausted prisoners. The pictures were "shot" from so short a distance that every detail of the rescue is clearly discernible.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Hepworth Has 14 This Season

Following "Boden's Boy," to be released by Hepworth Distributing Corporation, Henry Edwards will start work on the screen adaptation of the E. Temple Thurston story, "The World of Wonderful Reality."

Joseph di Lorenzo, in charge of distribution for Hepworth, said that "The World of Wonderful Reality" would be completed by March, 1924, and would undoubtedly be added to the 1923-1924 releases, making a total of fourteen pictures to be released by Hepworth this season.

Independents Purchase "Trip to Mars"

Export & Import Film Company's announcement of its purchase of United States and Canadian rights to the big five-reel spectacle, "A Trip to Mars," has met with instant response from the independent field.

Masterpiece Film Attractions has bought the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey rights, and the Aywon Film Company has bought the Greater New York rights.

Truart Sales Head Back From Abroad

Alexander Aronson, general manager of sales for Truart Film Corporation, who has been abroad for over two months, making an extensive survey of the foreign market, has returned.

Aronson made numerous affiliations with foreign distributors covering the entire next season's Truart product.

Title Changed

Hepworth announces that Cecil M. Hepworth's production, "Mrs. Erricker's Reputation," from the novel by Thomas Cobb, will be released under the title, "Speak No Evil."

Chicago Likes Normand Film

Aaron Jones closed a contract with Associated Exhibitors this week for an indefinite run of Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" at his Orpheum Loop Theatre in Chicago. The run is to start at the close of the present engagement of Mary Pickford's "Rosita."

"The Extra Girl" has just closed the eighth week of its world premiere run at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. Playing to record houses at the start, this attraction has proved an extraordinary drawing card and the newspapers continued to lavish praise upon it even when the run was several weeks old.

Independents, Take Heed of the Lull, Says Grand

"Now is the time for the independents to put their best films on the market," said Samuel V. Grand, president of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, while in New York City a few days prior to his return to the Boston office.

Mr. Grand expressed himself as being well satisfied with the general business outlook. He based this mainly upon his recent mid-western tour, when he looked over many exchanges and interviewed prominent exhibitors.

Speaking of the independents, he commented: "They should gather organizations which will form the nucleus for much greater companies, and they should draw to them men who are fitted to handle any situation and deal with any business problem. For, when this condition of chaos has passed, we will find that the industry, as a whole, has not suffered and that only the firms and people who richly deserve it have been eliminated."

Women Highly Praise "The Barefoot Boy"

Last Saturday Mrs. Thomas Slack, president of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, paid the producers and distributors of "The Barefoot Boy" the compliment of requesting a special performance of the picture.

Accordingly a big pre-release premiere was arranged at the Palace Theatre, New York, under the special patronage of Mrs. Slack, with the assistance of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation which is distributing the Mission Film Corporation feature, and the Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York which holds the New York rights. At Mrs. Slack's invitation various bodies of New York clubwomen to whose attention she wishes the picture brought, were present. They praised it highly.

One of the most prominent audiences which has ever assembled to see a motion picture was present.

"The Acquittal" Lauded by Chicago Reviewers

"The Acquittal," Universal's super film starring Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry, was hailed as a "perfect picture" and "better than any stage mystery drama" by the Chicago newspaper reviewers after its world premiere in the big First National first run house, the Chicago Theatre, last week. Booked by Balaban & Katz for their palatial house on short notice, the picture opened with only a limited advertising and exploitation campaign behind it.

The Chicago Herald and Examiner wrote: "It is better than any of the stage mystery dramas."

The Chicago Evening American; "Story, action, direction—they are all extraordinarily good. And when it comes to baffling the spectator—well, you will not know until the very end just who committed the murder."

"Thundering Dawn" Has Manhattan Premiere

"Thundering Dawn," the Universal Super-Jewel, starring J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson, was given its premiere New York City presentation last Sunday evening at the George M. Cohan Theatre. A packed house greeted the Harry Garson production.

"Thundering Dawn" also opened its run over the U. B. O. Circuit, starting Thursday. It is playing simultaneously in fourteen Keith, Moss and Proctor houses, and will play in the remaining four of this chain next week. The picture is reported to be attracting very satisfactory business in every house.

Truart Sells Rights to Luporini

The foreign department of Truart Film Corporation has consummated negotiations with Ferdinand Luporini, for the sale of the rights to the first two Elaine Hammerstein productions, "Broadway Gold" by W. Carey Wonderly and "Drums of Jeopardy" by Harold MacGrath, for Brazil.

With the addition of the rights to these two productions Luporini now controlls all Truart product thus far released for this South American country.

Big Campaign Sheet for "Barefoot Boy"

A big twenty-four sheet campaign on "The Barefoot Boy" covering all of Greater New York, has been launched by Commonwealth Film Corporation which holds the Greater New York rights to the production which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing for Mission Film Corporation.

Sam Zierler, head of Commonwealth, has already arranged for 225 twenty-four sheet stands.

Hepworth Films Before Royalty

From the London office of Hepworth comes word that three of Hepworth's one reel novelty subjects received a "command" for special screening before royalty at Balmoral Castle, on September 19th.

The subjects screened were: "Peeps Into Puzzleland," "Do You Remember?" and "A Rubberneck in London." Last year Cecil M. Hepworth's production of "Through Three Reigns" received a "comand" performance from Balmoral Castle for a screening before King George, Queen Alexandria, the Prince of Wales and the other members of the royal household.

They Like It

Warner officials are highly enthusiastic over "George Washington, Jr.," the screen version of George M. Cohan's famous musical play, starring Wesley Barry. The print arrived in New York from the West Coast and was given a private showing in the projection room immediately upon its arrival. It is their opinion that the Warner Classic is a sure-fire box-office attraction and one of the funniest comedies ever produced.

Signs for Output

Jensen and Von Herberg's circuit of western theatres signed contracts this week for this year's output of Preferred Pictures, constituting the fifteen novels and stage plays to be produced by B. P. Schulberg.

Exhibitors Eager for "Mothers-in-Law"

Gasnier's latest Preferred picture, "Mothers-in-Law," presented by B. P. Schulberg, has been booked by the following houses: The Grand, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Bethlehem, Lehigh, Pa.; the Orpheum, Springfield, Mo.; Parkway, Baltimore, Md.; Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn.; Queen, Austin, Texas; Goddard's Theatre, Sacramento, Cal.; the T. & D., Stockton, Cal.; Isis, Kokomo, Ind.; Robbins, Warren, O.; Opera House, Piqua, O., and the Majestic, Wyandotte, Mich.

"Souvenir" Next Halperin Feature

Halperin Productions has sent from the Hollywood studios the complete cast which has been recruited for "Souvenir," the second Halperin feature for Associated Exhibitors distribution. Agnes Ayres was named to play the lead and Percy Marmont, Kathlyn Williams, George Siegmann, Mary Alden and Robert McKim were also selected.

"Souvenir" has C. R. Wallace assisting Victor Hugo Halperin in the direction. Robert Ellis is now designing the sets.

"Meanest Man" is Heavily Booked

"The Meanest Man in the World," a current First National picture produced by Principal Pictures Corp., has been booked solidly by the West Coast Theatres for showing through their northern and southern circuits in California.

"The Meanest Man in the World" is adapted from the stage success of the same name and its cast includes Blanche Sweet, Bert Lytell and Bryant Washburn.

High Praise Given "Columbus"

"Such a picture does much more than present history, it raises the standard of all picture production and by the success of its well developed effects advances film art appreciably." Thus characterized is "Columbus," the first of Pathe's "Chronicles of America" series, in the November issue of "The Film Bulletin—a Monthly Guide to the Best Pictures," which is published by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau.

"Columbus," says "The Film Bulletin," must be received "as a herald of perfection."

On Way East

Bud Barsky, sales manager for the Sunset Productions, is on his way East with sample prints of the second subject of the Kenneth McDonald comedy-stunt-drama series, titled "Slow as Lightning," and the second release of the J. B. Warner Western super-features, titled "Treasure Canyon." Sunset Productions are producing fourteen pictures this year.

Inspiration in Italy Working on "Romola"

"The White Sister," which is completing the third month of its run on Broadway, will open in San Francisco and Boston on December 3rd. In the meantime, it is playing to capacity houses in Chicago and Philadelphia.

The Inspiration overseas company has begun filming "Romola," adapted from the famous novel by George Eliot. Lillian Gish is playing the title role. Her sister Dorothy also has the important part of Tessa. In the cast also are: William H. Powell, Charles Lane, Herbert Grimwood and several thousand others.

"Romola" will be the second production directed by Henry King to be made in Italy. The great marine battle with which the picture concludes has just been filmed in Leghorn and interiors are now being produced in the Inspiration studio in Florence, Italy.

"The Eternal City" Has Paterson Premiere

"The Eternal City," independently produced by Samuel Goldwyn for distribution through First National, had its world's premiere on November 19th at the Regent Theatre in Paterson, N. J. The advance interest in the picture filled the house to overflowing and brought a line more than a block long in front of the theatre box office waiting for the doors to open.

Charles Dooley, manager of the Regent, stated after the last show of the opening night that the attendance was the greatest of any opening in the history of the theatre and that the gross admission exceeded anything in Paterson's film history.

George Fitzmaurice, who directed the picture in Rome, Italy, and Mr. Goldwyn were present at the opening to note the reactions of the audience. "The Eternal City" is interpreted by a cast including Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, Lionel Barrymore, Richard Bennett and Montague Love.

Hart's Return Rouses Audience's Enthusiasm

That the return of Bill Hart to the screen after an absence of nearly two years is one of the big events of the current season, is being amply demonstrated this week at the New York Rialto where "Wild Bill Hickok," the first of the famous Western star's new series of Paramount pictures, is being shown. The star, it is said, seems to be more popular than ever, and his picture, based upon the exploits of a famous character of Western history and written by himself, is declared on all sides to be the very type of photoplay the millions of Hart fans would have chosen as a vehicle to bring their favorite actor back to the screen.

In its review of the picture the Evening World said: "If you were numbered among the legion of Hart admirers before he 'retired,' then you'll like him in 'Wild Bill Hickok.' We were, and we did." Said the American: "His admirers—and the theatre was packed with them—ate up his every movement. It was such a Hart—y audience, and so completely enthralled!" The World: "Probably no one could have brought to the screen a more fascinating picture of 'Wild Bill Hickok,' that famed old ramantic frontiersman, than Bill Hart."

"It is the same Bill," said the Evening Telegram, "the man who plays the rugged Westerner as nobody else can. Hart has been missed from the screen," said the Telegraph, "and 'Wild Bill Hickok' is a fitting and excellent vehicle to bring him back. Welcome back, William S. Hart!"

Laemmle Stands to See "Hunchback" at Capital

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" made its National Capital premiere recently before an audience that packed the Shubert Belasco Theatre with several hundred standing and more than 1,000 turned away from the box office. All of the boxes were draped in the colors of the various embassies. Almost the entire diplomatic corps of Washington was in the audience, which also represented nearly everyone in Washington's blue book.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Pictures Corporation arrived from New York for the premiere shortly after the opening of the picture and had the unique experience of having to stand while the picture was screened. Every available seat was taken.

The box office report shows that the picture broke every existing record for film presentations at the Belasco for the first four performances. Police were required on both Sunday and Monday to regulate the long queues that wended their ways to the ticket windows.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Third of "Chronicles of America" Heads Pathe List for December 2

Heading the list of Pathe subjects scheduled for release on December 2 is "Vincennes," the third of the Chronicles of America series being produced by Yale University Press. Instead of being in four reels, as were the two previous subjects, this one is three reels in length. It depicts the thrilling campaign of George Rogers Clark and his handful of followers who wrested the Northwest from the British and Indians and saved for the United States the territory now covered by Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The final dash in the dead of winter is said to be tensely dramatic.

In "The Great Outdoors," the fourth of the Spat Family series, this discordant trio meets with humorous adventures in a lonely camp in trying to prove to a skeptical uncle that they can live without servants.

"Flip Flops" is a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy marked by fast action and thrills, in which a circus elephant runs amuck. Alberta Vaughan, Lewis Sargent, Jack Cooper and Andy Clyde are in the cast.

The Ruth Roland series, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its eighth episode, in which an attempt is made to blow up with dynamite the cavern in which the fuel substitute is found.

"Join the Circus" presents Snub Pollard in a novelty single-reeler of fast action. Paul Parrott, George Rowe and Katherine Grant are also in the cast.

The Aesop's Film Fable for the week is "The Five Fifteen," which involves mystery and suspense, as well as Cartoonist Paul Terry's characteristic humor.

Pathe Review 48 shows the cultivation of grapes for the market, an interesting study of the peacock, a section showing how candy is made in a big factory, and a color section of the "Valley of the Giants" at Crecy, France.

One Topics of the Day and two issues of Pathe News complete the diversified program.

Five Two-Reel and Six One-Reel Films on Educational Schedule

Educational states that its December schedule of releases will be the most comprehensive so far in the 1923-24 season. Three Christie comedies dominate the program with one Mermaid and one Juvenile comedy, making in all five two reelers for the month, in addition to six single reel issues.

"Kidding Kate," a Christie, with Dorothy Devore and Babe London, released December 2, heads the schedule, with a Bruce Wilderness Tale, "My Boy Bill," during the same week.

For week of December 9 there will be a Mermaid comedy, "Exit Caesar," directed by Robert Kerr, under supervision of Jack White, with cast including Otto Fried, Peg O'Neil, Andrew Arbuckle, Jack Lloyd and others. The single reeler will be a Cameo, "Under Covers," with Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance.

The second of the Christies, "Black and Blue," will be released the third week in the month, also "The Bee," the second of the Secrets of Life series. Jimmie Adams is featured in "Black and Blue," directed by Harold Beaudine. "The Bee" has been proclaimed one of the most interesting single reels ever offered to the public.

The fourth week in the month finds "Over the Fence," a Juvenile Comedy, the third of the series, with same cast as the previous ones, Ernest Butterworth, Roger Keene, Tommy Hicks and Peggy Cartwright with addition of Joe Butterworth. There will be two single reelers, "Film Foolish," as Cameo, and "Home Again," one of the Sing Them Again series.

Week of December 30 will see a Christie, "Call the Wagon," featuring Neal Burns. A Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge, "Liquid Lava," will complete the schedule. This makes in all a total of sixteen reels during the month, in addition to the regular issues of Kinograms.

Leading Scientists Praise Educational's Insect Films

The first three of the Louis H. Tolhurst series of microscopic pictures in the Secrets of Life series, titled "The Ant," "The Bee" and "The Spider," were recently shown to the scientific staff of the American Museum of Natural History in New York, which includes some of the most noted men in the world, and it is reported that there were audible comments of approval and applause at the conclusion.

"These are marvelous pictures," said Dr. F. A. Lucas, director of the staff. "Not only are they instructive, but entertaining. Every child, every grown person should see them." Dr. Mutchler, of the department of entomology, said: "The pictures are true to life. They are intensely interesting, and are a well worth while contribution to the screen." A similar comment was made by Dr. Shwarz, research associate of the particular department which deals with this class of insects.

Favorable comments were also made by the other prominent scientists, each a leader in his own particular branch, who attended the private showing.

"SHORT" BILLED ABOVE FEATURE

Note how the Apollo Theatre in Hollywood played up Educational's single reel comedy, "Crash," above the feature in electric lights.

Sennett to Feature Harry Langdon

Harry Langdon, formerly a well-known vaudeville headliner and more recently a star in screen comedies, has been signed by Mack Sennett under a long-term contract. This is in line with Sennett's policy of expansion to provide additional comedies for Pathe distribution. Langdon will be featured in two-reel comedies.

Educational Working at Top Speed

Educational reports that production activities continue at full speed at the Fine Arts Studio in Los Angeles, on the 1923-1924 program. Lloyd Hamilton who returned after his work in a feature comedy has completed "Lonesome." Jack White has finished the Mermaid "Exit Caesar" with Lige Conley and started "Flying Finance" with Neely Edwards and Lillian Hackett. The third Juvenile comedy "Over the Fence" is nearing completion, the Cameo "Under Covers" is finished and "Film Foolish" now in production.

Varied Subjects in "Snapshots"

The sixth of the new series of Screen Snapshots contains a wide variety of material that will appeal to film fans. Included in this issue are Marion Davies, Holbrook Blinn, Johnny Dooley, Ralph Graves, Robert G. Vignola, the French General Goureaud, Blanche Sweet, William Russell, Louise Glaum, unusual wild animal scenes, Madge Bellamy, John Bowers, Sheldon Lewis, Spottiswoode Aitken and Caesare Graviva.

"Leather Pushers" with New Star

Universal reports the completion of the newest of the Leather Pushers series, titled "That Kid from Madrid—Michigan." Billy Sullivan, a former champion, and related to the famous fighting Sullivans, is starred in place of Reginald Denny, who is now appearing in feature productions.

"Next Please" Al's Latest

Having completed "The Poor Little Rich Pup" Al Herman has started work on his next Century Comedy, which will feature Henry Murdock and William Irving.

The title of the current production, "Next, Please," is based on that well-known, ragged phrase so often heard in barber shops throughout the world.

"Kidding Kate"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Dorothy Devore has a congenial and attractive role in this Christie comedy in which she is forced by her mother to masquerade as a little girl in rompers in order that she will not "steal" her fat sister's beau. Of course things don't go as mother intended and Dorothy gets him after all. Babe London is the fat girl and Jimmie Harrison the beau. Although there is nothing new in the idea, the picture contains considerable clever business, is bright and amusing and should please the average audience.—C. S. S.

"Why Elephants Leave Home"

(Pathe—Animal—Two Reels)

This fine showmanship title with its exploitation possibilities refers to a picture that has no sex angle. Instead, it is a two reeler which shows how wild elephants in Ceylon are driven from the jungles into a "kraal," being lured by their domesticated brethren. They are then trained to be of use to man. The picture is novel and interesting throughout. In addition to the corraling of the elephants, forty-odd in all, there are interesting views of a large number of elephants being used for various purposes such as uprooting small trees, hauling logs, etc. It should prove an attractive offering on any program.—C. S. S.

"Under Covers"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

A sanitarium furnishes the background for the rough and tumble comedy in this single reel Cameo, distributed by Educational. Cliff Bowes as an orderly gets into all kinds of scrapes, is fired and returns in disguise to be near his sweetheart, the head nurse, and more mix-ups follow. George Ovey is cast as a doctor. There is considerable material of a familiar trend which will bring the average number of laughs.—C. S. S.

"A Dark Knight"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

A convict's uniform proves a rather dangerous costume for a masked ball in this Joe Rock comedy. He has to serve a prison sentence before he gets to the party, but escapes and finds safety at the ball where a dozen others are wearing a "Convict 13" uniform—safety for a few minutes. It should prove amusing to most fans.—M. K.

"Hollywood Bound"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

As the winner of a popularity contest, the hero played by Sid Smith goes to Hollywood, where he has some difficulty getting into a moving picture studio. A lion, insufficiently tamed, makes his life hectic throughout scenes that are lively and funny.—M. K.

"The Bottom of the Sea"

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

As with the previous offering in this series of Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge," distributed by Educational, this issue contains an assortment of humorous animated cartoons and subtitles and sections showing items of interest such as catching tunny fish in Sicily. The cartoon work is especially clever and there are a number of laughs. It should be welcomed as a novelty by the average audience.—C. S. S.

"The Five-Fifteen"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Plotting against the arrival of a precious visitor on the "five-fifteen," a gang of cat-bandits holds up the tram and scares it into many parts. The right compartment containing a bottle of "old stuff," however, is saved. The action is vivid and every bit of it entertaining. An Aesop Film Fable by Paul Terry.—M. K.

"Wet and Weary"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Clyde Cook is the victim of various kinds of wet torment in this comedy, which starts off with a terrific rainstorm, providing many ludicrous sights. The only shelter he can find is under a street cleaner's cart and this leads him to the civic department, where he is given a lawn-sprinkling job. The hose appears to be alive and herein lies much of the comedy. It is a good comedy for the average theatre.—M. K.

"Flip Flops"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Mack Sennett's latest is fast and furious enough to meet with the ardent favor of all slapstick fans. It is comedy of the most obvious type, broad in places but overbrimming with hilarious fun for those who like plenty of slam-bang effects. Lewis Sargent has a lover role which causes him all sorts of suffering, including some exciting scenes with an elephant. —M. K.

Gibbons of Pathe Reports One-Reelers in Big Demand

Another indication of the growing popularity of the short subject is contained in the report of Pathe's short subject sales manager, Miles Gibbons, who has just returned from a tour of key cities of the Middle West.

"General conditions are sound and the outlook decidedly encouraging," says Mr. Gibbons. "There is an unusually heavy demand for short length screen entertainment, and business as far as Pathe is concerned has never been better."

A notable point in Mr. Gibbons' report is the heavy booking of single reel subjects. He found that the Pollard, Laurel and "Dippy-Do-Dads" are enjoying great vogue and the Aesop's Film Fables are in many instances receiving special mention by critics because of their originality and humor.

Mr. Gibbons attributes this vogue to the uniform quality of entertainment in these series, their wide variety of subjects and to the ease with which a single-reeler can be fitted into a program. This latter is of especial importance in view of the additional length of many features today.

Plans New Witwer Series for F. B. O.; Will Not Be Fight Plays

H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the F. B. O., left this week for the studios at the West Coast to complete plans for the Film Booking Offices' third series of H. C. Witwer's short stories to follow the second series of "Fighting Blood" two reelers now being released.

The new series will not be fight stories but will be based on the Witwer Cosmopolitan stories about the hotel telephone girl. No running title for the series has been selected as yet. In addition to this Mr. Berman will make plans for the Witwer "Alex The Great" series of sporting type pictures.

It is the intention of the F. B. O. to concentrate its entire efforts on the Witwer short subjects for the coming season and will not take on any additional two-reelers for distribution. To date the Witwer "Fighting Bloods" have proven unusually popular and profitable.

"Uncensored Movies"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is one of the very best of the new series of Will Rogers' two-reelers distributed by Pathe. Rogers appears as an investigator sent by a village reform society to Hollywood and also impersonates Tom Mix, William S. Hart, Rudolph Valentino and others. He does this in a kidding manner, poking fun at and burlesquing the situations, as for instance where in chasing the villain he captures him although they start from the same place and one rides wildly up hills while the other rides down the hills. The titles and action are in Rogers' best style and there are a number of laughs and several subtle touches.—C. S. S.

"My Boy Bill"

(Educational—Wilderness—One Reel)

A quarrel by the sea, which ended in "my boy Bill" going out in his boat and failing to return, furnishes the motive for this Bruce picture. The story is told by Bill's father, who is shown waiting through the changes of seasons in vain for his boy to come back. It is marked with a strongly pathetic note and there are many beautiful and artistic shots of the sea under different conditions. It should thoroughly satisfy the Bruce fans and prove acceptable anywhere.—C. S. S.

"Taxi, Please"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

Monte Banks, a taxi driver, spends his time transforming bald heads with the aid of a fake hair grower and dog fur in this comedy. He makes a fortune for his sweetheart's mother, who owns the store, and then elopes with the daughter and the gold. There is not much variety here, but it will get laughs and satisfy the average patron.—M. K.

"Miles of Smiles"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

As a pair of twins, Baby Peggy has a double role in this Century comedy that keeps her very active and amusing. One of the twins gets lost and leads a rough life as assistant to a railroad engineer, while the other one enjoys luxury and ease. They get mixed up of course, but eventually both twins are restored to their parents. The star is a delightful little entertainer as usual.—M. K.

"Wild and Woolly"

(Pathe—Sport—One Reel)

A typical western rodeo or "stampede," as it is called in the film, is the subject of this single reeler which is the first of a new series of "Sportlights" by Grantland Rice which Pathe will distribute. It is a decidedly interesting offering that will appeal particularly to men and to lovers of red-blooded sports. There is a lot of action covering the riding of steers, bronchos and wild, unbroken horses, and the spills provide thrills. There are also interesting sidelights in the shots of the audience.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

Louisville, Ky.

There will be a reasonably warm time in Louisville, Ky., next New Year's Eve, for the Louisville Motion Picture Projectionists, Local Union No. 163, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., will give a Grand Ball and Carnival, which it is expected will be the most sizeable event pulled off in that neck o' the woods for quite some while.

And that's saying considerable, because you know when those Kentucky men and their fair ladies start out to do something, that thing is always well done.

Harry F. Petty is chairman of the entertainment committee. Petty is projectionist at the Rex Theatre, Louisville.

I wish you every joy on New Year's Eve, gentlemen. Only wish I might be with you and help roll the joy ball until the "wee sma" hours. Can't be did, though—too far away!

Blade too Narrow

Joe De Reny, projectionist, Grand Theatre, East Stroudsburg, Pa., wrote us under date of September 19, saying:

Have been projecting with Simplex projectors for almost a year and have had no trouble at all until now. The rotating shutter is set almost as perfectly as possible, but it certainly does pull up and down on the screen. Lines show up and down on reading, and even on the picture, epecially when I speed up a bit. What is your advice in a case like this? Two-blade shutter; alternating current.

Now see here, Old Timer, without the slightest intention to "roast" you, I must say that if you would invest a few dollars in a Bluebook and STUDY IT, you would have no need to ask questions such as this. I am, of course, glad to help you (though somehow your letter seems to have been mislaid and overlooked for quite a spell, for which accept apologies), but I would far rather see you able to answer such a question yourself.

You will find all such questions answered and fully explained under "Revolving Shutter," pages 611 to 624 of the Bluebook. Your specific question is answered on page 624 and the remedy is given.

If you have travel ghost (white streaks up or down, or both, from white objects on the screen) both ways, then your shutter either has too much lost motion or its master blade is too narrow; probably the former in your case. Hold the flywheel stationary and see how much you can move the rim of the shutter. If the movement is excessive, there either is some gear loose on its shaft or some gear or gears badly worn. If the latter, then I think you had better have a loan head sent you and ship your mechanism to the factory (317 East 34th Street, New York City) for overhauling and repairs. If there seems to be no excess of lost motion, then hold a sheet of dark colored paper in the light beam in front of the projection lens, and at varying distances therefrom, to determine the point where the light beam has least diameter. Perhaps you may be able to move your shutter in or out on its shaft to a position where the light beam has less diameter. The aerial image is the best place, if you can get the shutter to it. If nothing can be done this way, then you must have a wider master blade, and you can get one by either using very small rivets, attaching a bit of metal to each side of the master blade—each side in order to preserve the balance—allowing it to extend over the blade edge sufficiently to add enough width to stop the travel ghost. For myself, I would cut a master blade of stiff cardboard, such as business cards are printed on, making it the required width, riveting it to the metal master blade. The thing is to make the blade a bit wider and to do it without seriously disturbing either the mechanical or the optical balance of the shutter. I advise you, strongly, to get a Bluebook and study up on such things. In the end it will prove the best value you ever got for six dollars, and the fact that you ask this question is evidence that you need it.

Condenser Argument

John A. Maurer, projectionist, Massillon, Ohio, says:

A matter which has an indirect, but a nevertheless important, bearing upon your recent discussion with John Griffith with regard to the condenser line-up of Bruce S. Watson, Muscatine, Iowa, is the thing I shall discuss.

With the plano convex or M. Bi-C. condenser systems now in general use, in which both lenses are of the same diameter, the screen illumination does not fall off nearly so rapidly when crater distance is increased as the ordinary method of calculation would indicate.

This does not mean that the method of calculation is wrong, but that other considerations enter into the matter in such a way as to modify its application. The accompanying diagrams are accurate copies of drawings made by Young's construction—an accurate method of laying out light ray action which takes care of all factors entering into the matter. These diagrams are based upon what I know to be the actual curves of the imported lenses now on the market, assumed to be made from glass having a refractive index of 1.525—which I have found to be the average of a number of specimens tested, and, to be strictly accurate, on yellow light.

Figure II shows the combination of a 6.5 and an 8.5 inch plano convex, with the crater four inches from the face of the collector lens.

Figure III shows the line-up of the Muscatine projectionist. It is of no especial importance in this discussion, and is included merely for your comparison.

By the ordinary method of calculation the light-gathering powers of systems I and II would be in the ratio of the square of 4 to the square of 3, which would mean that system II would pass 44 per cent. less light than would system I. However, you will note that in neither of these systems is the whole of the diameter of the collector lens effective. You will also note that in figure II a larger diameter is working than is effective in figure I. This is partly due to the rays being more nearly parallel between the lenses and partly to the fact that the thinner converging lens reduces the distance between the edges of the two lenses. The angle of rays effective, insofar as concerns the converging lens, is 59 degrees in system I and 52 in system II.

Now, in order to accurately calculate the relative amounts of light in these different angles, it is necessary to compare the areas they intercept on the surfaces of spheres (imaginary) of equal diameters, having their centers at the source of light. The simplest way of getting this comparison is to compare the values of one minus the cosine of half the angle, or as a mathematician would put it, "Vers. ½ A." Figured by this method system II PASSES 22 per cent. less light than does system No. I.

And now here is another factor to consider. No. II has much less spherial aberration than has No. I. The importance of this factor in condenser systems has, I think, been greatly underestimated. Its effect here is that a part of the extra light which does get through No. I is wasted at the spot, or if it does appear on the screen it is as discolored light. This effect is so pronounced that it very nearly evens matters up, as between the two combinations. The light from No. I might be a bit the brighter of the two, but that from No. II certainly would be the whiter and more pleasing, and this, be it understood, is entirely aside from any question of getting the entire light beam through the projection lens.

Figures I-a, II-a and III-a show, by pairs, the crossing points of marginal and paraxial rays from combinations I, II and III respectively. They are drawn to the same scale as the other diagrams, i.e., full size. The scale of inches under each diagram has its zero at the center of the combination from which the rays are coming. If you extend the lines of these figures the proper distance to the left you will find they will join up with the rays of figures I, II and III.

I think these drawings really speak for themselves better than I can speak for them, so I will close with the remark that I have been studying this angle of the condenser problem for several months past, both theoretically and by practical experiment.

By the way, I might remark that diagram III-a shows that either Muscatine has not given his exact crater distance, or his condensers are inaccurate as to focal length. He says he uses his aperture 18 inches from the aperture, whereas the line-up he gives forms the best spot at 15 inches from the condenser.

Note: I do not claim that any of these diagrams represent actual exact working conditions, but this does not in the least affect their value as studies of the effect of spherical aberration.

First off, while I think of it, when writers speak of distance from condenser they should always designate whether its optical center, a point midway between the two lenses, or the face of the collector lens is meant.

As to what you have advanced: Well, for the most part, I shall have to leave the discussion of it to those better versed in scientific optics than I am, maintaining, however, that while it is possible that other elements, such as those you have named, may operate to modify the operation of the law of the open light source, as illustrated on page 162 of Bluebook, to some extent, as I now see the matter I would place heavy emphasis on the "to some extent." Figure I-a, II-a and III-a are interesting and instructive—very much so, in showing the varying effect of spherical aberration in different plano convex and in the M Bi-C condenser. If your drawing III-a is correct, as I presume it is, the reduction of spherical aberration by the addition of the two additional surfaces is much more pronounced than I had supposed it to be.

Let us see what some of you optical sharks can do with what brother Maurer has presented.

Why the Sputter

An Iowa man, who desires to be unknown, is up to his eyes in trouble. He says:

I have been projecting motion pictures in this small town for a year and have had no trouble at all. Have the Bluebook and had the Third Edition as well, and have studied hard. To that and the kindly assistance of the boss I attribute my ability to get by. But now I'm up to my eyes in trouble. I am using the same carbons I always did—Columbia—but of late the arc continually sputters and I just can't hold it steady. It has nearly driven me mad with worry.

I built a film storage cabinet a few weeks ago and it works just fine. Have a separate compartment for each reel, with a space below which I keep filled with water. Above the reels is a cupboard in which I keep my supplies. It is very neat and convenient.

Really, friend, I had to laugh. You built a film storage tank with water below and your supply cupboard above. Keep your stock of carbons in it too, don't you? The trouble (sputtering) began just after you got that cabinet finished, didn't it? Sure!

The water reservoir you have kept religiously supplied with very wet water, which is good for the films. BUT when those carbons sputter they are merely swearing at you for subjecting them to a vapor bath and then expecting them to burn well.

Your cabinet is doubtless very nice, and all right for the film, but you yank those carbons out pronto, and put them in a thoroughly dry place; also place half a dozen of them in the bottom of the lamphouse to dry out, and every time you use one replace it from your stock. Do these simple things and see how quickly the carbons will stop sputtering, and start purring in satisfied content. See page 388 of Bluebook.

He Has Trouble

Jacob R. Steinfield, New Orleans, La., has trouble on his mind, which he describes as follows:

I have two Power 6-B projectors, am using fifty amperes from a motor generator set and have been getting what I thought was very good results until right lately. Two weeks ago a projectionist who had a card from the Chicago local visited me and talked very big about "what they did in Chicago." He was not at all slow in telling me what I ought to do, one thing being to take my projection lenses apart and clean their inner surfaces.

I had never done such a stunt. The lenses looked clean and I hesitated, whereupon he took one of them apart and "showed me how." He went out and got a little alcohol, mixed it with water and washed all the lenses, and cleaned everything thoroughly. I'll say he did a thorough job, BUT when I started the show that night, and Chicago had departed, there was a ring of light clear around the screen when the projector of which he cleaned the lens was working. The other was all right—its lens not having been touched.

I have taken the lens apart and, so far as I can see it is all right. Can you tell me what it is and how to fix it?

The trouble is that your Chicago friend did too thorough a job, or scrubbed one wrong place rather. Evidently he wiped the interior surface of the barrel, which he should not have touched, and in so doing removed the black coating, or some of it. The ring you see is light reflected from the sides of the lens barrel.

Take your lens apart and paint the interior of the barrel with a coating of coach painter's lampblack thinned down with turpentine, allowing the paint to dry very thoroughly before re-assembling the lens. In other words, be very certain that all the turpentine has evaporated before re-assembling. You may hasten this by heating the lens barrel SLIGHTLY—just so you can still hold it in your hand without discomfort. Or you may lay the barrel in the blast of a fan for half an hour.

In re-assembling, be very certain that you get each lens in the same place you removed it from, and that the strongest convex surface is next the screen. Set up the holding ring snugly, but DON'T clamp them down tight on the lenses.

You should take your lenses apart and clean their interior surfaces after about five hundred hours' use, if you run say ten hours a day; or after two hunded and fifty hours' use, if you run evenings only. They may look perfectly clean as you look through them, but that is no proof they are not sufficiently fogged to greatly increase the reflecting power of the surfaces, hence the light loss. See page 141 of the Bluebook. Do not imagine that that chap represented Chicago. Chicago has some AWFUL dubs, true; also she has some as good men as you will find anywhere—distinctly high class. Most large cities are the same.

His Difficulty

(In last week's issue an Ohio projectionist complained of his eight-year-old lenses—chief difficulty being curvature of field. I strongly advised him to get new lenses. Due to an accident in the print shop, the additional information which follows was left out of the paper.—Ed.)

Of course, the installation of new lenses would effect no startling change. The patrons might not even notice it, and the manager might have to look twice to see the difference, BUT THE DIFFERENCE IS THERE, and the thing friend manager has to sell HAS been improved, hence, while the difference in seat sales may not be at all noticeable, it nevertheless is there, since the better a thing is the more inclined the public is to buy it.

As to Lenses

As to the possibility of absolute flatness of field, there is only one kind of lens will give that, and that is an anastigmat lens, BUT with the present day high-grade projection lenses available, there should be no perceptible curvature of field with a sixteen-foot picture at 120-foot projection distance; also you should be able to get an acceptable sharpness at top and bottom without your screen titled, with the projection angle you have, or at least a very slight tilt should do the trick.

I would suggest that you buy direct from a lens manufacturer and get a guarantee that there will be no perceptible curvature of field.

As to a standard—I know of none which could be applied, except this: Cut a strip of mica the width of a film. See to it that it is perfectly flat. On one surface draw perfectly straight scratch lines one-eighth of an inch apart, both ways. Place this in the projector in place of a film, BEING CERTAIN IT LIES PERFECTLY FLAT OVER THE APERTURE; project the lines to the screen and test their straightness with a line stretched over them. If the lines are not straight the lens is imperfect. You may be certain the mica is flat over the aperture if the lines are in sharp focus all over the screen. If any one can suggest a better method of lens testing, let him do so.

Many Picture Theatres Are Building and Opening in the Pacific Northwest

THE theatre building program in the Pacific Northwest is keeping pace with building activities in other lines, according to recent reports from our Seattle correspondent of proposed new houses, those under construction at the present time and several that have made their bow during the past few weeks.

Among those just opening their doors are the Proctor Street Blue Mouse in Tacoma, under direction of John Hamrick, which had its premiere November 13 to a large, enthusiastic audience. It is the most beautiful suburban house in the Pacific Northwest, and was completely furnished and equipped by B. F. Shearer, Inc.

Mayor Fawcett of Tacoma made the opening address. "The Green Goddess" was the feature picture. An unusual record was achieved in the finishing of the house to the final detail before it was thrown open to the public. There will be no gang of workmen on the premises, frantically gathering up the loose ends.

Shearer made complete installation of all furnishings, equipment and interior decoration in eight days, turning the house over complete to J. William Houck, who will manage both Tacoma Blue Mouse theatres.

Other New Houses Scheduled

The Arcade, Myers & Ford's new house in La Grande, Oregon, which has been furnished by B. F. Shearer, Inc., was scheduled to open about November 20.

B. F. Shearer, Inc., has also secured the complete contract for lighting, decorating, furnishing and equipping a new 800-seat theatre in Cottage Grove, Oregon. It will cost in the neighborhood of $75,000.

William Morelock will be the owner. He now operates the Arcade, which he will close when its new namesake is ready for occupancy about January 15. The new house will have a full stage for road attractions.

Seattle is also due for a new house in the suburban district. It will be located at 2352 Beacon avenue, and will be a frame building, 120x40 feet, costing around $15,000. The Prefontaine Building Company will be the owner. E. W. Houghton & Son are architects. B. F. Shearer, Inc., will seat the house with 500 upholstered Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs.

D. Constanti, who owns two houses in Tacoma and one in Puyallup, has let contracts for his new theatre in Sumner. B. F. Shearer, Inc., will completely furnish and equip the house, as well as furnishing all lighting specifications. Projection will be Simplex and the 600 seats will be Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs.

The Heilig Theatre, which has just opened as a high class feature picture house, giving special musical programs and prologues, has installed a Robert Morton organ.

Tilamook's Coliseum Has Opened

Partridge & Morrison's attractive new $75,000 theatre, which recently opened in Tilamook, Oregon, is a notable addition to the motion picture theatres in the Pacific Northwest. The house is of brick and is finished with a marquee and a big electric sign in front. The box office is fitted with an automa-ticket machine.

Inside the color scheme is in soft shades of gray and rose. Gray theatre carpets cover foyer and aisles. All lighting effects are of the flood light type, with a handsome fixture in the ceiling, giving an effect of warmth.

Seven hundred and fifty Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs were used on ground floor and balcony. Drapes and velour stage curtains are of soft blues, and an unusual effect is created by the front exits, which are of the ramp order, fenced by a low railing.

Exits are draped. Beautiful flower gardens at either side give an opportunity for colored lighting effects. Above these the organ grille, which is of fresco effect, extends to the stage at either side.

Well Equipped Projection Room

In the foyer, drapes with valances are elaborated by candle bracket fixtures, while odd lanterns are hung from the ceiling. Several handsome wall mirrors are used effectively. Stairways lead from either side to rest rooms and balcony. The fireproof projection room is above the balcony in the center of the house and is equipped with two Simplex projectors, a Transverter, stereopticon, spotlight and other modern apparatus. A ventilating system is used.

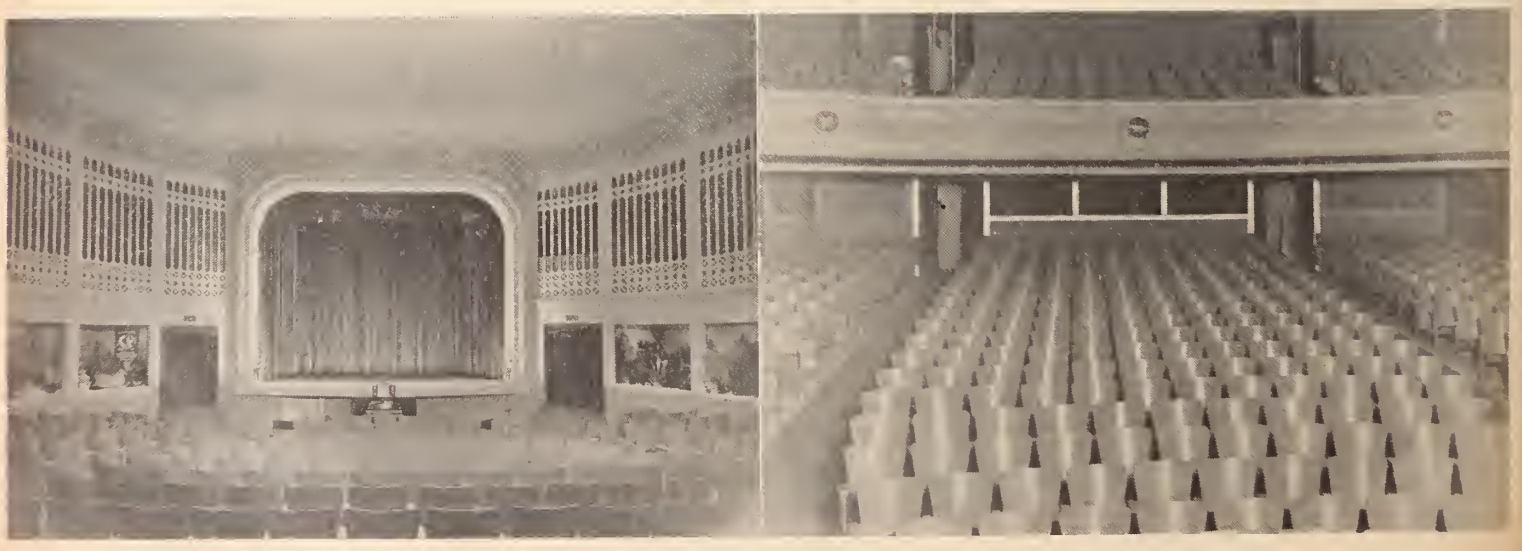
B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, was in complete charge of interior furnishings, decorating, seating, special lighting effects and booth equipment.

Loew Will Have New Theatre in Woodhaven

Plans have been approved for the construction of a theatre and business building costing $600,000, at the corner of Ninety-sixth street and Jamaica avenue, Woodheaven, L. I., N. Y.

The theatre, which will be operated under the Loew banner, which will have a seating capacity of 2,500, will show vaudeville and first run feature pictures.

A. H. Schwartz, who built and is operating the Farragut Rialto and Kingsway theatres of Brooklyn and the Merrick theatre of Jamaica, and Henry Clay Miner are building the house.



INTERIOR VIEWS OF COLISEUM THEATRE, TILAMOOK, OREGON

This new house cost $75,000. Its seating is arranged to accommodate a total of 750 patrons on the ground floor and in balcony.

EDWARD EARL PRESIDENT
NINETY GOLD ST. NEW YORK, N.Y.

West Coast Theatres Co. Appropriates $5,000,000 for New Picture Theatre

AN appropriation of $5,000,000 has been made by the West Coast Theatres Company, Inc., for its 1924 expansion and development program in Los Angeles and vicinity.

This sum does not include the money to be expended in the production of motion pictures, but represents the amount of cash to be spent by the concern in the purchase and leasing of property on which new theatres will be erected.

At the present time the concern has a total of 110 theatres in California, fifteen of which are in the northern part and the remainder in Southern California.

Three New Theatres

Part of this appropriation, Vice President Lesser states, will be used for the purchase of property on which three large new "Class A" structures, with a seating capacity of approximately 2,500 will be built.

In addition to these, numerous other smaller houses will either be built or purchased and a large "Class A" theatre, store and office structure, to represent an investment of $500,000, will be erected at Washington and Vermont. Tentative plans for this structure are now being prepared by local architects.

Ten new theatres, which will be operated by the West Coast Company, are now under construction and several of them will be open to the public before the first of the year.

The location of these playhouses and the amount invested in each is given as follows:

Long Beach, $750,000; Avenue Fifty-six and Pasadena avenue, $200,000; Glendale, $300,000; Fifty-fourth street and Western avenue, $400,000; Orange, $150,000; Compton, $100,000; Pomona, $250,000; Santa Monica, $400,000, and San Pedro, $750,000.

The money expended in the construction of these improvements is being made by the West Coast Company and their associates under their 1923 appropriation.

Plan a Realty Company

In conjunction with the $5,000,000 expansion program, Lesser also announces that plans are now being drawn up for the organization of a West Coast Realty Company, to be capitalized at more than $1,000,000.

This corporation will include the present board of directors in the West Coast Theatres Company and is being formed for the purpose of purchasing and improving property in the vicinity of locations selected for theatre sites.

The directors of the West Coast Theatres Company are M. and A. L. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser, Davis Bershon and Joseph M. Schenck.

SEATING—

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.

"The Best of the Season"

So the movie editor of the St. Louis Times termed "The Light That Failed." Judging from the big business this picture is doing at the Missouri, St. Louis; the Columbia, Washington; and the Rialto, New York — its first showings — many movie patrons agree with him.

Melford's picturization of the Kipling masterpiece has a happy ending and is high class throughout. There's a print for you at your Paramount exchange.

"As a comedy 'Our Hospitality' is vastly superior to 'Three Ages,' Buster's first full length picture. The present vehicle has enough matter to keep laughter going at a good clip throughout its seven reels, the fun rising in the travelogue to an uproar.

"To see that wabbly string of old-fashioned stage bodies flopping along over the rickety track is a sure cure for indigestion and bad temper.

"But, though there is so much of laughter in the picture, there are thrills aplenty.

"At one point Buster ties a rope around his waist, the other end of which is securely fastened to one of his enemies, who is above him on the top of the hill, waiting to kill him —'Let me have a rope,' this gentle creature says. 'I want to hang a man over the cliff so I can get a better aim to shoot him.'

"There is much more to this episode, but it pales into insignificance for danger when compared with the water fall sequence. Here Buster is lashed to a log, which gets tangled at the very brink of the fall, and while he drops over and is suspended in the air the log holds. He climbs back. Then when the girl comes rushing to death over the fall he swings beneath, catches her, drops her on a safe ledge and makes his own way back to the top of the rocks."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"There are several things that make Buster Keaton's latest picture, 'Our Hospitality,' a remarkable and at the same time the most enjoyable comedy the frozen-faced fun maker has ever accomplished.

"There is suspense mixed with the fun and the rescue scene over a great water fall makes you catch your sides with laughter one minute and gasp in astonishment the next."—San Francisco News.

"One scene after another precipitates hysterics. The famous old 'Rocket,' great-great-great-great-great-grandfather of the modern Mogul engine, has been faithfully reproduced, with its ridiculously inadequate little engine, fired with kindling, pulling three wobbly coaches over a scalloped roadbed. Then there is an amusing scene in the family home of the Canfields, whose private arsenal is called into play with the arrival of the traditional enemy. At the end a really gasping episode is brought about and there is the typically funny Keaton finale. In many respects this is Keaton's best picture; there is plenty of humor. It will probably be swallowed whole by many a wide-eyed movie fan."

KEATON

"Buster Keaton may be proud of 'Our Hospitality,' his latest picture, at the Warfield Theatre.

"Buster is at least one comedian with a desire to really act, who had the ability to convince his producer and manager into letting him try it.

"In 'Our Hospitality' Buster Keaton proves that he is a comedian, dramatic actor and acrobat par excellence. Natalie Talmadge, Mrs. Buster Keaton in private life, is the 'girl' of the story. Pretty and with much of the talent of her two famous sisters Natalie is more than acceptable in the part. Baby Buster also appears as well as Grandfather Joe Keaton and another young actor, Ralph Bushman, son of Francis X. Bushman. — San Francisco Call.

"'Our Hospitality,' which yesterday came to the Warfield for the first showing anywhere, is in my opinion the most enjoyable of the Buster Keaton comedies.

"There are many unexpected turns in the plot, with humor all the way to the satisfactory finish.

"Miss Talmadge plays the Southern girl in pretty manner. Keaton's father drives the engine of the old-time train, 'The Rocket,' so that three generations of the comedian's family are represented in the film. Another member of the cast is Ralph Bushman, son of the distinguished actor." — San Francisco Examiner.

"'Our Hospitality,' Keaton's best comedy, is showing, and the Warfield is as noisy and full of hubbub and laughter and back-slapping and roars as a political smoker with the punch-bowl flowing freely.

"His adventures in a river, down rapids, hanging over waterfalls, etc., are a series of breath-taking surprises that outdo those in 'Way Down East.'

"Natalie Talmadge turns a real heroine and gets swept over a cliff, but luck favors their romance, and when papa and brothers get on the scene, the parson has done his little trick.

"Plenty of rich comedy touches abound. You laugh as you see the engineer's little dog outrun the train. Papa Keaton is the engineer, and Baby Keaton is the youngest juvenile."—San Francisco Bulletin.

Moving Picture World Says

"Our Hospitality"

Buster Keaton's Second Metro Feature Has Novel Theme and Is Unusually Entertaining Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Buster Keaton's second production for Metro, "Our Hospitality," confirms the impression made by "The Three Ages," that excellent judgment was used in presenting him in comedies of feature length. It is a picture that should satisfy all kinds and classes of patrons and cause them to leave the theatre smiling, consequently it should prove a big box-office winner.

"Our Hospitality" contains melodrama, farce, straight comedy and burlesque, all dovetailing smoothly into an entertaining picture, with a climax that while containing fine touches of comedy goes the average thriller "one better" from the standpoint of stunts and thrills.

Aside from its other points of appeal, here is a picture that you can promise your audiences is absolutely different. The introduction of a reproduction of one of the very first railroad trains, with a dinky little engine like the modern stationary engines and coaches that resemble old-fashioned horse-drawn carriages, is a decidedly novel idea and gives opportunities for many original and highly amusing comedy touches.

The theme itself, which in a good natured way succeeds in getting a lot of fun out of a Kentucky feud situation, is an unhackneyed one. Buster finds himself in the home of the other faction but "our hospitality," as explained by the leader, will not permit his being attacked until he leaves. In his schemes to circumvent their vengeance, Buster has a fine chance for the kind of comedy work for which he is noted.

There is a real plot which is never lost sight of, and there is excellent continuity. The comedy situations and chase ending in the big thrill scene where Buster not only is saved by a log to which he is tied getting caught just as he goes over a high falls and his "daredevil stunt" in swinging out and grabbing the heroine in mid-air after she has actually gone over the falls, are consistently developed, none of the action being just dragged in for effect.

Buster has a typical Buster Keaton role and gives an excellent performance, his unique type of comedy showing up to advantage, while naturally he is almost the whole show, he is ably assisted by his wife Natalie Talmadge, who makes a good impression as the heroine, and others whose names appear in the cast, all of whom get into the mood of the picture and give good performances. This is certainly a Keaton cast, for in addition to Buster and Natalie, Buster Keaton, Jr., as a one-year-old baby, will especially delight the feminine patrons.

NO WONDER!

this Man's Pictures are all Clean-Ups

SOMETHING that has never happened in Los Angeles before in the history of the motion picture industry and probably will not soon again, recently occurred there. A motion picture director had three first run pictures running in three first run houses at one and the same time. Jimmy Cruze is the director. And the pictures were "The Covered Wagon," at Grauman's Metropolitan, and "Hollywood," at Grauman's State. "Ruggles of Red Gap," at Grauman's Hollywood, and

Which brings to mind the remarks that might be made upon James Cruze, director. Here is a young man who is turning out great pictures. He is ringing the bell time and again, not only with the box office but with the critics. Yet he is the most businesslike, the least verbose man you ever met. He never talks about art. Generally, his pictures can be self seriously. He doesn't take himself seriously. He doesn't take himself seriously. He doesn't take himself

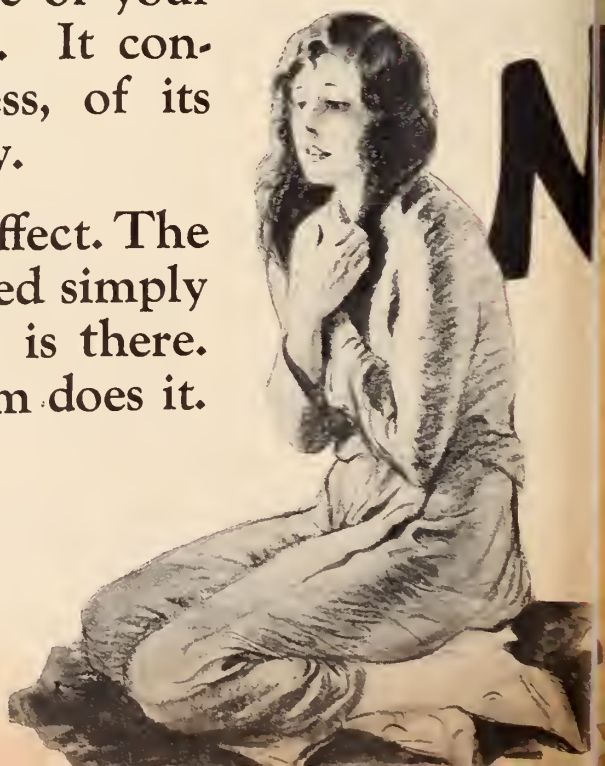
What Victor Seastrom has done—

He has a surprise in store for you!

ANOTHER motion picture has been added to the industry. It is Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man!" adapted from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man." But it is not just another motion picture. It is something more than that.

It is a bit of reality carved right out of life itself—as real as the face of your mother, or your own hand. It convinces you of its humanness, of its stature through its simplicity.

There is no striving after effect. The story is just acted and directed simply and sincerely and the effect is there. Nobody knows how Seastrom does it.



But he does it. He has communicated his own simplicity and sincerity to Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Hobart Bosworth, Aileen Pringle, Creighton Hale, and the other members of the cast; they have never acted better.

No human heart can escape the drama and the emotion which Seastrom has lifted from life and transferred to the screen. It speaks the universal language of the heart, no matter how noble or ignoble that heart may be.

See it and be convinced how great a miracle the mechanism known as a motion picture camera is capable of when there is heart, intelligence, humility and sincerity in the driving force back of it—the mind which directed it. Goldwyn presents

Grab his smoke now—get into his speed—make Hunter's fame mean money to you. The whole country wants to see this youthful star. Here are three great action pictures, smashing box-office successes that will fill your theatre (a fourth, "Grit," will follow soon.)

"Puritan Passions"

Played to crowded houses at the B. S. Moss Cameo Theatre on Broadway for two weeks. The year's most discussed picture on the world's most famous show street. A thrilling story with a dual life and midnight duels, projected against a background of fascinating Puritanical life in the critical days of American History.

Exhibitors Say:

"Youthful Cheaters"

"Brought out the flappers." "Gay scenes and jazz." "Has class." Youthful appeal." "Gets the young 'uns." "Everybody happy." "Pep and pulling power."

"Second Fiddle"

"Another fine Hunter picture." "They all liked it." "Good business three days." "A first fiddle for me." "Played a sweet tune in the box office." "A winner everywhere."

Mr. Joe Merrick, Manager,
Educational Film Exchange,
Los Angeles.

My dear Mr. Merrick:

After looking over nearly 40 single reels to get a reel suitable for the opening of the new Criterion Theatre with the world's premier of Charles Chaplin's picture, A WOMAN OF PARIS, under our new policy of two de luxe shows daily at $1.00 and $1.65 per seat, I finally picked on your Educational Film, THE ANT, the first of the Secrets of Life series.

Joe, I am mighty glad I did for this little picture has been a riot at every show!

The audiences applaud vociferously each time it is shown.

Give us more short reels like this to go with our de luxe shows.

With very kind regards, I am

Yours very truly.

The
WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Prints

"THIS subject will not down," says a memo from the enthusiastic Van Buren Powell, who conducts Moving Picture World's "Straight From the Shoulder" reports.

Then we read another wail from a small-town exhibitor about the condition of the print on his most recent feature.

This happens about once a week—sometimes oftener.

Until we begin to think that the small theatre owner must run up the flag and call out the village band whenever he accidentally receives a print in shape for showing without apologies.

Not a very encouraging situation.

LET'S try to get this straight.

Either the business of the small town theatres is a very vital and necessary part of this industry, or, it is simply "extra money"—or, it is a nuisance.

What is it?

We have basis for judgment in the amount of money that is spent to get the small theatre man's contract. Distribution costs are the thorn in the side of this business. And isn't it true that by far the greatest proportion of the cost is spent on the legion of salesmen roaming the "sticks"?

Over the average it costs as much in most organizations to keep the salesmen moving as they are receiving in salary. And those railroad and hotel expenses are being expended in search of small accounts.

It is conceded, therefore, that the village theatre account is worth something.

Worth following through, at any rate.

Are we doing that? In the most obvious and simple phase of our service—the physical condition of the goods sold?

YOU can buy a package of Uneeda Biscuits at Acker, Merrill & Condit's in New York today, and purchase another box at the Four Corners General Store next week—and feel that you have got your money's worth in both cases.

Is the public not entitled to the same expectation in the case of the motion picture?

Granted that all prints cannot be NEW prints —is there any justification for the print that is impossible—that distorts the acting, renders the story unintelligible, and ruins the patience?

The account that is worth selling is worth keeping.

It is our conviction that the reason small town accounts are not given the service that will KEEP them on the books is that all the emphasis and frenzy is placed on SELLING and not a thought on the keeping.

It is the product of a vicious circle. First, the exchange manager must keep his operating costs at the lowest point possible, meaning the temptation to shave in those parts not immediately concerned with SELLING.

Second, he knows that the ordering of another print puts his head in a noose—he must produce a certain quota of business to justify the print. Rather than take the chance of falling down, he decides, it is far better not to order the additional print, then the home office will never know about the business he MIGHT have secured.

THERE is a problem here that must be solved. We mention it, knowing full well that the mere mention is not going to solve it—that there are financial and physical questions involved that will tax the best brains and most sincere intentions of any organization.

But the thought has come to us that while we are awaiting opportunities to lay laurel wreaths on producing and selling heads—let's give notice that there is opportunity for a man or an organization to gain a prize for DELIVERING THE GOODS. In good condition—as sold, and as bought.

This Week

This week—this month—and this year—they'll never get through talking about the testimonial dinner to HARRY REICHENBACH at the Ritz last Wednesday. SOME large evening; yessir, boy!

As far as the inhabitants of Film Row are concerned it seems foolish to spend time and space on the affair. Everybody was there in person. Everybody—or at least the majority—knows what happened. Description from us is superfluous.

But some one should put down in black and white a tribute to the committee that could handle such an event and carry it through to such glorious success. So here are the names: WILLIAM BRANDT, JOE DANNENBURG, SAM ROTHAFEL, JACK ALICOATE (ex-officio). Sing your own praise—and you can't make it too strong.

But while you are writing the praise for the committee underline each word with a thought of the evening's reason for existence — HARRY REICHENBACH. Harry can surely consider his silvery thatch a real crown after being on the receiving end of an event that packed the Crystal Room of the Ritz with the brains, beauty and wit of the industry.

Just think of having SENATOR JIMMY WALKER for toastmaster and then a card of attractions including "BUGS" BAER, WILLIE COLLIER, HARRY HIRSHFIELD, GEORGE BEBAN, SAMUEL GOLDWYN, NATHAN BURKAN, RICHARD ROWLAND, and a few reels of really humorous film.

The funniest film of all probably being the one of the guests taken as they arrived. Two strangers made and seconded a motion that another reel be taken of the guests departing. It was placed under the table by a unanimous vote.

"BUGS" BAER put everybody at ease at the outset with the remark that he was glad to see the entire industry present, regreting only the unavoidable absence of the cherubic Diamond Brothers.

A World reporter later secured a statement from the Diamond Twins that their absence was due only to their inability to get sufficient police protection.

"Jimmy" Walker spoke the truth when he said he was glad he wasn't the speaker following Baer on the program after which Sam Goldwyn fooled 'em all by coming through with the professional aplomb of a Friar.

Sam's prize thought being: "I hope Harry doesn't take all this too seriously. If he does he may show up at the next dinner with the ninety-five per cent. and I'll have the five."

Willie Collier then told the story of his twelve-month vacation in Hollywood. It's a nifty. Anyway you take it.

Incidentally, Willie explained the origin of the national anthem. "Yes ——." "The song was probably inspired by the Patented Non-Bearing Fruit Trees in the rear of my Hollywood Bungalow."

Harry Hirshfield, who draws "Abie the Agent," told of his interview with Henry Ford in which the flivver king explained his antipathy to Jews by saying: "Every time we hire one as a salesman he always uses the demonstration car to go looking for a good job."

Here's another: "How many Jews are there in the United States?" said Mr. Ford. I told him: "You run for President, Mr. Ford, and you'll know the number exactly."

All this brought about by the statement that Reichenbach would probably handle the publicity on Ford's campaign. If Hirshfield sees Henry again he can tell him on our authority that if the Silver King handles the job Ford will not only be elected President but will probably also acquire the jobs of Grand Klaxon of the Ku Klux and Royal High Mogul of B'nai Brith.

Prominent names strewn all over the dais like loose change. Just a few of those recalled: MARCUS LOEW, EARL HAMMONS, MOE MARK, CHARLES O'REILLY, and the various speakers hereinbefore and otherwise mentioned.

Shucks, the dais couldn't hold them all. Magnuts overflowed to the tables for common ordinary folks like you and me. We rubbed shoulders with DAVID HOWELLS, stumbled over the chair of IRVING LESSER, got a hail from AL LICHTMAN, a smile from CHARLIE BURR, a word from PAUL LAZARUS and CHARLIE MOYER, a nod from VIVIAN MOSES, aid from BOB DEXTER, a chuckle from PAUL GULICK and GEORGE BROWN, advice from DOCTOR GIANNINNI, a laugh from JERRY BEATTY and an invitation from JOHN FLINN, BOB KANE and CHARLIE McCARTHY.

PAUL MOONEY was consorting with PORTLAND OREGON JENSEN, which must be proof that it wasn't exhibitors who turned Paul's hair gray.

And JIMMY PHOTOPLAY QUIRK was around looking as cheery as one of his own circulation statements.

The Crystal Room was festooned like a circus tent, with HERB CROOKER in costume doing the barker act. Herb had considerable trouble keeping his hat on straight.

MAX FLEISCHER contributed a corking "Out of the Inkwell" cartoon that told of the Snoop Hound's investigation of Harry Reichenbach's career. The highlight was Harry's visit as a handsome black haired boy of nine to a fortune teller who said: "You will grow up and enter the picture business." The hirsute adornment flashed gray on the instant.

Ye gods! Here is what the times have come to. When the evening broke up and the old-time speech would have been, "Let's go to Jack's!" we heard DANNY organizing a bridge game. KELCEY ALLEN fainted on the spot. EARL GULICK hurried home.

VALENTINO at the Garden had an easy task of selecting one winner out of eighty-eight beauties compared with our job of awarding the prize on the guest reel. At the hour of going to press it is a deadlock between SAM GRAND and BOBBY NORTH. With SAM ZIERLER scuffling the heels of both.

Speaking of appearances, we expected to find ABE WARNER a "convalescent." And he is ready to take on Firpo.

Didja ever try to watch EVERYTHING at a three-ring circus? Yes? Then you'll know why we've used up our space allotment and haven't told half of the happenings. It can't be done. R. E. W.

Padding of Feature Another Cause of Enormous Waste

By E. W. HAMMONS
President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

AMONG all the almost innumerable interviews and suggestions and criticisms that have followed the first real move toward retrenchment in the film industry, I do not recall a single instance in which attention has been called to the enormous waste, to say nothing of the peril to the exhibitor's business, caused by the padding of feature pictures into unwarranted lengths.

Salaries paid to stars are held up as one of the greatest forms of extravagance in the business. Undoubtedly the salaries paid the bigger stars and directors are in most cases ridiculously high. But when a picture that can and should be made in six reels and produced in twelve or thirteen weeks' time, is padded into ten or eleven reels and the production period stretched from twelve or thirteen weeks into twenty weeks or more, it cannot all be blamed on the stars and their salaries. The salaries are bad enough, certainly, but if the stars were on the payroll twelve weeks instead of twenty or more, think what the difference in total expense would be.

There was quite general discussion of this subject of padded, over-long feature pictures earlier in the year, at which time the expressions of exhibitors showed conclusively that the padding of features was proving a terrible handicap to the picture theatre. But in spite of all that was said and done at this time, the self-centered type of director, seeking personal glory before the general welfare of the industry, goes merrily on dragging out his pictures to unwarranted lengths, not only making it practically impossible for an exhibitor to build up a program of varied entertainment, but actually in most cases killing the entertainment appeal of the feature itself through making it boresome.

For example, only recently a popular novel was offered for screening. A well-known director turned it down because it did not offer enough material for a six-reel feature. But another director took this same story and padded it into eleven reels.

This is not building ENTERTAINMENT—the sort of entertainment that made the motion picture the most popular amusement in the country today. But it is hanging a millstone about the neck of the exhibitor who desires to give his patrons ENTERTAINMENT. And it is causing more waste, perhaps, than any other single evil in the industry.

Was it this sort of thing that built up the wonderful success of the Capitol, Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, or of the Loew theatrical enterprises, or Gordon's or Saxe's or Blank's, or the Balaban and Katz houses or Jensen and Von Herberg's or Grauman's? NO! It was the building up of a show and the advertising of ENTERTAINMENT. These great houses could never have come into existence and prospered by depending each week upon a single feature picture alone, even had the average of truly great pictures among them been much higher than it has been.

Every one of these successful showmen and every other successful exhibitor in the country has sold ENTERTAINMENT to his public. His shows, like vaudeville, have appealed to the public through their great variety and novelty. But how on earth is an exhibitor going to get novelty or variety into his program with a feature eleven or twelve reels long?

Volume business is the only thing that will keep the picture industry going. This is just as true from the exhibitor's standpoint as it is from the producer's or distributor's. The very long novel, if unusually great, may bring the most glory to the author. But the good short story is more widely read and brings the greatest profit to the publisher. In the magazine field, the leading publication devoted to lengthy articles of a serious character can show less than two-fifths of the circulation of the leading magazines devoted to shorter stories of a purely ENTERTAINMENT character. Vaudeville, whose great appeal is variety, so far outstrips in attendance any other form of stage entertainment that there is absolutely no comparison. And the human nature that makes these things true is not going to change when it comes to motion pictures. Still ENTERTAINMENT is the thing. Variety is the great appeal. And the only way picture attendance can be kept up to a high point that will keep this industry prosperous is by giving the public the ENTERTAINMENT that first won its approval for the screen.

So while the whole industry is thinking of economy, it would be well for directors and producers to give special thought to the great waste caused by the padding of feature pictures and to the still more disastrous result in the form of diminishing picture patronage that is sure to result from failure to provide real ENTERTAINMENT on the screens of the nation's theatres. And it would be well for exhibitors to see that directors and producers give thought to this subject by swamping them with emphatic protests, and, if this is not enough, by absolutely refusing to run the program feature which is made into a greater length than is called for by the story.

Anniversary Drive Starts

Hodkinson Salesmen Competing for Ability Awards

The Hodkinson Sixth Anniversary drive is now in full swing. Salesmen and Sales-managers, in the hope of annexing some of the substantial prizes offered by W. W. Hodkinson for the best showings, are using all their powers of persuasion to get their exhibitor friends to co-operate in bringing their division to the fore.

In addition to November-Anniversary month, George Dillon, Branch Sales Manager for New York, has innaugurated Dillon-December month and is offering special prizes in a sales drive of his own.

Heyl Leaves for Coast

Martin J. Heyl, vice-president of Anderson Pictures Corporation, left New York on Sunday for Los Angeles. Mr. Heyl, who has been East for a series of conferences with Carl Anderson, will be permanently stationed on the Coast, in charge of all production for the Anderson organization.

Bennett Recovering

Friends of Chester Bennett, F. B. O. producer of Jane Novak productions and owner of the Bennett Laboratories in Hollywood, will be glad to know that he is slowly recovering from an illness which has kept him confined to his room for several weeks.

Mayer Sees San Francisco as New Film Production Center

LOUIS B. MAYER, independent producer, who went to San Francisco to attend the world premiere of "Pleasure Mad" at the Warfield Theatre, met the leading exhibitors or Northern California at a delightful luncheon at the St. Francis Hotel on November 20. While the affair was arranged on short notice, about fifty were present, including a number from a distance. Mr. Mayer was introduced by Harry Lustig, western district manager for Metro.

The speaker expressed the opinion that combinations of exhibitors, circuits and the like cannot dictate the prices they will pay for films, nor can producers or distributors be arbitrary in this respect. Competition is needed in both producing and exhibiting, he said, but more centralized distribution could do much to eliminate waste.

Plans for the removal of a large part of the Los Angeles picture colony to other fields during the next two or three years were revealed by Mr. Mayer. He stated that producers have not been happy there for some time, that scenic attractions have become inadequate and that new locations were being sought.

"San Francisco in the past," he said, "has made numerous offers to producers to come here. They failed because these concerns had too much invested in Los Angeles, although the scenic and climatic conditions in San Francisco are acknowledged to be superior. The valuation of property in Los Angeles has increased so tremendously that we can sell our holdings at a good profit, and, due to several factors, have decided to move to New York or San Francisco.

"The heads of the companies want the studios moved to New York because the financial interests and main offices are there. The stars, production managers and the like want to come to San Francisco. There is no question but that San Francisco can obtain many of these plants if the proper organization effort is put forth. Tell the eastern heads that this city has no snow, or even frost, that the days are uniformly cool and that it has more hours of sunshine per year than any other city in the United States. Producers know this, but the finacial heads do not. I will come to this city if even a few of the other companies can be induced to come."

Among those who attended the luncheon were Harry Lustig, Fred W. Voigt, Phil Weinstein, Charles Muehlman, A. W. Mather, M. S. Vidaver, L. B. Cross, C. M. Thall, Peter Hanlon, Nat Magner, M. Naify, C. C. Griffin, R. McNeil, Thomas O'Day, Louis R. Greenfield, Rex Midley, John DiStasio, Louis Hyman, H. L. Beach and Nasser Bros.

The Industry Must Cure Own Ills, Says Arthur S. Friend

REGRET that so much about the troubles of the industry have been made public was the keynote of a talk given by Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, before the Hays' Committee on Public Relations on the occasion of the presentation of Distinctive's new picture, "The Steadfast Heart," to that body on Tuesday of last week.

Mr. Friend said that he was not in sympathy with the publication of the views of the men in the industry as to what was wrong in the industry.

"It would be foolish and futile," he said, "for me to say now that there is nothing wrong in the industry. There is a good deal that is wrong, but that is not surprising for, after all, the industry as an industry is only a few years old—surely not more than twenty—and in its present phase only ten. It is a combination, this motion picture industry, of art and business, and every other art that we know anything about, and every other kind of business that we know anything about, is hundreds of thousands of years old. In no art and in no business has perfection been reached, notwithstanding the traditions and the experiences that the other arts and industries enjoy.

"Our ills are all remediable but not through the public. The public is not concerned in anything except the result that is shown on the screen. The remedy for every ill in the motion picture industry is to be found, and to be effected, within the industry. Our problems are not insoluble, though many of them are difficult. I am afraid our cries to the public have resulted in bringing to us the big finger of shame. One who has watched us with cynical amusement for some time told me the other day that if some of those in the industry, who were weeping and wailing about what's wrong in the industry, wanted the answer, they could get it by looking into a mirror. I am afraid his quip is not entirely without justification.

"Most of our difficulties can be overcome by the individual effort of the men at the head of the various companies. If we are paying too much to stars or actors, it is our own fault, and if directors are uncontrollable, perhaps we can gain more by the intensive study of ourselves than by bleating about them. Surely a motion picture company is not the only one in the world that has faced the problem of what to do with men or women who promise or threaten to become invaluable.

"Motion picture executives must be something more than swivel chair salary hounds and bonus cutters. A recognition of their duties and a strict attention to them will be most helpful in the curing of the evils of the industry, and let it be hoped that out of the noise made they may hear the call to work."

No Movies in Amoy

One of the few remaining virgin fields for moving picture exploitation has been discovered in China, where the city of Amoy, with a population of 120,000 inhabitants, has been found to be without a single moving picture theatre, or, in fact, without any amusements whatever.

The absence of moving pictures in so populous a community has just been reported to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., by the American consul.

Buys Studio Site

Harold Lloyd, Pathe's popular comedian, has purchased forty acres in Westwood, Cal., as a site for a mammoth studio which will be erected by the Harold Lloyd Corporation.

While plans for the construction of the Harold Lloyd Studios are actually being drafted at the present time, no definite announcement concerning the details of the new studio enterprise will be forthcoming until the Pathe star completes his present contract with the Hollywood Studios, where he is now renting studio space for the production of his first independent picture for Pathe, titled "The Girl Expert."

The site just purchased lies midway between the tracts recently purchased by William Fox and the Christie Brothers, who are planning a transfer of their activities from Hollywood to Westwood in the near future.

Dance Till Breakfast

Goldwyn Club Affair Is Largely Attended

The Goldwyn Club dance, given at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, Friday night of last week, turned out to be one of the biggest things of the sort in film circles here. In spite of the heavy downpour of rain all afternoon and most of the evening, the attendance reached the 2,500 mark and most of the participants did not go home till it was approaching the breakfast hour.

Dancing began soon after 9 o'clock to music furnished by Vincent Lopez, conducting his Hotel Pennsylvania Orchestra, and from then on till after 3 o'clock alternated with the amusement features which had been provided. More than 90 per cent. of the persons now appearing on the New York stage who had promised to aid in the entertainment portion of the program kept their word, which is in itself something unusual and reflects much credit upon Frank Roehrenbeck and the others in charge of the arrangements.

Johnsons to Sail

Going to Spend Five Years in Africa Making Pictures of Wild Beasts

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, who made "Trailing African Wild Animals," the big Metro success, will sail on the Leviathan on Saturday, December 1, to spend five years in the heart of darkest Africa filming wild beasts for another of their remarkable pictures, which also will be released by Metro.

On arriving at Lake Paradise, in Africa, log cabins will be constructed and a permanent camp made. From these headquarters various journeys will be made to photograph for the motion picture fans of the world the wild life of Africa. Mr. Johnson confidently hopes to obtain even more thrilling motion pictures than those shown in "Trailing African Wild Animals," a picture that has brought to Metro unstinted praise from press, public and exhibitors.

Three European Features Destined for American Market Are Analyzed

The following article from W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World correspondent on the Continent, is the first of a series that will afford a new service to those American producers, importers, distributors and theatre owners that it at all times earnestly desires to serve. These articles will review and analyze big European productions eventually destined for appearance on American screens. Further, if any readers of Moving Picture World wish any specific information regarding the European film world, this publication will be glad to obtain this for them through the co-operation of Mr. Bush.—The Editor.

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

WITHIN the week I have seen three big foreign features, all of them intended for eventual American consumption. One of them is by a director of some note, whose chef d'oeuvre is, at time of writing, still on the screen of a Broadway theatre after a run of many weeks. Perhaps it will pay to analyze these productions. On the best of authorities I am able to say that in the very near future all of them will be bought for the American market. One of the features deals with a strictly modern theme, revolving around the lives of a family of newly rich, while the others are taken from the classics of the world's literature.

These last two, "William Tell" and "The Merchant of Venice," present interesting points of similarity. In both cases the directors have gone to the countries in which the original stories have been laid. The makers of "The Merchant of Venice" have traveled to Venice and have taken every outdoor and many indoor scenes on the shores of the Adriatic Sea. Likewise the producers of "William Tell" have pitched their tents in the villages and mountains of Switzerland, always on the very spots that have become famous through the Tell legend. Both plays have a cast worthy of their best traditions; not a cast of actors taken from the speaking stage of some noted theatre and hurriedly rehearsed for this performance, but artists trained and ripened in the wisdom and the practice of the screen.

Money on both productions has been spent ungrudgingly, but not unwisely and surely not wastefully. Every inch of both films tells of the honest labor, of the midnight oil and the hard struggle without which the gods have never blessed the work of any mortal man. The scenarios of both have taken into account the needs of the screen above all else, and have shaped the stories with that end in view, unhampered by any false reverence of texts and traditions.

Now in spite of all these points of resemblance, it is altogether likely that one of them will find far greater favor with the public than the other. The difference lies entirely in the direction. In "William Tell" the temptation to "play up" the scenery was as great as in "The Merchant of Venice," but the director of "Tell" has splendidly withstood the temptation, while he of "The Merchant of Venice" has yielded to it with a weakness which is almost pathetic. The director of "Tell" has made the most of his scenic opportunities, but he has been guided by this principle: The scenery is here for the sake of the drama and not the drama for the sake of the scenery. There is not a scene in which the background is not strictly subordinated to the action. The snow-capped mountains and all the rest of it are always the frame of the picture—a glorious and beautiful frame to be sure, but never more than a frame.

The result of this admirable restraint and discrimination of the director is astonishing in its effect on the spectator. The setting blends most harmoniously with the action and from this excellent combination there arises a beauty and power which are far more easily felt than described. Every move of the actors, from the principals to the supers, seems most natural and most convincing.

On the other hand, in "The Merchant of Venice" there is altogether too much Venice and too little of anything else. Not much, of course, of the Venice of Shylock and Antonio has been left in the course of the centuries. This fact alone should have put the producer on his guard and should have made him use infinite discretion in the choice of his outdoor settings. As it is, not only the drama but the actors themselves are all lost in the scenery—gorgeous scenery without a doubt, but nothing more than scenery in a case where drama should at all times have triumphed over mere scenery beyond the shadow of a doubt. As a result, the whole film play appears like something blurred and indistinct, while the actors, thoroughly capable with hardly one exception, seem unnatural and their passing to and fro instead of exciting interest, easily becomes tiresome.

"William Tell" might be described as a feature of the first order if the producers had not dodged some of the finest spectacular episodes, apparently for no reason other than that the difficulties seemed too great. The storm on the lake was shown in the titles and on the shore; a couple of rowboats were shown rocking in the wind and the treetops were swaying in the breeze, when Tell appeared and jumped into the boat to save the fugitive from the pursuing minions of Gessler. Not a bit of the lake was seen. One could not help thinking how an American producer would have welcomed such an opportunity for realism and would have never rested until it was achieved in the finest possible fashion.

Likewise, the wreck of Gessler's ship and the escape of Tell were very poorly done, say, somewhat in the early bad manner of 1911. In an American treatment of the subject this episode would have been one of the big things in the play and would have held and thrilled the spectator, while here everybody was glad when the scene was over—it was so obviously clumsy and labored. European production is showing a most unexpected improvement, but it is still lamentably weak on many vital points in the art of the screen.

The modern feature I have mentioned above is called "Miss Raffke," and is perhaps the most interesting of the three, for it represents a most ambitious effort on the part of a foreign director to produce a play strictly modelled on our comedy-drama, a form of screen entertainment that has been popularized in American picture theatres by a school of very capable directors, who have excelled in just this kind of screen work. When well done, this form of production always has been welcomed with special favor by the public on Broadway as well as in the smaller houses in city and country. This feature is here and there suggestive of one of those "Piggie" plays that Sam Bernard excelled in, with here and there touches of "Potash and Perlmutter," though there is nothing distinctly Jewish in the story.

Though the director's touch is a bit heavy now and then and a strain of coarseness crops to the surface, on the whole he has produced something quite remarkable. He has shown more understanding of American taste and manners than any European director I have ever met; he possesses a sense of humor that seems capable of fuller development; he knows how to mix the ingredients of drama and comedy in quite acceptable proportions. All through the film it is constantly apparent that the director has drawn his inspiration from the American screen and that he had his eye on the American public throughout.

The most remarkable aspect of the situation is this: Heretofore the European productions destined specially for the American market have dealt with classic and historic and, in one or two cases, with freakish subjects. Now this director comes forward with a strictly modern theme and turns out something that might well come into competition with the good daily bread of the American screen. Here is a new and most significant point of departure in European production. It is well worth thinking about.

Anna Christie

"ANNA CHRISTIE" is strong, red meat. Boy, oh, boy—it is DRAMA. They'll never see this in your theatre and come out saying: "What was it a ll about?"

And when you come right down to it, isn't that the trouble with most of the pictures you play, not that they are merely "good" or "poor"—but the fact that you know when the audience is leaving they are muttering: "The title of that should be 'For No Good Reason.'"

Well, "Anna Christie" had a foundation of concrete in Eugene O'Neil's play. It is DRAMA. We say it again. Real, poignant, gripping drama. Sometimes unpleasant to the taste—as LIFE itself is at times unpleasant. But at every moment it is the sort of DRAMA that is LIFE.

You will be giving them something when you give them "Anna Christie." Something they'll talk about, and argue about, for weeks. Red meat—strong, red meat.

Fox Officials Attend Opening of New Philadelphia Theatre

WILLIAM FOX dedicated another monument to the motion picture industry when the magnificent new Fox Theatre, at Sixteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, was formally opened Sunday night to one of the most distinguished audiences ever seen in a Quaker City playhouse. The invited first night audience included men and women of the highest social standing in Philadelphia and also city and state political leaders.

Freeland Kendrick, mayor-elect of Philadelphia; John Patterson eminent jurist, and Admiral Archibald Scales, U. S. N., were the guests of honor. In his speech of dedication the mayor-elect thanked Mr. Fox and his associates for building such a magnificent temple of amusement in Philadelphia and said he felt sure the standard of entertainment offered at the Fox Theatre would be of the highest. He pledged the support of the Philadelphians to the new theatrical venture.

Sunday shows are not permitted in Philadelphia when admission is charged and it was necessary for a large squad of police to check the thousands who surged along Market street seeking admission, but who did not have the proper invitations.

The new Fox Theatre, with the sixteen-story office building adjoining, cost $3,250,000. The theatre itself has seats for 2,381, of which 1,250 orchestra chairs are on the first floor. An unobstructed view of the screen may be had from any seat in the house. The beauty and simplicity of the lighting system is one of the best features of the theatre.

The opening was attended by Mr. Fox and many of the officials of Fox Film Corporation. Among those in the party were: Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager; Jack G. Lee, vice-president; Saul E. Rogers, vice-president and general counsel; John C. Eisele, treasurer; Clyde W. Eckhardt, assistant to general manager; Sydney Abel, manager of the foreign department; John Zanft, manager of Fox theatres; Vivian M. Moses, director of advertising and publicity; Edwin E. Hill, director of Fox News.

Erno Rapee, formerly musical director of the Capitol in New York, who is the managing director of the new Fox Theatre, arranged an ambitious program for the opening night. The complete program consisted of the dedication prologue, "Hail Pennsylvania," by a male quartette; overture, "Orpheus," by Offenbach; "My Country," a Bruce Scenic; Bird Song from "Pagliacci," by Madame Marie Pos-Carloforti; Fox Theatre Magazine; prelude to the "The Silent Command," "My Own United States," by the male quartette, and the feature picture, "The Silent Command."

Light Thrown on Many Problems at Saenger Company Convention

PROBLEMS in management, exploitation, presentation, public relations, education, extension and service were the salient points discussed at the sixth annual convention of managers of the Saenger Amusement Company, which owns and operates nearly sixty theatres in eighteen cities in the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas and Florida.

The convention was held in the executive offices of the Company at their Administration building, Tulane and Liberty streets, New Orleans, La. The managers were in session for three days.

E. M. Clarke, secretary of the Company, and in charge of theatre operations, presided at the sessions. The other officials attending were Julian H. Saenger, president, E. V. Richards, vice-president and general manager, and William H. Gueringer, assistant general manager.

William H. Ennis, consulting electrical engineer of the company made a splendid address on the subject of fire prevention and the exercise of every essential to make an audience panic proof in a crowded auditorium. It was one of the most comprehensive arguments on this seldom discussed subject ever heard in this section, and the men as a unit, were loud in their praise of the study Mr. Ennis made of the situation.

Maurice F. Barr, supervising manager of the New Orleans Theatres, discussed the scope of a manager's sphere in the relation to his public. Gaston Dureau, booking manager, Norman L. Carter, publicity director and the heads of the supply and mechanical departments, led the round table discussion that followed in group conferences. Julian Saenger was host at a midnight party at the Little Club, and the Elks were host at a souper dansant at the Louisiane, to visiting managers together with the St. Charles Theatre Players who were observing their first anniversary. This latter is also a Saenger enterprise.

F. I. L. M. Dinner

Large Gathering Entertained With Timely Speeches and Jazz

Two thousand attended the F. I. L. M. Club dinner at the Commodore Hotel Saturday evening, November 24, and voted the occasion entirely successful.

Beginning at eleven o'clock, the speakers, introduced by Toastmaster James J. Walker, touched upon topics of timely interest. In introducing George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York Censorship Commission, Mr. Walker indicated his intention of leading the fight for the repeal of the censorship measure in Albany next year.

William Brandt spoke of the wisdom of bringing the ten thousand film salesmen in the United States into the fight for the admission tax repeal, and later stated that he planned arrangements to accomplish this in New York State. Sydney S. Cohen, approached after the dinner in regard to this idea, said that it was essential that as many people as possible be enlisted in the battle to remove the admission tax burden.

Chain buying was the topic of remarks by Marcus Loew, who intimated that the situation wherein exhibitor combinations existed was largely due to the competitive methods and the hard bargains driven by exchange managers themselves; he further ventured the hope that it might soon be possible for exhibitors, through organization, to make their film buying arrangements through some central purchasing unit.

The Tide Turns?

The annual convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, held in Albany during the past week, adjourned without a declaration either for or against motion picture censorship, eliminating quietly from the program the proposed showing of deleted portions of motion pictures scheduled for a luncheon during one of the afternoons, at which Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, of the State Motion Picture Commission, was a speaker. The defeat of the plan to show "forbidden" cuts from motion pictures was one of the most decisive victories for the conservative forces in the convention.

Big Southwest Meetings

Important Conventions to Be Held in Dallas and Oklahoma City

TWO conventions of importance are scheduled for the Southwest in the early part of December. One will be held in Dallas, Texas, and the other in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

All arrangements have been practically completed for the semi-annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, to be held December 4 and 5, at the Jefferson Hotel at Dallas.

The theme of the convention will be a program seeking repeal of the admission tax.

Col. H. A. Cole of Marshall, Texas, well-known exhibitor and president of the organization, has just completed a trip over Texas visiting exhibitors and congressmen, and also went to Washington, where he conferred with the Jake Wells group. Col. Cole was also in conference with exhibitor leaders at New York City and French Lick Springs, and from these various conferences will outline a plan for the Texas exhibitors.

"It is a cold business proposition," said S. G. Howell, editor and head of the publicity committee. "Nearly all of our program will be devoted to that one aim, to repeal the admission tax."

H. B. Robb of Robb & Rowley, West Texas Exhibitors, is at the head of the Dallas arrangements committee.

The Theatre Owners and Managers Association of Oklahoma will hold its second meeting of this year December 3 and 4 at Oklahoma City.

One of the chief topics to be taken up will be reciprocal insurance, and another subject of interest to be discussed will be the workings of the Film Board of Trade. Work looking toward the repeal of the admission tax will be one of the most important matters before the convention.

C. H. Macgowan Married

The news leaked out in film circles during the past week that Claude H. Macgowan, the other half of the Ernest Shipman organization, was married early this month. Though one of the youngest executives in the motion picture business, Mr. Macgowan is a veteran of the film industry. Before he became associated with Mr. Shipman he was general manager for Universal.

Martha Mansfield Dying

Martha Mansfield, stage and screen beauty, lies near death in a San Antonio, Texas, hospital as the result of burns received when her dress caught fire on November 29 while on location in the Southern city. Her chances for recovery are said to be slight.

Miss Mansfield went from the Ziegfeld Follies into motion pictures and attracted much attention for her beauty as well as her acting. She was leading woman for John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and her latest picture was "Potash and Perlmutter."

Motion Picture Day Results Being Compiled; Report Later

RESULTS as indicated in the returns from theatre owners now being made to national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in connection with the observance of National Motion Picture Day on November 19 are very pronounced in every way and take into account every practical phase of motion picture service, says Sydney S. Cohen, national president.

The outstanding circumstances, he believes, is that the appeal made to the public brought the most gratifying results, indicating that theatre owners may at all times in an honest, frank, open way impress every person in their community with any matter they have under consideration. A report will be made after the board of directors pass on the returns.

Because of this great response on the part of the public, these results in all instances were satisfactory, and in many cases have been of a practically overwhelming character. Through the elements of exploitation indulged in by many theatre owners, the business of the theatres on National Motion Picture Day was much increased. Illustrative of this was a letter from Jay Allen Glenn, of Hendersonville, N. C., who wrote:

"I made a three-way connection, the schools with Educational Week, National Motion Picture Day, and the appearance of real actors now making pictures nearby. I had my house full in spite of a Lyceum number in the City Hall next door, and a mass meeting at the Court House."

This was especially evident in Western Pennsylvania where, through the organized theatre owners of that section, many extra efforts in showmanship and organized propaganda were put forth. These included radio talks, a proclamation by the Mayor of Pittsburgh, special newspaper advertising, program development, the use of quartettes, choral unions, and mutual arrangements with the Elks, Moose and other fraternal societies.

Some outstanding phases are indicated in such centers as Aurora, Ill., where in the theatre conducted by Messrs. Burford and Rubens, the attendance was very much augmented and the lines of exploitation of a very advanced nature. Entire pages of advertising matter appeared in the daily and Sunday newspapers of that section. Endorsements were received from the Mayor of the city, the Grand Army Post, Knights of Columbus, Moose, Kiwanis, Boy Scouts, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. M. H. A., Daughters of Veterans, American War Mothers, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Chamber of Commerce, American Legion, W. C. T. U., Lions and many other societies, clubs and leading citizens. Special programs were placed in all of the theatres of the Burford Rubens Circuit for that day.

In Malden, Mass., the Strand, Mystic and Orpheum theatres did a splendid business, augmented largely by the special advertising placed in the Malden newspapers, which covered an entire page. This was supplemented by special news articles and editorial mention and also by securing the endorsement of the Mayor, various civic and fraternal societies, school authorities and leading citizens generally.

From different parts of the country, extended reports are coming into national office indicating the wonderful success of National Motion Picture Day. As soon as the returns are all filed and computed, the matter will be submitted to the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. by National Chairman William Bender, Jr., and a complete report made.

M. P. T. O. A. Insurance at Reasonable Rate Announced

ONE of the enterprising moves associated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is the establishment of the insurance department of that organization. Through the operation of this department it is proposed to save theatre owners from 30 to 40 per cent. in the premiums paid on insurance. Arrangements have been effected with Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange, of 137 South Fifth street, Philadelphia, through which theatre insurance is given exhibitors, and where this has been in force, savings in premiums aggregating about 40 per cent. have been made, it is said.

At the Washington convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, General Manager Perrin, of the Inter-Insurance Exchange, explained the process. His talk so impressed theatre owners that many availed themselves of the advantages he held forth. H. J. Schad, president of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, the owner of several large theatres in Reading and Lebanon, Pa., took out this form of insurance over a year ago and now reports a saving of 40 per cent. Similar reports come from other places.

To make the work of insurance easier for the theatre owner, the M. P. T. O. A. has established the insurance department at national headquarters, 132 West 43rd street, New York City. Letters have been forwarded to all theatre owners calling attention to the savings effected through this form of insurance, and it is believed that considerable money will be saved them in this way. Theatres are now listed in a special class by the Underwriters. This risk is rated higher in most instances than that applied to commercial lines in the face of the fact that theatres are among the best built and safest in the country as a general proposition. This new form of insurances gives theatres a favored classification in line with the material facts and thus cuts down premiums while affording absolutely the same form of protection.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Goes to N. Y. American

Louella Parsons Becomes Screen Editor for Hearst

Louella O. Parsons, for six years motion picture editor of the Morning Telegraph, has accepted a position with William Randolph Hearst to write on motion picture subjects for the New York American. Miss Parsons will conduct a daily and Sunday department and in addition review the current productions. She comes to her new position with many years' experience, having started her career as a reporter on the Chicago Tribune. Leaving the Tribune she became scenario editor of the old Essanay Film Company in Chicago, where she established a reputation as an authority on scenarios. She is the author of one of the first books published on how to write for the movies.

With this background of studio knowledge, the Chicago Herald engaged Miss Parsons to create a motion picture department. This was one of the first of its kind in the country and was the first to treat motion pictures in a serious, dignified manner.

Miss Parsons is a pioneer in motion pictures, having had almost twelve years' experience in writing about every phase of the motion picture. She is considered today to be the best informed woman on matters that concern motion pictures in this country. Her opinion is sought by producers, directors, exhibitors and stars who have learned to rely upon her judgment and her knowledge.

F. B. O. Sales Conference

Optimistic Note Struck at San Francisco Meeting

Pep and optimism were the twin keynotes of the San Francisco sales conferences held last week by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of F. B. O.

Among those who attended the confab at the San Francisco office were, besides General Manager Berman, L. G. Metzger, of Portland; A. H. Huot, of Seattle; W. B. Corby, Salt Lake; Sid Goldman, San Francisco; Harry Cohen, Los Angeles, and Art Schmidt, newly appointed West Coast Supervisor of F. B. O. Mr. Schmidt was formerly general manager of exchanges for Universal and is now making his home in Los Angeles.

Lichtman With Universal

To Handle Presentations On "The Hunchback of Notre Dame"

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has signed Al Lichtman in an executive capacity, and his first job is the management of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Universal's spectacle drama now being presented under special arrangement in various American cities.

Concerning the new arrival in the Universal home office, Laemmle pays the following tribute:

"I am highly gratified to announce Al Lichtman's affiliation with Universal. I have always admired his ability and his foresight. He brings to Universal a far-reaching perception of film conditions and a driving power almost unequalled in the industry."

Lichtman is outspoken in his enthusiasm for Universal.

"I consider my coming to Universal the greatest opportunity I ever had," he says. "It is the biggest thing I ever did. The Universal organization, with its remarkable stability, its great good will and its world wide activities, affords unlimited possibilities for big achievements in the film industry."

Berman on West Coast

Will Discuss Production Schedules for Next Year

Expressing the keenest optimism over the future of the industry and dismissing the current uneasiness over production costs as merely a temporary difficulty, Harry M. Berman, general sales manager for Film Booking Offices of America Inc., arrived at the Robertson-Cole studios in Hollywood last week to confer on production schedules for the coming season. The sales manager was given a hearty welcome on his arrival.

"F. B. O. remarked Mr. Berman, "Has no complaints to offer for business at the present time. What we are particularly interested in is dynamic salesmanship and showmanship—both of which are absolutely vital to successful administration of a film organization in this era of fast-moving competition.

"F. B. O. is a little more than one year old and I think we should be forgiven for doing a little crowing over the splendid strides we have made."

Mr. Berman then characterized the talk of panic and slumps as exaggerated, asserting that soaring production costs would come down as a natural reaction to the generous expenditures at the studios during the last several months. In his opinion it will not take the leaders of the industry long to get it back to normalcy.

W. B. Frank Elected

Becomes Vice-President of H. E. Roach Studios

W. B. Frank, who recently resigned as feature sales manager for Pathe to join the Hal Roach organization, was elected on Monday, November 26, to the vice-presidency of the Hal E. Roach Studios. News of Mr. Frank's election was contained in a dispatch from Los Angeles, where Mr. Frank is at present conferring with his associates of the Hal Roach Company. In his capacity as vice-president, Mr. Frank will have complete charge of all the Hal Roach business activities in the East. He will leave for New York on Saturday, December 1 and establish headquarters in the Pathe home office building.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE

Independent Achievement

Samuel Goldwyn's "The Eternal City" Breaks Record of New Jersey House

That Samuel Goldwyn's efforts as an independent producer are resulting in an intrinsic reward to the industry, in the form of good pictures, is further demonstrated by the success attained, already, by George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Eternal City," which had a test engagement at Paterson, New Jersey, last week and succeeded in setting a new level for admissions at Fabian's Regent Theatre.

Opening to the biggest Monday in the history of that house, it continued throughout the week to smash box office records and concluded the six-day engagement with a very fine general result.

Last Sunday "The Eternal City" opened at the beautiful Eastman Theatre, Rochester, and on Monday Mr. Goldwyn received a telegram from Managing Director William Fait stating that "The Eternal City" had succeeded in attracting the biggest house the Eastman Theatre has known since its opening, with the exception of two Sundays in its early days.

Coming on top of the success of "Potash and Perlmutter," this new accomplishment of George Fitzmaurice establishes Samuel Goldwyn's independent activity as one of the progressive movements during 1923 for the screen, and demonstrates his perspicacity in selection of cast and subject and the vindication of his faith in George Fitzmaurice as a great artist and balancer of drama.

"The Eternal City" has been set in for indefinite runs in many First National key cities.

Fox Foreign Heads Here

Alberto Rosenvald and E. P. Cetran, branch managers at Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro for Fox Film Corporation, arrived in New York this week for a sales conference at the New York home office. Within the next few weeks Fox managers from South America and also from Australia will report at the New York office. Robert W. Beckman has been appointed Scandinavian Manager of Fox Film Corporation and is on his way to Stockholm to take charge of the newly opened branch office there.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Capitol, Charleston, W. Va., Destroyed in $150,000 Fire

Fire of undetermined origin, early in the morning of November 15 in the top of the building, destroyed the Capitol Theatre, one of the most beautifully appointed picture houses in the State, at Charleston, W. Va. The loss to the theatre itself will reach in the neighborhood of $150,000, partially covered by insurance, while adjoining buildings suffered damage from water and smoke that will run into several hundred dollars.

As to the origin of the fire that wiped out the interior of the theatre, with the exception of the balcony and the booth for the motion picture machines—which, although still standing, were heavily damaged by water and smoke—neither officials connected with the theatre nor heads of the local fire department were able to offer a theory.

The Capitol opened on December 26, 1921, marking the entrance to local business activities of A. B. Hyman, of Huntington, one of West Virginia's best known pioneer theatre men and capitalists. Associated with Mr. Hyman were Fred Middleberg, of Huntington, and Charles Middleberg, of Charleston, local automobile man and former member of the city council.

Since its opening the Capitol has been managed by Harris P. Wolfberg. Mr. Hyman visited the Pittsburg Film Row the day after the fire and stated that the ruined theatre would be rebuilt immediately at an approximate cost of $200,000.

Although it will be several days before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania will announce the definite figure in dollars and cents as to what money will be sent to the national organization as a result of the extra drive for business on National Motion Picture Day, it is unanimously agreed that the day was a big success financially and that most of the local film theatres did much better than average business.

Nothing was left undone here to acquaint the public with the fact that November 19 was the great day on which everybody should attend a picture theatre. The public did its part and attended the picture theatres, many of which listed special added attractions to properly celebrate the big day. Other houses saw to it that their program for the day was somewhat better than average.

Picture theatres took on a holiday attire. American flags and streamers were in abundance, along with the banners announcing the event. Pittsburgh's Fifth avenue was a mass of decorations, and if any city excelled the display put on by the "boys" on "the avenue" we'd like to see a photo of it.

I. H. Fleishman, of the Brighton Theatre, North Side, is again able to be on duty at his theatre, after having undergone an operation at a local hospital.

Ralph Myers, well-known local exhibitor, has been removed to his home from the South Side Hospital, having been permanently injured in an automobile accident. Ralph suffered a broken back.

C. L. Gillis, owner of the theatre which bears his name at Clarksburg, W. Va., was a Pittsburgh visitor recently.

"Ben" Engleberg played "The Gold Diggers" at his Elmore Theatre in Pittsburgh recently, and did his advertising on two billion dollars' worth of German marks. "Ben" said it was not necessary to have a police escort to transport the money from the bank to the theatre.

J. J. Shultz, a newcomer to the picture business, is erecting a $125,000 picture theatre at Wilson, Pa., which is almost ready for opening. The house will be operated by Mike Scarlatti, who made a recent booking trip to the local Film Row.

Chris Vollmer said he would give us a season's pass to his Idle Hour Theatre if we didn't give him any publicity, but we are going to lose that pass, because we want to say that Chris Vollmer is one of the best-natured exhibitors we have ever had the pleasure to meet.

Cincinnati

With the advent of colder weather, business at the downtown theatres is showing a very considerable improvement, although the larger houses are offering some of the best pictures of the current season. Among the holdovers from last week are: "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," at Cox; "Rupert of Hentzau," at Gifts, and "If Winter Comes" at the Walnut.

J. A. Ackerman, manager of the Glenway Theatre, entertained a number of local exhibitors and exchange executives at a banquet at Hotel Claremont, Southgate, Ky., last week, at which he introduced his new patented "Kee-No" card game.

A new $500,000 lodge home and picture theatre is being planned by the Ashtabula Lodge of Moose, at Ashtabula, Ohio. A campaign for funds will soon be started.

Edward Minoughan, who has been operating the Princess Theatre at Marion, Ohio, for some time past, has sold same to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Williams, who will continue the original policy of pictures.

Harry Silver, resident manager of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, who has already undergone two major operations at a Detroit hospital, but who was discharged from that institution several months ago as cured, has again been stricken and has returned to Detroit for further treatment. It is now feared that a third operation may have to be performed.

Mrs. Margie Noe, Harlan, Ky., contemplates the erection of a $65,000 movie theatre and store building, while at Winchester, Ky., Paul H. Krause & Co., will put up a $40,000 house at 42nd street and College avenue.

The Southeast

Raleigh, N. C., is to have one of the state's finest theatres when the new State Theatre opens on December 15. The date will be approximately then, although not yet officially announced. The house will play a combination road show, vaudeville and picture bill, and is the last word in convenience for patrons. A Mr. Hines, a newcomer in the industry, of Norfolk, Va., built the house and controls it. He also recently assumed management of Raleigh's Superba Theatre, a straight picture house. It is rumored that one of the best showmen in the State will manage the new State when it opens.

DeSalles Harrison, newly appointed public relations representative in the Southeastern states by the Hays organization, has gone on a trip which will take him into all cities where Better Films Committees are now functioning or in process of organization. He will go to New York, after his circuit is completed, for conferences with Colonel Jason Joy of the Hays headquarters, under whom he is functioning in his Southern work.

C. E. Daffin, of Tallahassee, Fla., is getting ready for the annual hunting party he gives every year, assembling his fine dogs. Quite a number of Atlanta's film men attend this party every year and enjoy Mr. Daffin's hospitality for several days.

Sig Samuels, of Alamo No. 1, Atlanta, with members of his family is on a motor tour in Florida.

J. H. Wheeler, of the Start Theatre, Tarrant City, Ala., was a visitor on Atlanta's Film Row the past week.

Theatres Have Own Electrical Plant

THE theatres on Elm and Akard and the block bounded by Elm, Akard and Ervay streets, Dallas, Texas, are to be furnished electric current by the Theatre Electric Company, according to plans outlined at the recent organization meeting at 1413½ Main street. The company is to capitalized at $50,000 and has obtained a lease on the building at 208 Akard street, it was announced, in which to install their plant.

An electrical engineer was called into consultation, who submitted figures on the installation of 200-horsepower generator sets. Plans have been made to go before the City Commission for the necessary permits.

Among those in attendance and who agreed to take stock, according to L. G. Bissinger, secretary-treasurer elect, were E. B. Thomas, representing the Happyland Theatre; Raleigh Dent, Laskin Brothers for the Jefferson Theatre; Ray Stennett and Si Charninsky for the Capitol; W. D. Nevills for the Washington Theatre, and Mr. Bissinger for the Queen. Officers chosen were E. B. Thomas, president; Raleigh Dent, vice president, and L. G. Bissinger, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Bissinger states that by installing this plant they can cut their electric bills in two at least. They do not intend to enter into opposition to the established company but merely supply themselves.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Display Little Interest in Movie Day

National Motion Picture Day passed in Milwaukee with little flurry among exhibitors and a great deal less, if that is possible, as far as the public is concerned. It is safe to say that with few exceptions the public was not even aware a motion picture day had been set aside. The exceptions resulted from the feeble attempts made by a bare handful of exhibitors to observe the day.

True, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin went on record several weeks previously endorsing the move, but the organization decided at the same time to put the matter of boosting the day up to each individual exhibitor. As far as the association was concerned, the only other thing it did in connection with the matter was to begin publication on that day of its motion picture directory which is to be a daily feature in the newspapers. Thirty theatres were represented in the first list from which the exhibitor organization will share in the receipts.

The Regent Theatre, operated by Fred Seegert, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, and the Parkway, run by E. W. Van Norman, were among the few houses which tried to impress the public with the fact that Nov. 19 was Motion Picture Day. Mr. Seegert drew considerable favorable comment by showing a film of the pioneer days in the movie game. On the same program he had a modern film and through exhibiting both he was able to demonstrate the progress which has been made in the last few years.

Mr. Van Norman's special attraction consisted of a novelty musical program.

George Fischer, manager of the New Milwaukee, expressed the sentiment of numerous other theatre men when he declared, "Every day is Motion Picture Day at my house. I give my patrons the best that is possible at all times, so a special observance is hardly necessary."

Although downtown exhibitors likewise generally ignored the day, as far as special stunts or other exploitation was concerned, it was one of the biggest Mondays the business has ever known. This apparently was due to the nature of the attractions and not to the fact that it was Motion Picture Day. Saxe's Strand, playing "Flaming Youth," after being forced to run off a special showing Sunday night, was jammed again on Monday, according to E. J. Weisfeldt, manager. The Alhambra, managed by Leo A. Landau and showing "Rupert of Hentzau," also played to capacity.

Ground will be broken shortly at Fond du Lac, Wis., for a three-story $600,000 theatre building with a seating capacity of 2,000, it has been announced by Frank W. Fischer, managing director of the Fischer chain of theatres which already controls some of the leading houses in Wisconsin and Illinois. Announcement of this venture follows closely on the heels of the revelation that Mr. Fischer has closed a deal for the purchase of the Jones Theatre, a 1,460 seat house now under construction in Janesville, Wis. It is understood that Mr. Fischer paid $250,000 in the purchase of the uncompleted theatre from Harry Jones. This house is to be opened on or about March 1.

The site for the Fond du Lac Theatre embraces 26,400 square feet of ground on Main street. It will be modern in every respect and will be so equipped that it will be possible to present pictures or vaudeville.

W. G. Lloyd of Chicago, owner of the Lyric Theatre at Fort Atkinson, Wis., for eleven years, has sold the property to Oliver Grant of Janesville, Wis. The house will now be operated by Mr. Grant's son, William. The Lyric was built in 1880 by a stock company and used for years as an armory, council chamber and fire department on the ground floor, and as an opera house on the upper floor.

Ushers of the New Milwaukee Theatre have formed an organization to promote efficiency it has been announced by Louis Shimon, assistant manager of the house, who is advisor to the group. The organization is to be known as the Milwaukee Ushers' club. Arnold Kaliebe is president.

In an effort to eliminate the bicycling evil, the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade has ordered its members to supply all exchange salesmen with form postcards upon which they will record the various offerings at theatres in towns they visit, thus providing a checkup system.

A suit reopening the music tax fight in Milwaukee has been filed against the Whitehouse Theatre, operated by Otto L. Meister. The action, in which the Skidmore Music company of New York is the plaintiff, alleges that the song, "Last Night on the Back Porch," was rendered in the show house without the payment of a tax.

A report on the Indiana conference, which he attended as a delegate from Wisconsin, is to be given by Joseph Rhode, widely known Kenosha theatre man, as a feature of the next board of directors' meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, which is to be held within a few days.

The meeting also is expected to result in selection of a successor to Walter F. Baumann, who recently resigned as executive secretary of the organization. Fred Seegert, president, declares a new man virtually has been selected for the position and merely awaits ratification by the board. He refused to state, however, who the candidate is.

St. Louis

"Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's first big picture under his new Metro contract, opened in St. Louis on Saturday, November 24, playing day and date at four of the city's leading first run houses—the Delmonte, the largest one-floor theatre in the world, owned by Fred L. Cornwell, and the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, owned by Spyros Skouras and his organizations. This broke all records in St. Louis, as never in the history of the city had a picture shown first-run at four houses day and date.

In addition, Metro scored another triumph when "Scaramouche" got away on an indefinite run at the New Pershing Theatre, Delmar boulevard near Hamilton avenue, a St. Louis Amusement Company house that was redecorated and remodeled at a cost of $50,000 to be ready for the initial showing of "Scaramouche." The premier showing of this picture was an event in St. Louis—the city, state and prominent educators, physicians, society leaders, etc., being present as guests of Rex Ingram, director of the picture.

St. Louis exhibitors are interested in the fight being waged against Blue Laws in Frankfort, Ind. Dispatches from that city told of the arrest of twenty-three business men who had kept their places of business open on Sunday, November 18, in defiance of orders from Mayor Keene to close. The Mayor's decision to enforce the blue laws resulted from a controversy between a church faction and the owner of the local picture theatre. The first Sunday the blue law was in effect the other places of business closed, but the next week they decided to rebel. All were released on bond.

Pete Rybanic, owner of the Movie Theatre, has purchased the Wilson Theatre, Fourteenth street and Cass avenue, St. Louis, from Samuel Steinberg. The Wilson seats about 200 persons.

Bob Cluster of Johnsten City has purchased the Washington Theatre, Belleville, Ill. He will assume charge December 1. R. E. Gump will continue as manager.

Sullivan & Gray, owners of the Rex Theatre, Pittsburg, Ill., plan to open the Roland Theatre, Marion, Ill., shortly. They have closed the Rex temporarily because of the shutting down of the coal mine at Pittsburg.

Tongate & Haynes, owners of the picture house at Carlisle, Ind., are opening a new house in St. Francisville, Ill., on December 1. Tongate was in St. Louis the past week booking film.

Visitors of the week included Tom Reed and his new Cadillac sedan; Charles Stemple, St. Charles, Mo.; Dr. C. A. Tettley of Flat River and Farmington, and Charley Barber of Tilden, Ill.

I. W. Rodgers Invests in Coal

I. W. RODGERS of Poplar Bluff, Mo., the Daddy of 'Em All among Missouri exhibitors, is seeking new worlds to conquer. Those who remember reading his autobiography published some time ago will recall that he had many interesting callings prior to taking up motion picture exhibition, but none to conjure up the romantic situations as his latest moves promise. For henceforth he may be known as Mr. I. W. Rodgers, the Iron Baron.

Dispatches from Poplar Bluff the past week stated that Rodgers and H. E. Springer of that city had purchased 11,000 acres of land in Wayne County, Mo., from W. I. Hooper, also of Poplar Bluff. The deal involved approximately $800,000, and was one of the biggest of its kind ever pulled off in Southeast Missouri.

The land purchased by Rodgers and Springer is adjacent to the famed Iron Mountain, the greatest iron mine in history. That wonder of the Nineteenth Century recently pulled a sensational comeback by producing iron ore of wonderful purity in large quantities after it had been closed down for almost thirty years. A Chicago electric railway magnate, who bought the mine and surrounding territory as a stock ranch, paying about $400,000 for it, has had his holdings jump in value to some $12,000,000 as a result of the renewed activity at the mine. Rodgers and Springer plan to mine for iron on their property.

Dallas

The management of the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas, has recently been taken over by Lou Bissinger and Joe C. Singer. Bissinger was the first manager of the Queen after its completion several years ago, and since that time he has been with the Washington Theatre until taking over the lease on the Queen. He says he is glad to be back home again.

Contract has been let for the re-decoration and renovation of this theatre. A new and comfortable smoking loge will be a feature of the Queen upon the completion of the re-decoration scheme. Mr. Bissinger says it is their intention to bring back to the Queen that atmosphere of comfort and charm which made it popular in the past, to secure some of the biggest stars in the picture business, and to give the theatre-going public a high-class theatre at popular prices.

Woods Theatre, Chicago, Sold to Jones, Linick & Schaefer

The Woods Theatre Building was purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for $1,100,000 from the A. H. Woods Theatre Company last week. The theatre will hereafter be exclusively devoted to the highest class of motion pictures, it was stated. The property is under a ninety-nine year lease, with ninety-two years yet to run.

"Our firm," said Aaron Jones, "will take over the operation of the new theatre as an exclusive high-class motion picture house."

The Woods Theatre seats 1,200 people, having an eighty-foot frontage on Randolph street and 180 feet on Dearborn. Mr. Jones announced that no eastern capital was concerned in the deal, which was consummated without the bid of brokers or realty operators.

Lou Houseman, western representative for A. H. Woods, has sent out a statement again that the property has not been sold and that the price quoted is "ridiculous." Mr. Jones, as quoted above, says the sale has been made.

Gerald Scully, Margaret Voss and William L. Voss, Jr., have organized the Garden Theatre Corporation at Harvey, Ill., with a capital of $20,000, to own and lease theatres. The office of the company is at 15411 Center avenue, Harvey, Ill.

T. M. Bliss, Jr., has bought the interest of Harry Grampp, well known exhibitor of Rockford, Ill., in the Orpheum Pictures Company, which operates a chain of theatres in this state with headquarters at Rockford. Bliss is well known to the trade.

The Garden Theatre at 15411 Center, Harvey, has been leased by Gerald Scully and Mrs. W. L. Voss to the Garden Theatre Corporation for ten years at a term rental of $60,000.

An eighteen-story office building and theatre to cost $2,000,000 will be built on Randolph street, between Michigan and Wabash avenues, after January 1, it is reported. The theatre will accommodate 1,750.

James Gillett and Elmer Clayton have reopened the Avonia Theatre at Avon, Ill., after being closed since last spring. The new managers are using high-class picture programs.

The Midwest Theatres Corporation has added another house. The latest is the DeKalb Theatre at DeKalb, Ill. Dale A. Liefheit will remain as manager.

Harry Miller, well known manager of the National Theatre on South Halsted street, has resigned and accepted the position of manager of the new Fitzpatrick and McElroy theatre that has just opened at Traverse City, Mich. This is the last word in theatre construction and will play a first run policy.

The Grand Theatre at Alton, Ill., has been taken over by a stock company directed by John Karzan, John Pano and John Jianokopolis. Karzan has three other movie houses in St. Louis.

George Koehn has sold the New Empress Theatre at Springfield, Ill., to E. R. Ship, who will make some improvements.

Tony Serara has opened his new movie theatre at Pawnee, Ill., in the coal country, and has one of the niftiest houses in that part of the state.

Leland Eastman, Frank Cotey and Cornelius Cooney have organized the American Theatres Corporation, with offices at 7941 and 7947 South Halsted, to erect and conduct a picture and vaudeville theatre for that neighborhood.

Frank Delander of Geneseo, Ill., will start the construction of a movie house in that city early next year and Jack Green, well known showman, will have charge of the house when it is finished.

Will Peaseman, manager of the Colonial Theatre at Danville, Ill., was a Film Row visitor and reported that business is good in his part of the state.

The Bijou Theatre at Mt. Clemons, that has been dark for almost a year, opened early this month and is doing a good business.

The first anniversary of the New Tiffin Theatre at North and Kariov avenue was celebrated by the management and the employes with a get-together dinner held in the hall over the theatre. With plenty to eat and drink and a good orchestra, the boys all voted it a fine evening.

John Dromey opened his cosy little 400-seat movie house in North Chicago last week and is playing to capacity business. He is featuring plenty of good music with his picture programs and the outlook is for banner business during the winter months.

The Keystone Theatre at 3912 Sheridan Road, near Broadway, is being overhauled by the management and redecorated for the winter season. Business is good on the North Shore and the house is playing good movie bills with plenty of music to go with them.

Louis St. Pierre, well known to Film Row here, has been made general manager of the Midwest Circuit Theatres in Rockford, Beloit and Decatur, succeeding Harry Grammp, who resigned recently.

Wiley McConnell, part owner of the Orpheum Theatre at Quincy, with Jack Hoeffler, has incorporated the Empress Amusement Company at Decatur, Ill., to handle the management of the Empress Theatre of that city, which is also under his direction this season, playing both vaudeville and pictures.

Aaron Jones has signed up "The Extra Girl," with Mabel Normand, to follow the extended run of "Rosita" at the New Orpheum Theatre on State street. This will be followed by "A Woman of Paris" early in January.

Adolph Linick of Jones, Linick & Schaefer has gone to the West Coast on his usual winter pilgrimage and won't be back until the birds come north again in the spring.

South Chicago has another picture house, as Richard and Leo Salkin have opened the Bowen Theatre there.

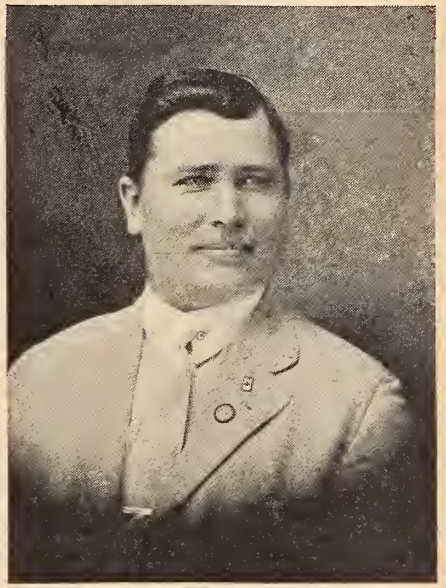
P. A. Alleman of the Strand and Family theatres of Clinton was a business visitor along Film Row last week and says that business is good out in his part of the country.

C. L. Foster has been placed in charge of the poster department of the Rialto Theatre and Manager Rosenblum now has some nifty publicity to attract the passing crowds.

The Wabash Theatre at 1838 South Wabash avenue, under the management of Van Nomikos, is being remodeled and fixed up, so that when the job is done Van will almost have a new movie house for his customers along Wabash avenue.

A. L. Rittenberg, William R. Swissler and Abraham Greenspahn have organized the Loop Theatre Building Corporation, with offices at 1003 North Clark street and with a capital of $300,000, to erect a large movie house.

A VIVID PERSONALITY



Ex-County Judge J. A. Sommerlatte, theatre owner and political boss of Lavaca County, Texas, has gained the title of "The Miracle Man." According to The Houston Press, here is what often happens in court:

"A tall, lean, sunburned farmer walks up to the judge and whispers a few words. The judge nods understandingly and says, 'Give me a more thorough description of the animal.' There is more low-pitched talk. Then the judge says, 'All right, your horse will be well in three days.' The farmer shakes hands and goes out. In three days the horse is well.

"If you ask how he does it, the young judge—he's 35 years old, weighs 240 pounds, is black-haired, blue-eyed and upstanding—smiles a kindly smile and tells you without any bluff, boast or bombast that he has a wit of healing. He heals both human beings and dumb brutes. He travels in the deaf of night to give relief. Hundreds of Lacava County citizens are ready to make affidavit that he has cured them. Merchants, bankers, contractors and big farmers and stockmen unite in testifying to this peculiar power the young judge possesses."

Tom Hickey, who wrote this newspaper story, quotes the judge as saying that "We would all be healers even of our own bodily ills if we had the faith that Christ had when he cured the blind, cleansed the leper and caused the crippled to walk. I am fortunate in possessing an abounding, joyous faith. In no other way can I account for the success I have had. I have never studied medicine. I know but little of physiology or anatomy. I only know I can cure."

Judge Sommerlatte's home is in Hallettsville, Texas.

Robinson in Hospital

Dee Robinson of Peoria, Ill., who has been critically ill for some weeks has been brought to Chicago and placed in the Presbyterian Hospital where he will have to undergo a major operation. Mr. Robinson is one of the prominent exhibitors in the Middle West, and also one of the most popular theatre men in that community. As head of the Madison Theatres Company he has control of all the picture and vaudeville houses in Peoria and also operates the Irvin Theatre at Bloomington, Ill.

Wright Knocked Unconscious by San Francisco Burglars

One of the most daring theatre robberies in the history of the Pacific Coast took place at the New Mission Theatre, San Francisco, on Monday, November 19, when three youthful bandits held up Winfield Wright, house manager, knocked him unconscious and made away with $5,385, which represented the Saturday and Sunday receipts.

According to Wright he came down to the theatre shortly before noon to bank the money and had just finished counting it when three men, who had evidently hidden in the theatre Sunday night, rushed upon him. Two of them covered him with revolvers while the third knocked him unconscious with a blow in the abdomen. They then threw him into a closet and made their escape. It was several minutes before he recovered sufficiently to give the alarm and a shotgun squad was dispatched to the scene in armed cars, but no trace has been found of the bandits.

Plans for the building of two new picture houses and the purchase of a one-half interest in two Elmhurst houses by the T. & D., Jr., Circuit are announced by J. R. Saul, San Francisco theatre broker, who has handled the transactions. Negotiations have been completed whereby M. A. Naify, E. H. Emmick and Robert A. McNeil have acquired a lot 88 by 204 feet in size at Monterey, Cal., and plans are being made for the erection of a theatre to cost $275,000. These exhibitors, with J. C. Hunter, Mortimer Thomas and Charles Moser, have purchased from John Peters a half interest in the Elm and Bijou theatres at Elmhurst, an east-bay suburb of San Francisco. Plans are being drawn for a 1,600-seat house to be erected within the next six months, and upon its completion one of the present theatres will be closed. The T. & D., Jr., Circuit now comprises thirty-seven theatres in Northern California.

Hal D. Neides, formerly manager of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, but who has been away from this city for several weeks, has returned to assume charge of the road show presentation of "Scaramouche" which has opened at the Capitol Theatre. The opening week proved such an unqualified success that it is believed that this production can be shown in this house until after Christmas.

Lew Newcomb, for several years associated with Ackerman & Harris, San Francisco, but more recently with the Orpheum Theatre, Oakland, has returned to San Francisco and has been placed in charge of the Strand Theatre, owned by M. L. Markowitz.

A. W. Mather, of the New Princess Theatre, Honolulu, T. H., arrived at San Francisco recently to confer with business associates on the mainland. E. J. Carroll, Australian theatre magnate, has also arrived here to spend several months in the United States.

After having been closed for five days for a thorough overhauling, the Lyric Theatre, Stockton, Cal., has been reopened by Mark Leichter and associates, the opening attraction under the new ownership having been "The Spanish Dancer."

Extensive improvements have been made of late in the theatre of C. R. Beilby at Wheatland, Cal., including the installation of Mazda equipped Powers machines by G. A. Metcalfe.

The old T. & D. Theatre at Richmond, Cal., which has been closed for months, will be opened by West Coast Theatres, Inc., shortly after the first of the year.

Work has been commenced on the construction of a 1,200-seat picture theatre at San Leandro, Cal., by L. J. Toffelmier. It is expected to complete it in March.

E. K. Hoffman until recently with the New Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, Cal., has been made manager of the Palace Theatre in that city, recently acquired by the T. & D. Jr. Circuit.

The Elite Theatre at Placerville, Cal., operated by Mrs. J. B. Travelle, has been remodelled and is very attractive in its new form. It has gone on winter schedule, with no show on Monday nights.

The A. B. Hill heirs have purchased property adjoining the Hill Opera House at Petaluma, Cal., and are now in a position to enlarge this house.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Use Own Employment Bureau

A bureau for the purpose of helping secure for members of the M. P. T. O. A. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware help in the way of employes has been established by George P. Aarons, secretary of the association, whose headquarters are located at Thirteenth and Vine streets. So numerous were the requests from theatre owners that it was found necessary to file a list of names and addresses.

A lease on the Opera House at Mt. Holly, N. J., has been secured by Dave Segal, head of the Royal Pictures Exchange, who took over the management of the place from Ed Hulse. No change will be made in the policy of the picture theatre under the new management.

The Hollywood Theatre, formerly the American Theatre of Pottsville, Pa., which recently was acquired by the Stanley Company of America, will reopen the first of the year as one of the string which the Stanley Company has acquired in that section of Pennsylvania. This house, the Lyric at Hamburg, Pa., the Hippodrome at Pine Grove, Pa., and the Lyric at Minersville were acquired by the Stanley Co. from William Shugars, former proprietor.

Purchase of the Fulton Opera House at Lancaster, Pa., was made by Ralph W. Coho, a coal operator of that city, who took over the property from John A. Guerrini and the estate of the late Harvey S. Butzer, for a consideration not disclosed. The theatre will be turned into a picture house.

The Haddon Heights Theatre of Haddon Heights, N. J., has been opened by C. L. McArthur, who operated the Olney Theatre of Olney, just outside of Philadelphia for a number of years. Renovations of the interior and exterior converted it into a first-class picture house feature with a daily change of pictures. It formerly was owned by Hunts Theatres, Inc.

Postponement of the annual entertainment of the M. P. T. O. A. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, which was to have been held on November 11 at Fay's Theatre, was made to an indefinite date. It is proposed to hold the celebration after the first of the year with a program of vaudeville, musical numbers and pictures.

A tour of New York State was enjoyed by P. Mortimer Lewis, proprietor of the Bijou Theatre on the Boardwalk, Atlantic City, the Capital and the Ventor theatres of that resort, who is taking his annual vacation in this manner. He will return to the shore the latter part of the month.

George Kilpatrick, for many years assistant manager of the Strand Theatre at Easton, Pa., is managing the Plaza Theatre at Miami, Fla., for C. D. Buss, who operates this theatre during the winter and who opened the house last week for the season.

Under the management of Phil Levy there is being conducted a picture house in the Lyric Theatre at Allentown, formerly a legitimate theatre. Modern picture equipment has been installed and daily showing of Silver Screen productions is made.

Alterations to the Karlton Theatre of Quakertown are nearing completion. As soon as building operations will permit there will be opened a high-class vaudeville and picture establishment under the management of George Bennethum, who has acquired the house.

The building program which Thomas F. Herrity, manager of the Lotus Theatre of Allentown, has just put under way, calls for the enlargement of the house with an increase of 200 in seating capacity. An attractive lobby is being constructed, giving frontage of 40 feet, and it is hoped to have the alterations completed in time to celebrate the third anniversary of the theatre during Christmas week.

Opening of the Strand Theatre of Gloucester, N. J., took place last week under the management of Jack Jaslow. The house has been closed for several months for renovations and the installation of new equipment in the projection booth and the hanging of a new screen. The house seating 400, recently was acquired by Alex Koleman. A five-piece orchestra has been provided. The Strand formerly was known as the Academy and later as the Broadway under lease to Lew Pizor, who also owned the Leader and Palace in that town. Recently the latter theatre and the Apollo were taken over by the Stiefel Amusement Co.

Nebraska

Thomas Bush of the Liberty Theatre, Republican City, Neb., was in Omaha last week calling at the various exchanges and making arrangements for some new films.

Manager Mullen has returned to the management of the Electric Theatre at Falls City, his old job, after having resigned some time ago.

William Hawley, theatre owner of North Platte, spent some time in Omaha en route to Lincoln to witness the Nebraska-Notre Dame football game.

The Crystal Theatre of Rulo, Neb., was burned to the ground recently.

The Community Club at Daykin, Neb., has opened a new picture theatre there. The town hall is for the present being used as the theatre building.

R. V. Fletcher of the Lyric Theatre at Hartington, Neb., was in Omaha last week. He has only recently taken over that theatre and was in Omaha consulting with a number of exchanges regarding films.

The Capital Theatre at Davenport, Ia., has just been equipped with a new 100-ampere motor generator.

William Fraser has taken over the Gale Theatre and the Metropolitan Theatre at Mitchell, S. D. He has recently arranged extensive remodeling and re-equipping of the theatre.

Oscar Persons, theatre owner at Minden, Neb., has equipped his place with new chairs and new lobby equipment.

The Palm Theatre at Omaha was recently sold by Tom Freeman, owner, to Gilley & Ribble, owner of the Rex Theatre in Omaha. The new owners announce they plan to make the Palm an exclusive picture house, whereas in the past it has been operated as a combined picture and vaudeville house. They plan to operate it at a low admission figure.

Troy, N. Y., Woman Arrested as Strand Money Takes Wings

About $150, representing the evening's receipts of the Strand Theatre, in Troy, N. Y., took flight one night last week about the same time as Mrs. Daniel Christian, 19 years of age, cashier of the theatre, which is managed by "Al" Bothner. No sooner was the loss of the money discovered than the police were called, with the result that the woman and her husband were later on apprehended at the railroad station in Albany, where they had purchased tickets for New York. The couple had come to Troy from Syracuse a few days before, the husband securing a job as a waiter and the wife becoming cashier of the theatre. They are now awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of grand larceny.

The Empire Theatre in Syracuse, which is showing plenty of pep these days in lobby and outside advertising, will observe its Anniversary Week this month. The house is managed by Willis B. Whitnall.

The frequent symphony concerts given by the combined orchestras of the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany and the Troy in Troy, at the former house, are really becoming the leading society events of the year. At the one given on Saturday last, the list of patronessces resembled the "who's who" of Albany.

Generally speaking, business is good in Syracuse. The houses are all drawing well and the owners do not appear to be afraid of using newspaper space to inform the public as to attractions booked. One of the most pleasant features of the past week was the return of Edgar Weil to the management of the Strand, following a vacation of many weeks at his home in Little Rock, Ark., recovering from a nervous breakdown.

Uly Hill, managing director of the Strand houses in Albany and Troy, has accepted an invitation to address the State Convention of Music Clubs in this city next April Potsdam, N. Y., certainly will be plentifully supplied with picture theatres, for two are to be erected within the next few months. The Strand Theatre Company of Ogdensburg, which operates playhouses in Maline, Ogdensburg and Plattsburg, will open its sixth theatre in Potsdam, having acquired a site on Market street. The house will cost about $80,000. The house will be about a year in building. Almost simultaneously with the announcement comes another from James Papayanakos, former owner of the Olympic Theatre in Watertown, that he is preparing plans for a theatre in Potsdam, on the present location of the Clark Furniture Store. The house will seat 1,000.

There is going to be a party up in Gloversville soon. The other day Louis Schine announced the birth of a son, and now all Albany, or at least that portion in the film business, has been invited by Mr. Schine to the celebration.

Early showings of feature pictures in the Capital District include "Ashes of Vengeance" at the Troy and Mark Strand theatres, during the week of January 7-12. "If Winter Comes" has been booked at the Leland for the week of January 27, while "Ponjola" will attract Thanksgiving Day crowds at the Troy in Troy.

Although "Common Law" did a whoppin' big business at the Leland in Albany last week, second only to "Little Old New York," Manager Oscar Perrin finally decided not to use it for another week against "Rosita" at the Mark Strand. Mr. Perrin will use "In the Palace of the King" to buck the Mary Pickford picture during the six days. Incidentally, the Mark Strand is doing some heavy advertising in putting over "Rosita," using hundreds of heralds, window cards as well as six, eight and twenty-four sheets.

Weighing at least four pounds more than when he left, Louis Buettner of Cohoes, one of the best known exhibitors in this part of the state, is back home from a three weeks' trip to the Adirondacks, which has restored his health to a considerable extent.

Buffalo, N. Y.

The very latest type of Simplex projection machines are being installed in Shea's Hippodrome by Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company. The equipment is similar to that used by the Eastman in Rochester and the Capitol in New York.

The New Family Theatre in Batavia opened to the public Thanksgiving Day. The house is operated by a corporation composed of Nikitas Dipson, Judge E. A. Washburn and John R. Osborne. The house has a $16,000 organ and is beautifully decorated and furnished inside and out. "Going Up," the Douglas MacLean picture, was the opening feature.

George Hall, manager of the Capitol Theatre in South Park, is a member of the company that has purchased Crystal Beach, a Canadian shore summer resort, from the Lake Erie Excursion Company for $1,500,000.

James Cardina opened his new Varsity Theatre on Kensington Avenue, Buffalo, Wednesday evening, November 28. There was a large number of exchange men and exhibitors present as guests of Jim. "Pioneer Trails" was the opening attraction.

Rochester, N. Y.

On Rochester screens: Eastman, "The Eternal City." Regent, "The Eternal Struggle." Piccadilly, "Long Live the King." Victoria, "Daughters of the Rich." Rialto, "Drifting." Strand, "Penrod and Sam."

That the Eastman Theatre already occupies a position of importance among theatres of the country is indicated by the fact that a drawing of the house and an explanation of its purpose forms the outstanding feature in the advertisement of Paramount in the Saturday Evening Post in the issue of November 17.

"Little Old New York" will open at the Piccadilly Theatre the week of December 2.

Rumors that the visit of E. F. Albee to J. H. Finn, manager of the Temple Theatre, might result in tentative plans for the building of a large theatre in Rochester have been denied by Mr. Finn.

Canada

At a general meeting of all exhibitors in London, Ontario, on November 21, the decision was reached for a flat increase of 3 cents in all admission prices for both matinee and evening performances at the local playhouses, the increase to go into effect at once. The cause given for the raising of admission prices was that the salaries of stars in California and elsewhere had forced producers and distributors to charge higher rentals to theatres. Managers announcing the price increase included Fred Jackson of Loew's Theatre; Thomas Logan of the Allen Theatre; and William Stewart of the Patricia Theatre, these being the leading houses of the city.

Announcement has been made that the Continental Screen Service Corporation has closed a contract with the Canadian Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners whereby the company is to supply an advertising slide or an advertising trailer to each of 700 picture theatres in Canada. When the exhibitor complies with the request to screen the slide or film, the company is to pay a stated fee into the treasury of the M. P. T. O., it is stated.

"The Covered Wagon" followed "Scaramouche" into the Tivoli Theatre, "big time film house" of Toronto, on November 24, after "Scaramouche" had played three weeks at $1.50 top. The same scale is continued for "Covered Wagon." This is the first Canadian run for "Wagon." "Scaramouche" completed a two weeks' run at the Palace Theatre, Montreal, on November 24.

The plan of reserving box seats for evening performances at Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, has been discontinued by Capt. F. W. Goodale, manager, after he had given the special service a test of six weeks.

A thriller taken in 1911, 12 years ago, on Long Island, is to be featured at Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, during the week of December 3. The important part about this presentation is that the hero of the picture is Capt. Frank Goodale, now manager of the Loew house. He was known at the time this picture was produced by Imp under the title of "Through the Air" as "the boy balloonist" and his daily work consisted of flying in a 16-foot dirigible, having a motorcycle engine, from Palisade Park, New Jersey.

Harry Brouse, owner of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, has installed a six-piece orchestra in his "theatre beautiful." This is startling news when it is remembered that for years and years the musical accompaniment for pictures at the Ottawa Imperial has been provided by a pipe organ, with Jack Neville presiding. After years of loneliness, Mr. Neville is now associated with six musical confreres.

Receiver Releases Pantheon, Vincennes, Ind.

THE Pantheon Theatre in Vincennes, Ind., which was one of the theatres owned by the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, recently thrown into the hands of a receiver, has been released from the receivership and has reverted to its original owner, the Wilkerson-Lyons Enterprises, Inc. Fred Sims, receiver for the Consolidated company, said he consented to the release of the theatre because it had not been paying much, and it would have been a big obligation on the Consolidated to hold the lease.

The Consolidated took over the Pantheon on Ooctober 1st on a two-year lease, with a plan to issue 8 per cent. bonds to pay for the theatre. Mr. Sims said the Consolidated did not have the money to keep up the lease. Immediately following the theatre's release, Judge Thomas B. Coulter, acting on petition of L. R. Henley, principal stockholder, named Claude E. Gregg and J. B. E. Laplante co-receivers of the theatre. The Pantheon was erected about three years ago at a cost of about $150,000.

Reports received this week from Terre Haute, Richmond and Ft. Wayne show that a large volume of business was done by the Consolidated company's theatres there during the last week, Mr. Sims said. At Evansville twelve members of the orchestra at the Victory Theatre were discharged in order to permit expenses to be cut down during the receivership proceedings.

Texas Manager With No Elaborate Aids Builds a Splendid Exploitation Lobby

ACHIEVING one of the best lobby displays on Circus Days with limited facilities, Thomas Nickelson, of the Crescent theatre, Austin, Texas, puts himself solidly on the exploitation map. With very little material to work with, he has achieved a decidedly realistic circus entrance and he not only broke all the house records, but he set the new marks so high that it promises to stand for a long time to come.

The lobby shown on this page would be entirely creditable were it the work of a management having unlimited resources at command. It would be good looking had it been used at the New York Strand for its first showing. Coming from a theatre without large resources, it is a remarkable achievement.

It's Easy When—

Had this been planned by a theatre with a large revenue, where an expenditure of two or three hundred dollars for a good selling lobby is a matter of no consequence, it would have been good. But Mr. Nickelson, we take it, had no such appropriation, and had to work with what he could get. He used his ingenuity, and he really achieved an effect better in some ways than he could have gained through the mere outlay of money.

Take that same lobby in a big house and probably the tent would have been of muslin or cotton, bought for the occasion and cut to fit. Buying that much cloth would have killed the profit of the Crescent. Mr. Nickelson uses hay covers and gets closer to the real thing. There is a real circus flavor to that laced canopy.

Has Real Flavor

Done with new cloth, there would have been an entrance and an exit and a scalloped border and a lot of trimmings that would not have had the same local color. This looks more like a real circus tent, for it must be remembered that Jackie was traveling with a wagon show and they did not have an elaborate equipment.

That den on the right seems to be the real thing, though the lion is profile. If this is home-made, too, it is more than creditable, but it looks as though it might have been left behind by some road show in difficulties. The elephants on the left are also profile, but they are good enough to carry out the suggestion, and the hay and the roped enclosure are convincingly good and about the only thing lacking is a red wagon structure for the ticket office.

The Will to Work

But the real angle to this display is not that it is exceptionally good, but that the manager was willing to work hard to get an effect that would bring extra money.

He did not sit down and wail that he could not afford to do anything. He went out and borrowed the hay covers and did it. That is the spirit which wins. Hundreds of managers are watching business slip just because they have not the willingness to get out and hustle and do the best they can with the best they can get.

They talk about bad business instead of about bad management.

That is why we appreciate so much the fine achievement of the chap you see in the picture standing by the box office. He writes that the only way to get returns is to exploit, and in doing the best he can he has in this instance done better than the larger houses in the matter of display and proportionately well in the matter of receipts.

He could not get that result through sitting in his chair and lamenting his lack of opportunity.

Red Lights Told of Red Lights' Coming

Before they opened Red Lights at the California theatre, San Francisco, red and yellow teasers told the public to be careful as Red Lights was coming. The day before the opening there was a night parade of automobiles owned by the house staff and supplemented by loaned cars. There were 35 of these and they toured the theatre section with a man on each front seat holding a red fusee. Banners told of the play being advertised. The parade was repeated for the opening night, Saturday.

Three strings of red lamps were strung across Market street from the theatre to a store across the way and an entire block was illuminated by red lamps, Charles E. Kurtzman, the publicity head of the Rothchild chain, personally arranging for this display and providing lamp dip for those merchants who did not possess red globes. Jack Partington, the general manager, worked the police permit on the across the street display. It got packed houses Saturday and Sunday and those audiences spread the word and helped the later business.

Seventy-five Cars in a Motor Parade

Getting seventy-five cars in a motor parade was the chief item in the exploitation work for Mary Pickford in Rosita at the Blackstone and State theatres, Pittsburgh. The two houses were playing the United Artists' release day and date, and Milton D. Crandall felt that it was up to him to do something in a large way to persuade Rowland & Clarke that he was on the job .

He sold the sub-agencies of the Chevrolet cars on the idea that it would help them to help him, and all of the dealers turned out their stock cars for a parade on Saturday afternoon, the various sub-agencies vying with each other to claim the honor of having the best decorated cars. The main agency contributed a truck with a huge megaphone and Crandall hired some musicians, with the result that the parade was both colorful and tuneful.

The general tie-up was the line "Two big stars, Chevrolet and Mary Pickford," and the latter name was displayed in large letters, one letter to a car, with plenty of cars left over.

The police permit gave them a line of march which took them through the busiest streets at the busiest hour of a busy Saturday afternoon, and the dealers were all so pleased with the chance to spread out in a parade that they kicked in with mention of the play in their Sunday advertisements. They also used window cards and set the decorated cars in their show rooms as a further reminder.

All it cost was the hire of the bands, and that was very little for a four and a half-hour ballyhoo.

Grantland Rice's Sportlights

One Reel Each—Every Other Week

The Country is Sport Mad!

You can get the benefit when you play this series

Grantland Rice is undoubtedly the country's greatest authority on sports. Seventy big newspapers publish his "Sportlights." He is also editor of the American Golfer. That means national publicity.

This series of pictures will interest every person in the country. Each illustrates some phase of sport. Each is beautiful, each has thrills, each is informational.

The First Six

1. "Wild and Wooly"; all there is to know about a Western rodeo
2. "Girls and Records"; women of today who are making athletic history
3. "The National Rash"; why golf is becoming the national game
4. "Taking a Chance"; why nerve is required in football, polo, horse-jumping, etc.
5. "Great Competitors"; the closest rivals in many sports contrasted
6. "The Call of the Game"; contrasts between the solitary sports like fishing, hunting, etc. and those which are witnessed by vast multitudes.

You get all the thrill of big sporting events without the cost and the bother

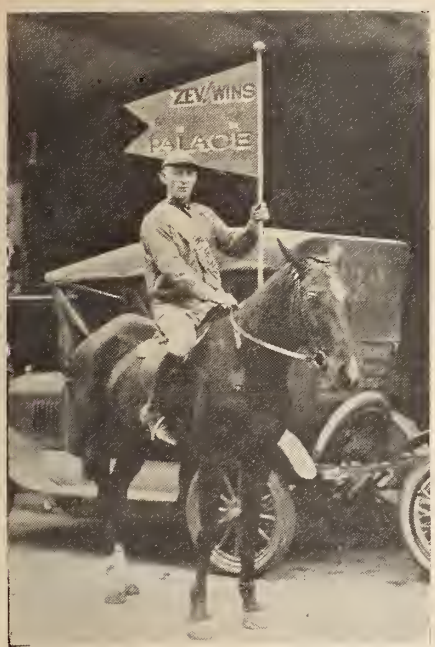
Had Proper Colors for Ballyhoo Stunt

Using a jockey ballyhoo for the Papyrus-Zev race pictures, produced by Pathe, Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, was careful to dress the rider in the colors worn by the American jockey. With so much being said in the papers about the colors of the stables, this careful touch helped along the display. The rider was a lightweight and rode with short stirrups to further the suggestion.



A Pathe Release

THE MEMPHIS BALLYHOO

The rider wore a sash stating that the picture was then playing at the Palace and carried a flag which was lettered "Zev wins, see the race foot by foot at Loew's Palace, now."

This was supplemented by a display of scenes of the actual race and a lettered card in the lobby, but the riding advertisement brought in the most coin.

Ribbons for Nags

Last year—or perhaps it was the year before—the Paramounteer in Portland, Ore., blanketed all the prize stock at the State Fair with the titles of Paramount productions.

This year Chester A. Arthur tried a new tackle. One of the features of the fair is a horse show with one big award each evening, to the value of $1,000 each. Arthur got some purple ribbons, one for each night, and this was announced as a Paramount Pictures Special Award in a full page in the program. Each evening the announcer megaphoned the winner and added that he (or she) had also won the Paramount Special Award. As the crowds ran from 15,000 to 25,000 a night, this seemed to be a fairly good return on the small investment for ribbons, particularly as they were then having Paramount Month all over the State.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

After three weeks of heavy harmony the women's chorus of eighteen is having a rest of one week, during which it will help broadcast the first Brooklyn Mark Strand Radio Concert through Station WEAF. In their absence the ballet, soloists and orchestra are putting on some varied stuff, with four girls at four pianos as an added presentation.

The Symphonized Jazz Overture, opening the show for All-Chaplin Week, which was made up of "A Woman of Paris" and his revival, "Pay Day," was a special arrangement and orchestration of "Love Tales" and "I Love You," in which the marimbaphone and the saxophones were given the chance to steal a lot of thunder. The lighting harmonies for this, with the draw curtains of the small stage closed, centered on green and amber. There were two booth Mestrum floods of 150 amperes covering the sides and stage, with two amber dome spots on the musicians. The foots of the big stage were green, as were also those of small stage, and the coves were yellow. Although simple, this combination is one of the richest used.

For "Just as Long as You Have Me," from "The Gingham Girl," a back drop of the front of a general store, with set piece porch and steps, was used. It opened with a dance to orchestra accompaniment by six girls in gingham. At their exit soprano in gingham entered from left and tenor in summer suit from the right. They met at the steps, sat down and the girl sang first verse and chorus, then a duet by the pair, and still another arrangement of duet for another chorus with some business by the girl dancers. At close all were on the porch and steps. At opening three amber spots and one light pink from the side were on the set, with amber foots and borders. A magenta open box lamp from one side and an amber from the other were hitting the front of the store. At the duet all lights dimmed off except the two amber and one light pink spots, giving a twilight effect for the close.

Jerry and Her Piano Quartette of Girls, using four pianos all facing the side in the same direction, were backed up by a silver cyclorama, with props consisting of two silver floor lamps and a massive chandelier of silver. Pianists were in evening gowns. At opening, playing a few bars of "Morning" of Peer Gynt Suite, two spots of color blend from the dome hit the pianos, using the scallop of the red plush tormer to mask a design above the pianos on the silver cyclorama. X-rays were magenta, and one rose pink and one light blue spot from the sides picked out the chandelier. From "Morning" the pianists went into "Trot Along" and another color blend from the dome was added to the first one, and green and magenta floods crossed on the cyclorama. From "Trot Along" the pianos went into Rachmaninoff's "Prelude," and two light pink floods replaced the dome color blends. Girls took one bow after "Prelude" and then struck up "Nola," the stage going blue with an orange flood on pianos, and two light pink spots on the chandelier. At the close two amber dome spots came out on the pianos as the orange was taken off. Front lighting included light pink and light blue on canopy drapes from entrance spots, with blue coves and light blue floods on the side drapes.

The running of this show, with the Topical Review, was two hours and eleven minutes, split up as follows: Duet and dancers, five minutes; Symphonized Jazz, six minutes; Piano Quartette, eight minutes; "Pay Day," twenty-two minutes; Review, eight minutes, and "A Woman of Paris," one hour and twenty-two minutes.

Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, gets another prize. Each year there is held a municipal Christmas party for the poor children in which the entire town is interested. This year it will be given at the Howard, with the Mayor himself acting as Santa Claus.

Ran Cartoon Series for Twenty-one Days

Extensive use has been made of the Dulcy cartoon series, but the best report comes from Frank H. Burns, exploitation man for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla. He got the local paper to use the entire set, running them three weeks.

This established the Dulcy idea and when the theatre shot out several thousand cards urging the reader to use Dulcy as the synonym for Dumb-bell, the entire town adopted the word and used it even when they did not really mean to call others stupid. Supplemented by window cards and heralds, Dulcy was made a household word and the business was comfortably above the average.

THE TWO TABLEAUX IN THE PROLOGUE TO IF WINTER COMES USED BY HYMAN AT THE MARK STRAND

The details of this prologue were given in a recent issue. The stage shows a man dreaming before the fire and the winter scene is disclosed in a frame in the back drop eighteen feet wide, showing through scrim. The lights are dimmed and come back on the spring setting, in allusion to the quotation: "If Winter comes can Spring be far behind?" This was one of Hyman's most successful prologues.

Real Circus Days Helped in Canton

Exploiting Circus Days is like putting over a western picture with a stage coach. It's all right if you can get the outfit. J. D. Kessler, of the Alhambra Theatre, Canton, Ohio, could get the outfit and he made all the money his house would hold with Jackie Coogan.

One of the smaller circuses has winter quarters in Canton. They had come in, but were not laid up for the Winter, so Kessler was able to hire the outfit for a small sum since it all represented velvet to the show people.

He turned out a parade almost half a mile in length and got a free ride on the band wagon for himself. The initial parade did so well that it was repeated on the two days following, a different route being laid out each time, but invariably ending in the downtown section.

Most of the menagerie wagons were parked in a garage at the rear of the theatre, and after the show you could visit the menagerie annex. The smaller cages were placed in the lobby and there was a small den on the sidewalk to steer them into the lobby.

He was able to round up a clown band and all the trimmings, and he repainted all of the wagons with Kessler-Coogan Combined Shows.

He also stabled a shetland pony in the lobby which was given away to some child, and he tied the stores to circus displays in their windows.

He gave a special matinee the Saturday before the Sunday opening, and had to give another morning performance on the closing day.

It probably represented the peak of the exploitation on this picture, for few circuses can be hired even where there is a winter quarters in town, for usually the wagons are put into the paint shop and are not available for parade. Mr. Kessler was fortunate in getting the picture before refurbishing commenced.

Brightened Up

Adapting an old stunt, Mrs. Frank Emmett, of the Colonial Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., announced that any woman wearing a bright shawl would be admitted free to any performance of the Barthelmess play. Many of the shawls were loaned and did repeated service, but the bright spots they made in the lobby and the neighborhood talk the loaning of the shawls caused more than repaid the cost of the tickets.

Few shawls failed to have an overcoat accompaniment and the overcoat paid admission to see The Bright Shawl.

Christian Endeavor Exploited Picture

Convincing the Christian Endeavor Society of Castalia, Ia., that Mighty Lak a Rose was a picture they could safely endorse, V. G. Bellman, of the Postville Theatre made a deal with them to give them one-third on all sales made by them and one-third on the gross if they sold more than two-thirds of the house.

They did not make the grade because so many persons purchased tickets at the box office supposing that the society would get the commission anyhow, but appreciating this, the manager gave them more than their cut and they were abundantly satisfied. It not only sold this First National to unusual business, but it produced an effect that will help other pictures. It gives the endorsement of the society to the theatre as well as this particular title, and the added business was sufficient to pay what they received.

There is nothing very new in this idea, but it goes to show that it can still be done, and always with success.

Any connection with a local organization will not only bring in more money at the time but help business through the good will created. Work it often.

THESE STUNTS ARE EASY IF YOU HAPPEN TO HAVE A WINTER QUARTERS IN YOUR TOWN

J. D. Kessler, of the Alhambra Theatre, Canton, Ohio, not only had a circus hole-up, but he knew them all and was able to hire the outfit to popularize Circus Days when he ran that attraction for a week. The top row shows some of the kinkers and an animal cage in front of the house. Below are a pony rig and the downtown wagon working as perambulators.

Broke 5 Year Record with Why Worry Gags

Breaking the cash records for five years largely with a teaser campaign is the brag of the Liberty theatre, Kansas City. The attraction was Why Worry, which lends itself particularly well to the teaser idea, but with the aid of Earle S. Nesbit, the advertising agent, they went further than most with the teasers.

The opening gun was painted signs with five foot letters reading merely "Why Worry?" There was nothing to connect it with either play or theatre. This was followed by 2,000 14x14-inch tack cards which were placed all over town. The text on these was "Join the Why Worry Club, the National Joy Movement." An additional 500 were given lath supports and used as yard cards.

THE LIBERTY SPEEDOMETERS

Because the Kansas City team had won the Association pennant and were scheduled to play Baltimore for the Little Pennant, some 50,000 persons welcomed the team back to town after the last game in its own league. They were also met by a float which read: "Why worry? The Blues will win." This followed the parade and was parked at the ball field gate when not in use as a perambulator.

HERE'S AN ORPHAN SOME COMPANY SHOULD ADOPT

Put the glass on the fourth kiddie from the left. The women would rave over him in the pictures, yet he's just an orphan and one of the guests of the Saenger company in New Orleans at a Penrod and Sam showing. Something new for New Orleans.

Then there was a parade of the Priests of Pallas, a local carnival order. A local giant was built up to a seven-foot height and provided with a tin cannon, arranged to throw out packages of light throwaways with the "Why Worry?" slogan. The giant was attended by a short man dressed as Lloyd, and they perambulated the line of March. The cannon was built to explode a blank cartridge when the spring plunger was pulled back. Every little while the gun would be shot off and the lines of waiting spectators deluged with the throwaways. It got more attention than the $50,000 parade.

Then a full page cooperative was worked with the merchants with prizes offered for the best letters regarding purchases made from any of the advertising merchants. The replies were to be sent to Harold Lloyd at the Liberty theatre, the first time the star or title had been used in connection with this campaign.

To tie the teasers to the house liberal newspaper and bill advertising was done and a cutout 40 feet in height was placed on the marquise of the theatre.

Under the canopy were two speedometer faces with movable numbers, which show as white oblongs in the cut. One was lettered: "Harold Lloyd's Laugh-o-meter. 100,000 shrieks per minute." This was supposed to ring up the laughs. The other was lettered: "Why Worry? Join the National Joy Movement now ——— hysterical members." The blanks represent the figures on the speedometer indicator, and these numbers were changed at each performance.

It was a splendidly planned campaign and it brought in more money than any other attraction in the five-year period.

THIS FORTY-FOOT CUTOUT TIED LLOYD TO A TEASER CAMPAIGN

The Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, broke all records for the past five years on Why Worry largely through a clever teaser campaign which had to be tied to the star and attraction. This cutout is the largest ever used on a Kansas City theatre.

Orphan Youngsters See Penrod and Sam

New Orleans does not do much exploitation, so an orphans' matinee was a novelty when the Liberty Theatre worked it for Penrod and Sam, and the trolley company provided the transportation in bannered cars while a motion picture was made of the group to get the last potential kick out of the stunt.

But put a magnifying glass on the picture of a sample copy of the kiddies and note the little chap who stands fourth from the left, just at the end of the board. He would be a wonder in pictures if he could be trained to act. At any rate he has done First National a good turn, for he is the reason we are using the cut.

An unusual angle was the detailing of a totally deaf reporter to cover the event. A prefatory note to the story told that he was unable to hear the laughter and had to judge their enjoyment wholly through their facial expression. It made a good novelty. It might be a good stunt for others to work, even if the newspaper has no reporter who is really deaf.

THIS IS NOT ONLY EFFECTIVE BUT ARTISTIC

It is all compo board, painted, but it looked like the real thing in the lobby of the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon. It is by far the best display on this title yet to be exhibited and a real credit to Gus Metzger, who put the production over with it.

Uses Same Coach for the Street and Stage

When the Scollat Square Olympia, Boston, put on Pioneer Trails, the management dug out a stage coach for a prologue showing an attack on the stage. It provided a vivid introduction to the picture and helped to create the proper atmosphere.

But it was figured that the coach could help more on the street, so the actors reported earlier in the morning and with a banner on top the vehicle ballyhooed the downtown streets until it was needed for the first afternoon de luxe performance, when it was a simple matter to remove the banner from its sockets and run the coach onto the stage. After that it was free to circulate the streets until the night shows called for its stage appearance.

Not many towns can command stage coaches, but it is a comparatively simple matter to build up some old wagon with profile, and where the structure can be made to do double duty, it should be well worth the cost.

Gave Mae a Whirl

When he played The French Doll, Edward M. Foley, of the Academy Theatre, Haverhill, Mass., had a real French doll, in swagger dress, on a slowly revolving platform. The children were interested in the doll, the women in the dress and the men got the general idea that Mae Murray was to be seen, even though they were not interested in the dress.

Famous Managers in Big Cup Race

Harold B. Franklin, of the theatres department of Famous Players, has offered a silver cup for the best advertisement from any theatre in the F. P. string. Due allowance is made for a theatre's facilities—or lack of them—for preparing advertisements, and the small houses have as good a chance as the larger ones.

The decision will be made monthly and a manager will be allowed to hold the cup until the next award, when it must be passed along to the next winner. He will retain a diploma stating that the theatre won the cup in a certain month.

If any manager wins the cup three times in the year the contest will run, he will be permitted to retain it. If there is no one to qualify for the award, the managers who have presented the three best entries during the year will be entered in a play-off. The contest is to be handled through The Close-Up.

Judging is made on the advertisement in the newspaper and not from original drawings or specially pulled proofs, and the weight will be given the smaller advertisement, other things being equal.

If the contest does no more than emphasize to the local men the importance of learning to make display more important than mere size, it will be worth many times the cost of the cup, elaborate as the trophy is.

The Ushers' Own

Under the title of McVicker's Service Man, the ushers of McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, are issuing a four-page weekly intended for the employees of that theatre. Because of the limited circulation the text is typewritten and run off on the ditto machine.

Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatres department, used to get out a printed sheet along similar lines for the Shea houses in Buffalo, and it is not unlikely that he is more or less concerned in this new venture in a paternal or godfather sort of way.

The idea is to further teamwork and increase the spirit of fellowship in the organization, and it promises success in this purpose.

USED THE SAME STAGE COACH FOR A BALLYHOO AND PROLOGUE ON PIONEER DAYS

Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre, Boston, put its stage coach to double use for the Vitagraph feature, and set it about the streets when it was not in use for the stage work, the more or less actors doubling on the set and street, in good old minstrel show fashion. The left hand cut shows the ballyhoo and also the two plane banner based on the paper.

Mae Murray Cuts Helps to Agents

Most press agents are glad to learn that a Mae Murray picture has been booked, because it always means a set of cuts that will almost frame themselves into advertising displays. The French Doll is no exception to the general rule and as the first of the series we offer a display from the State Theatre, Cleveland. This employs three of the cuts as a semi-frame to the title and selling talk. The star name is placed above the star figure. It is a simple, yet effective make up, and only one set of a press agent's delight. The character of the roles played by Miss Murray lend themselves well to striking cuts, but even with this material at hand in the shape of stills the cuts could be pulled down through poor work, but the line stuff is invariably good, which leads to the question as to why other pictures cannot be as well advertised in line, at least as regards cut quality. The answer seems to be that there is no reason other than a failure to obtain good work.

More Dark Secrets in This Halftone

The management of the Orpheum Theatre, South Bend, Ind., lost a chance for a contest when it put in this display for The Lonely Road and did not make the halftone cut an identification contest. It's all a deep black mystery, and a half tone like that is about as useful as a bathing suit would be to a cat. When you order a cut and find that the halftone will not print up, amputate it with a file and recast your space, if necessary, rather than spoil your layout with a piece of junk. That space would be far better employed were it used for type, though whoever picks the copy for the Orpheum lacks finesse. In the bank below the signboard is a three paragraph sentence ending with "To return home then meant the lonely road. Would any wife?" That might get interest were it not that in the bank above the board the conclusion runs "the life of a wife who walked the lonely road and the child who kept her there." What's the use in asking a question already answered? Either bank would have worked, but one nullifies the other and both should not have been used. After you go through the plan book, read your advertisement over and see if you have doubled. The book carries a mass of material from which you are supposed to select what most appeals to you, but it cannot all be written so as to be interchangeable. Pick out paragraphs that do not fight, but which supplement each other in an harmonious whole. Pick out stuff that matches, and if you find

Tells Many Titles in Small Display

Getting four titles in a 75-lines by two is something that Nelson B. Bell does regularly for a couple of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., where others feel that they cannot use type to advantage. Bell feels that he cannot afford cuts in the small space, so he gets plenty of display at line rate in half inch spaces for all but the first title, which is a spread of two and a quarter inches. This does not count, of course, the signature. It gets further distinction from a smaller companion with a similar weekly program in a still smaller space. These houses are not played up except on Sunday. They are subsidiary to the first run house and do not draw the same appropriation, but they are fully sold on the Saturday-Sunday announcement, since the neighborhood patronage stocks up on titles for the week. Going to the Ambassador is more or less a family habit, and big displays are not required, but even at that Mr. Bell does very nicely in the space at his commend and gets a real prominence for his titles. It must have been First National week at the Ambassador, since Dulcy, Trilby and Circus Days form the major portion of the bill. It will be noted that the musical offering is also included in the three line spaces, the smaller features being named just below the title with "Concert number" and the selection on a third line. Evidently it pays to advertise the musical program, too.

to class high, but it is something more than that. It is strong and forceful, and that is to be preferred to delicacy of line in a newspaper display. Apparently the cut was made the basis of the entire display, the remainder being built in around this, with the heavy title and other lines at the top and a small panel below, where it will not detract from the art work. The cut carries the glance up the space and into the announcement display, but it gets a chance to do that because there is nothing at the bottom to hinder the start. Probably the same result could be achieved by opening at the top and putting the heavy lines at the bottom, but we do not think that this would hold true in the same degree since the top of the cut is more interesting than the lower portion and so the interest naturally centres there. We think that even this matter was studied out, though it is possible that the agent did the placement through instinct rather than study. This layout might not work as well with all cuts, but we think that with this particular cut a better display could not well have been planned. It's pretty work.

Builds Pretty Page to Open Theatre

Working with press book material, plus a column of talk about the new house, the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., got out a very pretty appeal, using only a single cut and so getting to put most of the small talk in eighteen point instead of eight. With a new house the temptation to fill up the space with too much talk must have been strong, but the actual display was just enough talk to sell and not so much as to unsell again. P. A. Wills apparently framed the display and he has every reason to be well satisfied with his work. He asks for a criticism, but there is nothing to comment upon other than with approval; which, by the way, is just as much a criticism as an adverse comment. He also sends in a house program for comment. Here there is some room for comment. It is apparently a mailing piece rather than a straight house distribution program, but even at that we think it would be well to make the inside pages into two page sections with the formal house program on the right and trade advertising on the left hand page. At present the top two thirds of the entire page is set as one for a display advertisement with the added features in one line below. It would be more impressive to get this out on regular house program form, even though it is intended to mail it out. The best program form we know is that originated in the Loew houses and now used in all of the Paramount theatres as well. A request to Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, accompanied by a return envelope will probably bring samples.

A Paramount Release

AN ATTRACTIVE PAGE

Overlaid Portrait Makes a Background

Getting away from the usual form for the Lloyd comedies, Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, Washington, makes a full-space halftone of the star, the foundation on which is laid the selling appeal. It is an odd form and an effective one, always provided that you can get good results from halftones in the newspapers; which does not often hold good. This is better, as a rule, for program and other house work, where a better grade of paper can be used. Here Nelson Bell got away with it very nicely and has achieved an unusual and striking result. It puts Lloyd over at the first glance, and yet it gives a remarkable prominence to the type inserts. There is a particularly happy introduction in the upper space, which starts off with: "Hal Roach presents Harold Lloyd, supported by Jobyna Ralston and nine feet of giant, etc." The chief value of the display is the emphasis given the type, and the result is that usually obtained with type set against a dark ground, but here the ground is also made to work; perhaps even better than the text, since Lloyd will sell more tickets on his face than on his titles, other than that the title assures a new comedy. This is 100 lines by three, but it has the display value of a quarter page at the cost of 300 lines or less than 22 column inches. It is not the size which counts so much as the appeal, and this looms like a torchlight parade on a dark night on a page with no other very pronounced display. Even there it was run with a lot of other black borders and similar devices the type boxes would pull it up. It is one of the best things that Mr. Bell has given us of late.

Coming Back

Monthly calendar programs seem to be coming into style again after a long recess, and a number have come to this desk of late. One from the Elite theatre, Somewhereorother, is in straight calendar form with boxed days and shadow letters which do not obscure the titles and which render two color printing unnecessary. The two-day bookings and the more important singles show original designs. The others are merely lettered. The card is 9 by 11 inches, and is provided with a ribbon hanger. Another sample is from the Majestic theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada. This is a cheap stock 5½ by 12 inches to read down the long way, and is in eight point Roman. The column is rather wide for this size type, being 26 ems, or double the usual column width, but the lines are leaded, which helps the reading. This is a weekly program hanger instead of a monthly, and we like it even better. But the best of all is the vest pocket size program, which is small enough for the pocket from which it derives its name or for a woman's shopping bag. Time was when these V. P. programs were almost universally used, even though other programs supplemented them, but W. C. Benson, of the Laurier theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., is about the only manager we know who is using them regularly. Mr. Benson has used them for years, first in Westbrook, Maine, later in Waterville, in the same state, and more recently in Woonsocket. He writes that he has found nothing quite so useful at the same small cost. Why not start a V. P. or a wall program and see how it works?

story and fairly typical of the play. It is pretty hard to tell whether this is dress or undress, but that goes for the story, so it matches up and there is an abandon to the pose which very happily reflects the spirit of the production. Apart from the figure this is a nice study in shading and the upward sweep of the lines of the background contributes quite as much to the suggestion of buoyant youth as the figure. The girl is being carried upward in the swirl of excitement. Any other disposition of the shading would have been less successful. This is one of the best of the Circle's recent examples, and the Circle art work is almost always above the average.

Took a Chance

Willing to try anything once, Walter C. Benson, of the Laurier theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., got a new stunt for a pitch. He had the Paramount pictures of the Japanese earthquake and he wanted to tell the town.

He bannered his car and sought the traffic four corners, deliberately disobeying the traffic rules. The crossing cop stopped him while he gave him a bawling out, and Benson did not mind it in the least.

He was right where the largest number of persons could see the sign within a given time and he was undeniably the centre of attraction, so he argued politely with the policeman, and gratefully handed out a pass while he told the cop—and several hundred others who had gathered—what great stuff the quake pictures were.

That's what you can call enterprise.

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast. This is a splendid picture and should be shown in every theatre in United States. Used lobby, daily papers. Had poor attendance. Draw society class. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

FURY. (8,709 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Splendid picture. My patrons enjoy a good sea picture and this cannot be beat. Book it. It's fine. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star cast, Maurice Tournier prod. Book this one, tie up with the schools and clean up. The picture is there, and the schools will be glad to co-operate with you. Cleaned up on this one with the help of the local schools. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star cast. Good picture that can be put over, as most everyone has heard or read the famous novel. Buy it right and you will make money. Don't be afraid to go after it. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very good picture with good acting. A mix-up of characters, thrills, trap doors, sliding panels, a mystery comedy with a surprise ending. Everybody left with a smile. Pleased one hundred per cent. Had a good crowd two nights. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A real chuck full of action picture. Better than "One Exciting Night" and on that order. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,636 feet). Star cast, Edwin Carewe prod. A one hundred per cent. picture. No kicks at all and plenty of boosting. Went over big from a picture standpoint, but for a box office attraction it did not do so well; business just fair, I think due to the advertising matter which was not much. Pleased every one, all classes. Draw small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kenucky.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. (5,000 feet). Stars, Lon Chaney, Betty Blythe. Print in fine shape; forest fire scene wonderful. Pleased ninety-nine of a hundred. S. R. O. sign and full house! Good moral tone; suitable for Sunday in larger towns. Draw mixed class in town of 1,100. Bought right. Fine picture for mill town. Admission 15-30. Dan Sanick, Victory Theatre, Sulligant, Alabama.

OMAR THE TENTMAKER. (8,090 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. If we had no better plays than "Omar," we, or any other house, could not exist a week. Such pictures must be paid for by other pictures. Moral tone, if expressed, wouldn't be moral. Suitable for Sunday?—milkman's matinee, 3 a. m. Attendance—hate to say. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. (7,650 feet). All I have said about "Omar the Tentmaker," plus a little bit more. Must run such pictures or lose F. N. Moral tone for me rotten. Suitable for junk pile. Those that came were awfully sorry. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. This has been voted the best kid picture ever seen in this theatre; situations funny and out of the ordinary. Freckles Barry's performance may be voted one hundred per cent. with Herman and Vermin, the negro boys, rating high. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Attendance, S. R. O. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. This is a good one. Has universal appeal. Both young and old like it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

QUESTION OF HONOR. (6,065 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. All my patrons were pleased. They like more like this picture. Anita Stewart can put good pictures over. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ROSARY. (7,045 feet). Star cast. As fine a picture of the down easters as has ever been shown. Our people said it was much better than "Way Down East." Has splendid moral tone and is very good for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ROSE OF THE SEA. (6,037 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Only fair program picture that has no drawing power. It pleased about fifty per cent. of our patrons. Usual advertising yielded good attendance. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen, in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Shamokawa, Washington.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture, but does not seem to please the women. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

SLIPPY McGEE. (6,299 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Only average picture. Colleen is liked here. I considered the picture too slow and draggy. Wheeler Oakman and rest of cast fair. Suitable for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This picture drew well but was not what customers expected. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This one went over fair to ordinary business. Star seems to be slipping a little. This will satisfy her many friends though it lacks much of being a great picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. Picture true to life and was well liked. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,034 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This picture not as good as the old Alice Joyce picture of the same name. Eileen Percy divided honors with Norma. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10, 25, 35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

This week there's a letter from one of the most sincere champions of this department—Carl Anglemire.

Seems as though it doesn't matter any more that the pictures are fairly recent—the prints are on the blink just the same.

The exchanges will come back at you with the statement that the exhibitors run hash grinders instead of projection machines.

And yet, if that is the case, how is it that some companies have such a remarkably low percentage of poor print complaints?

For instance, Mr. Laemmle and Mr. A. E. Smith can be mighty proud of the standing among our exhibitor tip senders of, respectively, Universal and Vitagraph.

It's all in the attitude of the producer toward giving the exhibitor what he pays for—as the press books will admit—a good show.

VAN.

Fox

BOSTON BLACKIE. (4,522 feet). Star, William Russell. A good Saturday picture, interesting all the way. Russell good in title role. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (3,892 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Pleased all the star's friends and held up for two days. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (3,892 feet). Star, John Gilbert. John adds to his following in this one. That boy surely is delivering the goods and it is up to Fox to give him the proper kind of stories. Not a kick, although period of play during early days of California. Plenty of action and a whirlwind windup. Type of picture will appeal to everybody. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Here is one of the best Mix pictures ever produced. With Tony, the horse, the actor can't be beat. Tony himself is worth the admission, any time. Good attendance of all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

LOVEBOUND. (4,407 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A satisfactory program picture. Albert Roscoe opposite star. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Like all Fox program pictures, this is a good one. When Fox makes specials they generally flivver but his program pictures all hold up well for us. Moral, buy the program. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OATHBOUND. (4,468 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A rather pleasing romance of the sea. Gave satisfaction here. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had ordinary attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The picture is good but Mix is slipping with us. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Fair program picture that got off to a slow start but wound up in whirlwind fashion in the last reel. Fox should have put more circus stuff in this, as many theatre patrons like to see athletic exhibitions, more so in the small villages than in the cities, as no "big tops" ever hit the little towns. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Can you imagine Tom Mix as a molly-coddle, wearing horned-rimmed glasses and working as a clerk in a shoe store? But he does, and with Billie Dove and Tony, the wonder horse, enacts a most remarkable picture, well worth seeing. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A riot. Chuck full of action. A real money getter and can play any theatre in the United States. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had great attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

TRUXTON KING. (5,613 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A thoroughly pleasing drama of the romantic type. Star is gaining prestige here. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

VIRGIN PARADISE. (9,000 feet). Star, Pearl White. One of Fox's old specials which is better than most of the new ones. One of the few I made money on. Pleases one hundred per cent. Good for small town. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Jos. Kineaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? Star cast. A fine picture, but for some reason or another the box office fell down. All who saw it were well satisfied and not a single patron kicked. Due to high price we barely broke even on this one. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had less than fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

YOSEMITE TRAIL (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Good program picture; should please wherever the outdoor type of picture is liked. Dustin Farnum pictures always go well with my patrons. Good attendance, small town and outlying districts. Town of 2,000. R. H. Freeman, Opera House, Liverpool, N. S., Canada.

Goldwyn

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. For a small town it's too gruesome. I've had calls for Chaney and I got him; that's all. Hardly fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. A good picture with lots of action and far better than many of the so-called specials. Torrence is best character man in movies today. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star cast. An extraordinarily good picture, very pleasing and very interesting. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star cast. One of the very best, but a little too long for a small town. Too much Monte Carlo. Cast excellent. This one should make money if bought right and if handled right. Some people doubted the title. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. A very good western comedy drama, and should draw well most anywhere. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOST AND FOUND. Star cast. Here is a nice picture. It's different really, wonderful scenery. We like this one. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw local patronage. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

LOST AND FOUND. Star cast. Good, with lots of action; good story and acting. Will please and stand advertising. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

LOVE PIKER. (6,237 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. A wonderful picture. Anita Stewart seems prettier than ever with her bobbed hair. I packed them in on this one. Distributed ten thousand heralds. Everybody well pleased. Business improved from day to day. Ran it four days and made money. Bought it right. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star cast. Did not see it personally but criticisms of patrons were favorable. Not a big special though, as distributor intimates. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. Very good but too long. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star cast. This picture has been heralded as a "knockout" in the cities, all of which it was not here. The public did not like it, told me so emphatically. It isn't really poor, but at the price quoted it would be well to give this serious thought before paying a great big rental. I charged a slight increase, had to, and that reacted, as I play the best here at no increase. Used everything you can think of for advertising. Attendance first day good, second day frightful. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STRANGER'S BANQUET. (8,531 feet). Star cast. Personally, I enjoyed this very much, and most of our patrons did. However, the picture had no drawing power, and the posters were not attractive, so we lost out. Produced in excellent style. Rental too high. Buy it at top-program price and it should prove reasonably profitable. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

THREE WISE FOOLS. (6,946 feet). Star cast. A fine show. Great cast, story, production. First money-maker since "The Hottentot." Clean with exception of one title with profanity in seventh reel. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THREE WISE FOOLS. (6,946 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, but don't oversell it even if you overbought it. Just study it and treat it accordingly, and it should satisfy you and your box office. Different enough to please any type of audience. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

Hodkinson

KINGDOM WITHIN. (6,036 feet). Star cast. Very good picture with a story that has heart appeal. Gaston Glass certainly deserves credit for his work as a crippled boy in this production. Drew big attendance. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, etc. Also special lobby display and cut-outs from twenty-four sheet backed up with garden scene and rustic cabin. H. O. Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Q., Canada.

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Star cast. The name gets them; people expect to see something and get nothing—nuf sed! Good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Star cast. Short and sweet but all there what there is of it, and oh, what a money-getter. Played to a French-Canadian audience. Everybody pleased. H. O'Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Quebec, Canada.

Metro

AN OLD SWEETHEART OF MINE. (5,400 feet). Star cast. Well, they made something out of nothing. An appealing picture from a suggested plot in Riley's famous poem. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

DESIRE. (6,500 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. A little too morbid in spots. Not a "Saturday" picture, and not a "Sunday" picture. If you have a group contract I'd say run it between times and not boast too much. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw all classes. J. E. Madsen, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. Star, James Kirkwood. A flash, a roar, thousands of cattle in a mad stampede, and many other thrills in this smashing story of the great outdoors, superbly produced, fascinating, exciting, absorbing. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture. Wonderful acting and after the show you will be proud you are an exhibitor. Hard to get them in. High class. Has excellent moral tone and is fine for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A good program picture; somewhat on the order of Fox's "Pawn Ticket 210." The first Dana picture I ever ran. Think the star made a good impression. John Herron and Ralph Lewis good in supporting cast. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HER FATAL MILLIONS. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Very good picture. Well acted, photography good, print good. Pleased one hundred per cent. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NOISE IN NEWBORO. (5,300 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A good comedy drama. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor Extra good, nothing but favorable comments on this one. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

THREE AGES. (5,251 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Where Buster is popular, as he is here, this is good. It is a little too choppy though. Not handled by the director so that Buster will make new friends. Used everything in the catalogue for this. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general patronage in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theatre (300 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

Paramount

ADAM AND EVA. (7,153 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A good comedy drama, which pleased all seeing it. William Noble,

Does the Dollar Buy as Much as it Did?

"Van, I would like to shake hands with you for some of those articles in some of the last issues of Moving Picture World, on poor films.

"If only some of the PRODUCERS would read these articles and see the logic in them!

"I am in a small town where U. S. money is used to pay admission to the theatres, and I pay the exchanges U. S. money for their film—but such film! It seems that the more we pay for prints, the poorer they are."—C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. Went over good. Made me money. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. The featured players are good drawing cards, so had good crowds, but those that didn't come saved two bits and didn't miss much either. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. A good picture that could have been made better by trimming. Cave man part much too long. Got to hand it to DeMille for artistic stuff. Suitable for Sunday in most places. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

ANNA ASCENDS. (6,900 feet). Star, Alice Brady. A fair program picture that can't stand much boosting and could stand a little knocking. It might get by in some places but here it is about fifty-fifty. Fair attendance, drawing general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Picture was a little too overdrawn from a point of romance. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good picture that drew much better than the usual Swanson picture. Huntley Gordon good opposite star. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theater, Rochester, Indiana.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one should please all of them; there is enough comedy in it to overcome a few bad spots in it. Get behind it and you'll be surprised at the result. Be careful in your advertising and make it plain that it is from the famous play. Good moral tone; not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Not as big as they say. People like it and will boost it. Lavish settings and Swanson can wear fine clothes. Good print. A good bet. Moral tone, not any too good. Possibly suitable for Sunday in certain localities. Had good attendance of university students and better class. City of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

BRANDING BROADWAY. (5,000 feet). Star, William S. Hart. Good. In very good shape. On going out they told me that they were well pleased with the show. This is our second time on Paramount, William S. Hart, pictures. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star cast. Male lead too overdrawn to be true to masculine traits. Two leading characters not suited to each other, but well directed. Might be suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star cast. For those who like the Arab stuff this will please but my patrons don't care for this kind of picture. Attendance was fair. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Turkey To Win

"Well, Van, are you all set for Thanksgiving? I'm playing "Down to the Sea in Ships" next week—and if my luck holds out I'll invite you up to a Turkey Dinner.

"But if Father Gloom shows up I'll have to set 'em up in the other alley and buy an old hen somewhere."—Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

Saw "Down to the Sea" when it was at the N. Y. Cameo—so it's a safe bet the old hen will still be clucking around while the gobbler goes down to the feast in platters.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Fair picture only; it could have been better. Some patrons were pleased and some were not. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Great entertainment. Big business at advance price. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Boys, be careful. Worth to me no more than an ordinary Paramount picture; very ordinary story played by unknown stars—the known stars do not work in the story, just merely appear. Fair moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Very good picture that pleased them all. Something unusual that will please them. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. De Roche and Kosloff are in support in this one, it is different and the type that will satisfy any audience more especially the kind that we cater to. Our people want the picture to keep moving; a pretty woman in a pensive mood or the throes of grief, etc., with the footage in the close-ups stretched out is not what they want, they want the story to keep on unfolding and that is what this one did; our audience liked the picture, the attendance was fair. Suitable for Sunday. Draw all types in town of 2,965. Admission 10-22. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Majority of patrons liked it. A very good picture for Saturday for the kids. Dorothy Dalton is well liked star. Had good attendance. Draw good class in Brooklyn. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

MARRIAGE MAKER. (6,295 feet). Star, Jack Holt. The poorest "piece of cheese" it has been my bad fortune to run. Lay off of this if you don't want to get jolted. It hasn't anything to recommend it. Settings poor, acting of Jack Holt and Agnes Ayers very poor. I paid good money for this but would have rather had the poorest kind of any other picture. It simply was rotten. Really the only thing in this picture was the acting of Charles de Roche. Half of the house walked out on me before the picture was half finished. How they get by, by releasing such stuff is beyond me. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This picture has a good cast, nice photography and scenery, good acting, sufficient action. In fact everything except a good plot. The story is a little too improbable to please a critical audience but will get by where Meighan is popular. Received the usual fine print available from Paramount exchange. Had good attendance. Suitable for Sunday. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

MOONLIGHT AND HONEYSUCKLE. (5,000 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. The picture would have been good if another feminine star had substituted. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Very ordinary. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw oil field class in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. This one is very ordinary. Hiers has no drawing power and did not go across to those that did see him. He certainly can't take Wallace Reid's place for Paramount. Had poor attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Fairly interesting comedy-drama. Town of 3,720. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

NOBODY'S MONEY. (5,584 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An average program picture that meant less than average at the box office. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Fair program picture but not up to the Meighan standard of acting, however will get by. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The jazziest picture of a Jazz-Mad age. Gloria was in all her glory in this one. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Exceptionally good picture that should please any audience. Go to it and get some business on this one because it means good advertising for you. Here you have a theme that is hard to beat. You'll be sorry if you don't realize what this is and be sure and sell it to them. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. They have been feeding us too much western themes lately. Probably all right for some communities. A good picture, however. Good moral tone, not suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A good western that pleased one hundred per cent. here. Well directed and acted and beautiful scenery. Used slides, ones. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Ordinary program picture. Pleased about half of my patrons. Something wrong with this picture which I think was due to poor direction. Many of the scenes faked. Acting of Miss Logan was excellent. Personally thought the picture was a shade above the ordinary. Customers thought different as I heard a lot of comments on it. Advertised it as something out of the ordinary and heard a lot of kicks. Used regular advertising to good attendance. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

Pathe

WHY WORRY? (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. A knockout that drew far beyond our expectations on a four-day run and broke the house record. Patrons almost universal in saying that it was Lloyd's greatest yet. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw general class in town of 9,000. Edwin F. Allman, Pike Theatre, Dover, Ohio.

Playgoers

COUNTERFEIT LOVE. (4,850 feet). Star cast. A fair program picture. Photography not up to standard, too many scenes out of focus. L. E. Brewer, Folly Theatre, Duncan, Oklahoma.

Preferred

GIRL WHO CAME BACK. (6,100 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. Just a picture. Preferred makes a fuss over it. It isn't there. Well produced and if your public is not too discriminating it will pass muster. For me it meant nothing. Used everything for advertising. Had poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Selznick

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. An excellent picture. One of the best we have had this year. Patrons all thought they had seen it and didn't come. Was too much like "Prisoner of Zenda." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real special 25-50. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theatre (300 seats), Sedro-Wooley, Washington.

United Artists

WAY DOWN EAST. (11 reels). Star, Lillian Gish. This is a wonderful picture, appeals to old and young. Real human interest story. Everybody pleased. Ran it three nights. Some patrons came to see it twice. Everybody told us how good it was and are still talking about it. Print in fair condition. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw country class in town of 2,500. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Universal

LONE HAND. (4,857 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Excellent western with plenty of comedy and a wonderful flood scene. Pleased one hundred per cent. Has good moral tone. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. The first time for a Universal feature here, also the star. It didn't seem to take; society pictures; they don't seem to take here in a small place. Pleased about sixty per cent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

TOWN SCANDAL. (4,604 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. As usual, this little star puts it over; she sure shows up the small town reformers and pictures them in their true colors. Everybody well pleased and they were not slow to tell us. Reels in good shape. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Very good attendance, drawing country and town class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (490 seats), David City, Nebraska.

TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This star a wonderful character actor. This was a good picture but my patrons don't like Chaney, too much sadness and tragedy in his plays; but they could not help but say it was good. If you like a sob drama, play it. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing country and small town class of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. J. Jenkins, Community Theatre (490 seats), David City, Nebraska.

WHAT WIVES WANT. (4,745 feet). Star cast. Another very good picture with a wonderful cast. Went over big with the women folks. Print in good condition. Photography dark. Moral tone good and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

WHERE IS THIS WEST? (4,532 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A fair western comedy drama. Suitable for Sunday. Good attendance of working class in city of 13,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Vitagraph

LOYAL LIVES. (5,950 feet). Star, Brandon Tynan. I did not get to see this but was told by my patrons it was good. Did good business, so why worry? Used slide, heralds, ones, sixes. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,000. Admission 20-35. W. B. Dobbs, Victory Theatre (250 seats), Gordo, Alabama.

Warner Brothers

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Great, wonderful, splendid; these are a few of the encouraging remarks passed to us by our audiences. Ran it two nights and they sure were justified in making them, as it certainly is a wonderful picture. This is one of the very few one hundred per cent. pictures. Not much business the first night, but after seeing it, on Saturday night we had the best house of the summer and we had some good houses this last summer even though the summer was hot on show nights. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

DEVOID of colored ink, printed on ordinary newspaper stock and minus any superficial "flash" whatever. First National press sheets are filled with red meat for the showman—useable material into which he can sink his teeth and go to work selling seats.

The press sheets do not make the impression on the eye that those issued by some other companies make, but in the pages the exhibitor will find just about everything he needs to put the picture over.

IN the First National press sheets we have examined—and we have seen most of those issued for some time past—little time or space is used in selling the picture to the exhibitor. Every inch of available space is filled either with matter intended for newspaper use or with explanations or illustrations of promotional aids.

Economy of space seems to be the order of each press sheet—so much so that there are those who might take the stand that things are omitted which might helpfully have been included in the pages; also some might take exception to the fact that even publicity stories are printed on pages which have material printed on both sides of the sheet, thus making one side more or less useless if the other is clipped. This latter, however, is an easy matter to remedy, inasmuch as two of the press sheets could be obtained.

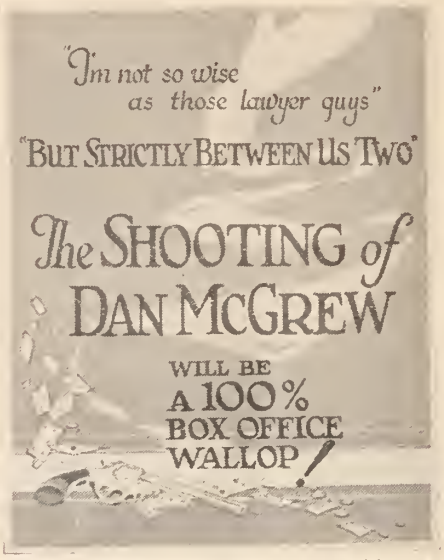
THE "Anna Christie" press sheet, which has just reached our desk, is typical of almost every First National press sheet. In its six pages—regular newspaper-page size—we find plenty of well-written newspaper stories, including a plentiful variety both as to subject-matter and size. There is also an illustrated fictionization of the play by Eugene O'Neil, which runs about five columns, and which is very readable.

About a dozen newspaper ads. in varying sizes are reproduced. The art work in all of these is good—strong blacks and whites predominating. Every one of these ads. stresses the sheer drama of the picture and each can be considered good.

There is a page devoted to exploitation stunts and suggestions for tie-ups; heralds, direct-mail campaigns and the like.

Then, too, there are three diagrams for the sign painter to follow in making artistic hand-drawn lobby cards. We mentioned this idea in these columns before, and again we say that this should prove a particularly helpful feature, especially to those houses which go in for a little extra art work on pictures.

The posters and slides are illustrated on the back page. Another feature that appears is a complete list of the aids available, together with the price of each. This is not a novel feature, but it is not common, either. We think it's darned good dope to print the prices of aids right in the press sheet.



Cover of the pocket-sized pamphlet issued by Metro on "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." In the booklet is printed the Robert W. Service poem which forms the foundation on which the picture is being builded

WHILE not reproduced in the press sheet, there are some particularly striking lobby cards issued on "Anna Christie." Especially is this true of the two 22x28's, which are excellent, and worthy of a place in the finest lobby.

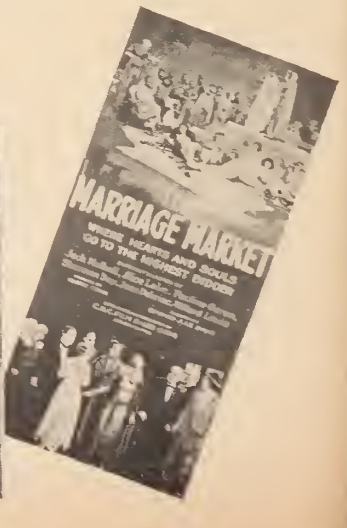
LAST week we had occasion to mention the fact that the independents were right up with the pacemakers when it came to press books. Our statement is further borne out by the receipt this week of the press book on C. B. C.'s "The Marriage Market."

The book is printed in two colors and is complete in every detail. Posters, slides, oil paintings, lobby cards and the like are reproduced, while on other of the book's sixteen pages can be found publicity stories, exploitation suggestions, newspaper ads.—both type and display—reproductions and explanation of heralds, etc.

All in all, the book lives up to the best traditions of the independents.

C. B. C's "dealer helps" have always met a high standard. The line-up on "The Marriage Market" is no exception. Herewith are reproduced the twenty-four sheet and the two threes. Standard stuff—and the sort that will help fill theatres.

"THE MARRIAGE MARKET"
Where Hearts and Souls Go to the Highest Bidder
Jack Mulhall, Alice Lake, Pauline Garon,
Shannon Day, Jean Debriac, Willard Louis



IT was a darned good still from which this drawing was made—a still that formed the keynote of the entire campaign.

EVERY piece of promotional matter on "Anna Christie" stresses the dramatic note sounded by the one "keynote" still. Indicating that an entire campaign can be based on even a very few good stills. Above are reproduced two three and a one-sheet. The twenty-four also features the same dramatic picture of "Anna Christie."

WE are in receipt of the following letter from an exhibitor in a town of 10,000:

"Circus heralds are the only kind that are any good for this small town. We have been getting a lot of little heralds lately, and they don't seem to mean a thing here. People here think, I guess, that if a herald is small the picture is small. So I like the big circus heralds. I dont care how many colors they have, just so long as they are good and strong and BIG."

What do YOU think, Mr. Exhibitor?

IT seems to us that there is a lot in what our friend has to say. On the strength of his letter, we solicited every company in the business for samples of the heralds issued on their recent productions.

We found that the majority of heralds very small affairs—virtually any one of which would easily fit into a small-sized business envelope. And it struck us that every one of these small heralds looked crowded. The type and pictures—where there were any—were small. The former was hard to read and the latter quite uninviting.

The samples of "circus" heralds that we received, on the other hand, fairly screamed their messages. True, the claims of the circus heralds were rather extravagant, but that's a small matter compared to the unpardonable sin of poor "readability."

Then, too, the "circus" heralds "looked like" something—even if the smaller heralds did perhaps cost more. The larger throwaways are more show bills than small heralds, and for that reason perhaps more acceptable to the exhibitor who wrote us and to hundreds of others like him.

Here is another example of a credit line that doesn't mean a thing to the box office. Notice on this six sheet that Jack Coogan, Sr's name is displayed in type almost half as tall as that of the star. Not the ad. man's fault—merely his misfortune. Why, oh, why, are useless credit lines?

AND, speaking of heralds recalls to us that it is a common practise now for many producers to furnish herald cuts so that exhibitors can print their own heralds instead of having heralds printed in advance and placed with the exchanges for sale to the exhibitor. That's all right for the man who books far enough in advance, but how about the little fellow who only uses a thousand or so?

What do you think of that proposition, Mr. "Little Fellow?"

NAT ROTHSTEIN has sponsored some good press books for F. B. O. in the past, but everything hitherto is going to be surpassed by the press book on Emory Johnson's "The Mailman." We say that because we know whereof we speak. We have seen the F. B. O. bunch at work, and have had the opportunity of seeing some of the aids already finished. We'll probably have much more to tell you about it in a few weeks.

METRO has just issued an attractive little booklet on their forthcoming attraction, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," Robert W. Service's famous poem of the Yukon. It is printed in two colors and will be sent broadcast to exhibitors all over the country as advance notice on the production. The contents of the booklet consists only of the poem itself—a stanza on each page. At the bottom of each page and set in the middle of a double rule are given the big punches of the story as they will be picturized. Looks like good promotional work.

"Boy of Mine"

First National Release Starring Ben Alexander Can Be Recommended Without Qualifications

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. Not because it is one of the most lavish but because it has one of the best stories, is an example of the finest directing and presents acting that is very near flawless. Furthermore, it features Ben Alexander.

It is a gem among pictures because it is amazingly entertaining without any hokum. Just where the dramatic tension is the greatest and one expects one of the time-worn twists, something supremely natural instead takes place. This is perhaps the picture's most distinguished feature.

Booth Tarkington's reputation for creating realistic boy fiction is stoutly upheld. Ben Alexander is a lovable, misunderstood and imperfect boy. He is tremendously appealing because he seems so entirely unconscious of the camera.

The picture is life from a boy's viewpoint. You are made to feel, just as in reading Tarkington, that youth is a detached kingdom with experiences and emotions of its own that very few adults take the trouble to understand. Its tragedies are either insignificant or ludicrous to outsiders. This gives the picture that wonderful blending of comedy and sympathetic interest that reaches any type of spectator.

William Beaudine's directing in this production will be remembered by anyone who is interested in better pictures. He seems to have disciplined a cast of already accomplished players into an interpretation of human character so complete and interesting that nothing is left to be desired. Henry Walthall as the repressed father, without any understanding of his son but possessed of a great love for him, is a new screen study. Irene Rich gives a beautiful performance as the mother and Rockliff Fellowes as the boy's pal is delightful.

The comedy deserves special mention. The scenes in the church are extremely funny and the incidents connected with the boy and the rag picker's son getting hold of the "revolaver" are worth making a second trip to see the picture. "Boy of Mine" is one of those few pictures no one should miss.

"The Satin Girl"

Grand-Asher Production is Wierd Crook Melodrama Featuring Mabel Forrest and Norman Kerry

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Grand-Asher's newest feature production "The Satin Girl" produced by Ben Wilson, is a wierd crook melodrama which deals with the exploits of a girl who under strange hypnotic influence of an eccentric master-criminal is forced against her own judgment to commit robberies that baffle the police.

The wierd and uncanny note is strongly stressed and much emphasis is placed on the doings of this arch-criminal, his strange surroundings, mysterious trap-doors, etc. This character is purposely overdrawn and played up for melodramatic effect and the story is naturally unconvincing and belongs to the type that cannot be taken too seriously. Themes of this kind, however, have a strange fascination for a large number of spectators, who will be fascinated in watching the development of the action.

The spectator all along knows which character is "The Satin Girl" and can easily deduct that she is the girl who was kidnapped. The main interest lies in following the manner in which she succeeds in eluding the police, and in the development of the romantic element, as the matter is eventually straightened out by a young doctor who falls in love with her and solves the mystery of her identity.

The story is told in the form of a variation of the dream idea, as you find at the climax that the heroine has been reading a novel and has personified her fiance and herself as the main personages in the story. This solution of the difficulty in which the heroine is placed will doubtless prove disappointing to many patrons, although it affords an easy way out of an embarrassing situation.

Norman Kerry is well cast as the young physician and Marc McDermott is effective as the master-criminal. Mabel Forrest does good work as the girl. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

On the whole it is not an especially strong picture from a box-office standpoint and is apt to arouse only mild interest on the part of the average spectator.

Story

Soon after receiving a letter of warning, Silas Gregg, a miserly old man is murdered by a mysterious character and his daughter disappears. Not long after this there occurs a series of mysterious robberies which the police blame on an elusive character known as "The Satin Girl." Dr. Taunton, at a party, meets Lenore Vance and becomes interested in her, not knowing that she is really "The Satin Girl," who, against her will, performs the robberies under the strange influence of a man named Fargo. When Lenore takes a ruby from Dr. Taunton she leaves a clue which causes him to unravel the mystery. He discovers that Fargo is the man who murdered Gregg. The police arrive at Fargo's place but find he has killed himself. It develops that the whole story is a novel that Lenore has been reading in which she visualizes herself and Dr. Taunton as the leading characters.

"The Day of Faith"

Eleanor Boardman Is Charming in Goldwyn Picture Which Has Moments of Great Power

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Although the theme in this Goldwyn picture is the important thing, the dramatic treatment is such that its box-office value should be dependable in a majority of houses. The story is one of power, and Tod Browning has given it skillful directing.

As the original story by Arthur Somers Roche has been conceived without sectarian prejudice, the religious trend should be objectionable to no one. In places where the "faith" angle might easily have been overdone, restraint has been used. The result is a more human production with just enough idealism to arouse a certain degree of wonderment in the average person without becoming at any point ludicrous.

An example of this and an incident which suggests the spirit of the entire picture is the healing of the lame reporter and his subsequent lapse into his former state. First his restoration is brought about by a shock —a desperate effort to save a lame girl from falling. Later when the inspiration is gone and he faces the taunts of an unbeliever, he finds that the old limp has returned. This might be interpreted in a number of ways. It leaves considerable margin for conjecture and in this lies much of the picture's power.

It has been cut in a number of places, sometimes to a disadvantage. It is not entirely clear until almost the end why the chief enemy to the cause suddenly decides to endorse it. Also the revenge which the public metes out against him is conceived rather too suddenly.

The picture should be a strong aid in popularizing Eleanor Boardman. She is personally beautiful and acts with great charm and ability. Raymond Griffith gives an intensely interesting performance and a number of others excel, also.

"The Day of Faith" will have a momentous appeal for some, a fair interest for others, but is on the whole a worth while box-office attraction for almost any theatre.

Story

Jane Maynard devotes her life to the Bland Hendricks Foundation, an institution for helping the needy, called "Thy Neighbor as Thyself." John Anstell, son of a mighty financial power, falls in love with her but her father disapproves. He fails to affect the girl's work through the press, and then determines to pretend to back the institution to gain public favor. The many who have suffered through his selfishness demand revenge and kill his son. Anstell is awakened to the real purpose of the girl's work and reforms. She finds happiness with another one who has helped her.

"To the Ladies"

Paramount Adaptation of Successful Stage Play Is an Exceptionally Entertaining Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

After proving to be a big success as a stage play, "To the Ladies" has been transferred to the screen by Paramount and bids fair to duplicate if not eclipse its stage popularity. It is a bright, snappy comedy, dealing with everyday people, and is entertaining from start to finish. There is hardly a moment when the average spectator will not be enjoying the really fine work of Helen Jerome Eddy, Edward Horton, Theodore Roberts and the other players, the bright, witty subtitles and the clean-cut, delightful comedy.

Here is a picture with a theme that is out of the ordinary. It will appeal especially "to the ladies," for it plays up their influence over their husbands and shows how much assistance a clever wife can be in helping her husband to success; but the men will like it too, although it is a little hard on them. It is tremendously strong in little human interest touches, the characters are familiar types and seem very real, the action is entirely plausible and you seem to be watching the unfolding of an actual and intimate story of people of the kind you come in contact with every day.

James Cruze, who directed "The Covered Wagon" and other successes, and Walter Woods, scenario writer, have done excellent work in transferring this story to the screen. You watch the tremendously sincere efforts of the hero and his clever wife to secure for him the coveted position of factory manager and you feel yourself sharing with them their alternate joys and disappointments. There are a number of delightful scenes in the picture and the situation where after arduous rehearsing of a set speech, the hero finds his rival delivering the same speech at a banquet, is a gem.

Helen Jerome Eddy is unusually fine as the wife of the hero and has never done better work. Hers is the outstanding characterization of the picture; she acts with tremendous sincerity and realism. Edward Horton also gives a very fine and very real portrayal as the hero, and it is on the exceptional work of these two that much of the appeal of the picture depends. Theodore Roberts, Louise Dresser, Arthur Hoyt, and in fact all of the other members of the cast seem to have entered wholeheartedly into the spirit of the picture and there is not a false note in their work.

Here is a picture that you can offer to your audience with the assurance that a great majority will be highly amused and entirely satisfied.

Based on play by G. S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly.

Directed by James Cruze.
Length, 6,268 feet.

Story

Beebe, Baker and Mullin are clerks in the office of the Kincaid Piano Co. They are all excited because a factory manager is to be selected and each one is after the job. Kincaid, the president, depends largely on his wife's judgment and she looks over the aspirants and favors Baker, who is obsequious and seemingly very efficient. Beebe plays up the fact that he put out a small fire in the factory. Kincaid and his wife call on the Beebes at their home and find that they are in financial straits, as he has even mortgaged his piano to buy a farm in Florida. Mrs. Kincaid is much impressed with Beebe's wife. Baker and Beebe are invited to a banquet. Beebe rehearses a speech he gets out of a book and Baker delivers the same speech. Thoroughly nonplussed, Beebe is silent, but his wife makes a speech that is a hit, stating Beebe is sick and that was what he wanted to say. Beebe gets the job, Baker exposes the deception about the speech, and Beebe is demoted. Mrs. Beebe pleads for him and with Mrs. Kincaid's assistance he is reinstated, due entirely to the cleverness of Mrs. Beebe and the help she can be to him.

"The Unknown Purple"

Strong Box-Office Appeal in Sensational Melodrama Offered by Truart, Featuring Henry Walthall

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A sensational melodrama, which features Henry Walthall to the best advantage, this Truart picture should have a strong box-office appeal. The use of a purple light produces many novel and striking effects. The story is entertaining and mysterious but is without the superabundance of tricks that make some such attractions too baffling for general enjoyment.

Its chief character is an inventor who is able to surround himself with a purple ray that renders him invisible. He uses this power to get his revenge upon his wife and the man who has forced him to serve a prison sentence.

One of the authors of the original stage play, Roland West has directed and adapted the screen production with the aid of Paul Schofield. It is crowded with interesting incidents. There is practically no padding and although the film measures about seven reels, the suspense is so well carried from one scene to another that there is no impression of excessive length.

The only missing element is comedy. There is a frail attempt at this in the character of Freddie Goodlittle, a hen-pecked husband, but it seems lacking in real humor. The picture is intensely serious with the grave performance of Henry Walthall and a theme of quiet, piercing vengeance. Little Frankie Lee introduces a human note now and then but his part is small.

In settings and material appointments, the production is elaborate and impressive. Gorgeous evening gowns are plentiful. Alice Lake has a most unsympathetic part but plays it with dramatic skill. Helen Ferguson is sincere in a lovable role and Stuart Holmes handles the part of a scoundrel with his usual capability.

Peter Marchmont serves a prison sentence because he takes the blame for stealing what his wife's lover really stole. He thinks he is saving his wife but learns of her infidelity while in prison. When he is released he assumes a new name and is disguised so that his wife fails to know him. With the use of a purple light which he has invented he appears at her home and creates great trouble and mystery, baffling the detectives and finally getting his revenge by winning back his wife's love and then forcing her to live with the other man. He finds true love in the girl who has cared for his boy during the years.

"Maytime"

Preferred Pictures Offers Fine Version Rida Johnson Young's Romantic Stage Success

Rida Johnson Young's stage play, "Maytime," which enjoyed great success, has been transferred to the screen by Gasnier and is being distributed by Preferred Pictures. It belongs to the class of extremely sentimental romances and tells of a love affair of years ago which was frustrated but finally finds fulfillment in the romance of the grandchildren of the original lovers.

It is a well-made picture and a faithful adaptation of the play. In keeping with the nature of the story, it has been given a picturesque and pictorially beautiful production which admirably maintains the atmosphere of the story. To those who are sentimentally inclined and intrigued by the idea of undying love, of romance that endures through generations, it will prove a delight, and it should be especially welcomed by female patrons.

There is novelty in the idea of the original romance finding fulfillment in the grandchildren, and while there are naturally breaks in the story and changes in the characterizations through the lapse of years, the ultimate happy ending is brought about and it is a production that should entertain the majority of both sexes, and prove a welcome attraction in the average house.

Running all through the story is a really beautiful song, "Sweetheart," which has proved a distinct hit and can be effectively used by the exhibitor in connection with the picture.

The theme offers unusual opportunities for the leading players, three of whom appear throughout the entire picture. Especially fine is the work of Ethel Shannon, who appears as the young heroine, then as an old lady, again as her young grandchild in rompers and as this girl after she grows up. She carries the largest share of the story and her work is tremendously effective and convincing in each, while her make-up as the old lady is so fine that it is hard to believe it is the same woman. In a double exposure scene which will keep patrons wondering as to how it is done she is shown as both the girl in rompers and the old lady. This is an unusually good bit. Harrison Ford the hero also does good work in portraying the two types of young manhood and also appears as an elderly man.

There is an excellent comedy element in the person of "Uncle Matthew," portrayed by William Norris, who has about four different types of wives during the course of the story. His work is excellent, although in the early scenes he hardly looks as young as the character he portrays. Clara Bow, Wallace MacDonald, Robert McKim and in fact the entire cast gives thoroughly satisfactory performances.

Story

One Maytime long ago Ottilie Van Zandt, a wealthy girl, and her playmate, Richard Wayne, a gardener, declare their love and bury trinkets and a pledge of undying love under a tree. Ottilie's father forbids the match and Richard goes west where he makes a fortune. Returning later, he finds that that very day Ottilie, unable to hold out longer, has married the man of her father's choice, her cousin Claude. Many years pass. Richard has married, but he and Ottilie continue to love each other. Ottilie has lost her fortune and Richard buys the old home for her. Still more years pass. Ottilie's granddaughter is a sweet, old-fashioned type while Richard's grandson, though he admires young Ottilie, likes jazz and chorus girls. Ottilie is lured to the home of a scoundrel, Richard saves her. Returning home in a severe storm, the old tree blows down and imprisons her. Richard again rescues her. They find the old pledge of love buried by their grandparents. Richard realizes that he really loves Ottilie and they pledge their undying love, thus bringing in the third generation the culmination of the thwarted love of their grandparents.

"This Freedom"

Fox Production Is Unusually Faithful Version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's Widely Read Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Another widely read modern novel, "This Freedom," has reached the screen. It is by the author of "If Winter Comes" and is also being distributed by the Fox Film Corporation, but unlike that production, it was made in England and is acted by a cast composed entirely of English players who are unknown to American audiences.

"This Freedom" as a novel has met with great popularity and is one of the most widely discussed of recent books. It tells the story of a woman who continued her business career after she married and became the mother of three children and shows how two of them, deprived of real mother love and home influences, finally met with disaster, blaming her; and points out at what great cost she secured "this freedom." The author, however, calls attention to the fact that this story is not typical of all mothers in business, as many work for their children while the heroine worked for herself alone.

The theme is undoubtedly a powerful one and is presented forcefully in the screen version which follows the novel closely, no attempt being made to bring about a happy ending or to make a heroine out of the woman or make excuses for her action. There is consequently no strong sympathy developed for her.

While the picture will not satisfy those who demand a happy ending or a strongly sympathetic leading role, it is undeniably a powerful character study. It is well made and well acted. It is out of the ordinary and gets away from the beaten path of the majority of screen productions. It is certainly a theme which will arouse discussions and it should have its greatest appeal for the women, though they may not all agree with the conclusions reached. The thousands who have liked the book will certainly like the picture, for it is an exceptionally faithful version even to the atmosphere and incidents surrounding the characters.

While there are touches of comedy here and there, all of which are well done, the general tone of the picture is extremely serious and its denouement tragic. It is more of a narrative than a drama and there is little action, the author's idea being registered in forceful subtitles of which there is a great number, the scenes serving mainly to personify the characters and make them vivid human beings.

It is a picture which because of its nature it is hard to judge by the usual standards or to formulate any definite opinion as to the way it will be received by the average audience; it should, however, prove a strong attraction for discriminating patrons and readers of the book.

Dennison Clift deserves credit for the manner in which he has preserved the idea of the novel. So large is the cast that it is impossible to point out the excellent individual work. Fay Compton in the leading role, Clive Brook as her husband, Athene Seyler as Miss Keggs and Bunty Fosse, who portrays the heroine as a child, are deserving of special mention.

Based on novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson.
Directed by Dennison Clift.
Length, about 7,000 feet.

Story

Rosalie, one of the many children in the home of the Rev. Harold Aubyn, is adopted by her aunt Belle because her parents are so poor. Even at the early age of six she has strange ideas of life and of the other sex. Growing to womanhood, she decides on a business career for herself. Opposed to men and disdaining marriage, preferring "her freedom," she nevertheless succumbs to cupid and marries Harry Occleve. Within a few years three children are born to them, but Rosalie continues her business career, leaving the care of the children and the home to others. Discovering that the children are getting strange ideas and are drifting away from her, she gives up business, but as she is unable to win back her rightful place in their hearts, she again resumes her career. Years pass, she has achieved great success. The war comes and goes, the older children have grown up. Huggo is caught in a shady business venture and sentenced to prison and Doda is betrayed by a blackguard. Both blame their downfall on her and the fact that she has never been a real mother to them and they have never had a real home. Then Rosalie realizes at what a great price she has purchased "this freedom."

"Fashion Row"

Metro Production with Mae Murray Has Sympathetic Note as Well as Pictorial Splendor

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Mae Murray's latest Metro production is sufficiently different from the others to startle most of the fans. It gives her a chance for a new characterization. The dual role should mean a definite box-office advantage because "Fashion Row," contrary to the title, has an appeal that goes a shade deeper than lavish material production and exquisite physical beauty.

If this impression could be created earlier in the picture, it would mean improvement. As it is, the production starts out in familiar style, with too much artificiality to indicate the real motive. Mae Murray in the new role, that of the Russian peasant, which is by far the most effective with the average spectator, might easily be introduced earlier.

The idea of the star playing a sympathetic —in fact a human interest role—is novelty well worth capturing for publicity. In one role she is the idol of New York, a dazzling theatrical star, with bewitching poses and clothes. In the other she plays a sister of the star, a forlorn little immigrant of wooden movements, crude but charming. The double exposures are well managed with fine contrasts in the two characterizations.

Extravagant staging, good suspense at the close, the peasant dance and the Russian masked ball are entertaining features. Robert Z. Leonard has given the picture the atmosphere and style that is expected of a Tiffany production, and the photography and lighting accentuate the extreme effects. Elmo Lincoln gives a colorful performance in a heavy role.

Cast

Olga Farinova, Zita, her young sister — Mae Murray
James Morton, a man about town.....Earle Foxe
Eric Van Cortlandt, son of an old New York family.....Freeman Wood
Mrs. Van Cortlandt, his mother.....Mathilde Brundage

Papa Levitzky.....Sidney Franklin
Mama Levitzky.....Madame Rosanova
A Press Agent.....Craig Biddle

Story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin.
Direction by Robert Z. Leonard.
Length, 7,300 feet.

Story

Olga Farinova is a New York star, who pretends for the sake of an advantageous marriage to be descended from the Russian nobility. While with her mother-in-law she meets her little sister, Zita, who has come from Russia and has searched in vain for her sister until now. Olga is forced to snub Zita but is summoned to her house on the East Side later by a message that Zita is ill. It proves to be false and only a scheme for an old suitor to get his revenge upon Olga, who had scarred his face in a terrific struggle. Olga dies in her husband's arms but her little sister finds friends at last.

"The Man from Brodney's"

David M. Smith Special for Vitagraph Features J. Warren Kerrigan and Alice Calhoun

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

All of the usual romance and pomp typical of George Barr McCutcheon fiction is found in the Vitagraph picturization of his recent novel, "The Man from Brodney's." It should appeal strongly to his readers—and in fact to the majority of fans. It has color and action without stint in addition to a cast of favorites.

The spectacular angle has been greatly stressed. The are some tremendous scenes showing the storming of a castle, which serve as a big, melodramatic climax. Palatial sets and stunningly gowned women have been provided. Altogether the picture is done in a lavish, ceremonious style deeply impressive to those who are not too much concerned about the plausibility of the story.

A dauntless American establishing order in some imaginary kingdom and falling in love with a princess is a familiar McCutcheon hero. J. Warren Kerrigan has just such a role here. He makes many thrilling rescues and is a romantic figure in numberless adventures.

The kingdom is called Japat, and the struggle is between the heirs to the throne and a vast army of natives who fancy themselves being cheated. They are shown meeting en masse on the hills, climbing the chateau gates and the walls of the building, tumbling into the rooms and being pressed back by a handful comprising the royal party—and the American. Finally as a last touch consistent with the rest of the melodrama, a United States destroyer sends a crew to conquer the natives. This brings the turmoil effectively to a close.

Alice Calhoun is lovely in a formal, gracious role. Other attractive women are Wanda Hawley, Miss Du Pont and Kathleen Key. Pat O'Malley is also in the cast.

Cast

Hollingsworth Chase....J. Warren Kerrigan
Princess Genevra.....Alice Calhoun
Lady Deppingham.....Wanda Hawley
Mrs. Browne.....Miss DuPont
Robert Browne.....Pat O'Malley
Neenah .....Kathleen Key
Rasnea .....Bertram Grassby

Based upon novel by George Barr McCutcheon.
Scenario not credited.
Direction by David M. Smith.
Length, 7,100 feet.

Story

Hollingsworth Chase, an American, represents Brodney's, a British law firm, attempting to defend the natives' interests in a revolution in Japat. Chase meets the two heirs to the throne who must marry or else sacrifice the kingdom to the natives. He also meets again a charming princess whom he met in the Duchy of Rapp Thorberg. He and the Princess get deeply involved in the various uprisings and Chase has the greatest difficulty in trying to adjust national affairs and is compelled to swing to the side of the royal party when the natives make a terrific attack. The Princess gives up her title and throne because of the great love and courage of the American.

"The Wanters"

Excellent Entertainment in John M. Stahl Picture Which Looks Like a Big Box-Office Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Characteristic of John M. Stahl's recent pictures, such as "The Dangerous Age," which is proving a big success, "The Wanters," his newest production for First National, is based on a live-wire theme of everyday life. This time he deals with the universal craving for things we do not possess and seeks to show that happiness does not necessarily result in attaining these things.

The theme i. concentrated in the experiences of a maid in a wealthy household who marries a member of the family and is surrounded by luxury only to be snubbed by the family, made to feel unwelcome and finally discover that hypocrisy and sham are rampant in that class and that she has not found the happiness she dreamed of.

It will be seen that the story proper follows somewhat familiar lines, but the admirable manner in which it has been handled and the fine work of a well-selected cast makes you overlook little inconsistencies. You find yourself interested to an unusual degree in the girl's experiences; there is a lot of strong human interest, dramatic situations that strike home and excellent comedy touches. The story is set in attractive surroundings among the homes of the wealthy and is finely photographed. It is a picture that is strong in the elments that appeal to the masses, even to the melodramatic and thrilling rescue at the climax which brings about the happy ending.

The result is a thoroughly pleasing and satisfying picture that holds your attention throughout and has every indication of providing a big box-office success. In fact, in Paterson, N. J., at the Garden Theatre, when the writer saw this picture at the supper show on the last day of a week's run, the house was filled, and the lobby was jammed the crowd extending out into the street at the beginning of the night show.

Here is a showman's picture. The title is in itself interest arousing and unusually adaptable to exploitation such as teasers and tie-ups. If you get behind it, you can get them in, and once they are in your theatre, you don't have to worry, for the picture will take care of itself.

Marie Prevost proved to be an ideal selection for the leading role and makes the character seem intensely real. Robert Ellis does excellent work opposite her, acting with fine feeling a role that is more true to life than heroic. Hank Mann contributes a particularly well-handled and convincing comedy bit in a situation that has clever and well-sustained suspense.

Based on story by Leila Burton Wells.
Seenario by J. G. Hawks and Paul Bern.
Directed by John M. Stahl.
Length, 6,871 feet.

Story

Myra Hastings, one of the maids in the wealthy Van Pelt household, dons her mistress' new gown while the family is at the opera. She is seen by Elliot Worthington, a brother of her mistress, who is struck by her beauty and charm. Mrs. Van Pelt finds her wearing the gown and discharges her. Elliot visits Myra at her home and proposes to her. She accepts because she wants beautiful things. Mrs. Van Pelt and her mother receive her coldly and set out to break up the match. After an embarrassing scene where she falls downstairs at a big reception, Van Pelt makes an insulting proposal to her and his wife blames her. Later Myra finds Mrs. Van Pelt planning to run away with another man. Disillusioned by her ill-treatment and by the hypocrisy she finds among the wealthy, Myra leaves. Elliot, realizing he really loves her, follows and saves her life as her foot gets caught in a switch while a train is approaching.

"The Mailman"

Emory Johnson's Latest for F. B. O. Has Thrilling Climax and Many Heart Touches

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Generous in heart interest and thrills, Emory Johnson's latest production for F. B. O. will bring entertainment to the many who enjoyed "The Third Alarm" and "Westbound Limited." It is dedicated to the United States mail service in much the same spirit as the others were, to fire departments and railroad employees. It has the same sincerity and simplicity of theme with an undercurrent of drama, terminating in an exciting climax.

Like its predecessors, "The Mailman" makes its great appeal to the masses. It tells a rather plain story with homelike details and without many of the subtleties that an intellectual audience demands. Probably the only exceptional scenes are those showing the capture of the yacht, by the Government fleet. But these combined with a sympathetic story sincerely set forth make an excellent box-office attraction for the average theatre.

Ralph Lewis gives another of his appealing performances. In the character of the mail carrier, faithful to his work in all kinds of weather and taking a heart-felt interest in all that he meets on his daily rounds he emphasizes again those qualities that have endeared him to the public. The scenes in his home have the sentiment and kindly humor that appeals generally. The little cripple girl next door as played by Josephine Adair is a pathetic bit. This and similar touches are not new but they play upon age old emotions in a way that is affecting to a majority.

The robbery of the mail ship furnishes an excellent climax. A fight on board ship between the mail clerk and the robber followed by the clerk being thrown over board where he is saved by clinging to the suitcase containing the registered mail and the searchlight which signals to captain of the rum-running vessel has good suspense and spectacular value. Johnnie Walker plays with an abundance of spirit. These are the best scenes in the picture and would have made a better final impression than the familiar, melodramatic twist which has been given at the end.

Bob Morley and his son Jack both receive commendations for their faithful service in the United States Mail and Jack is assigned to "The Enterprise," a ship containing registered mail. He is attacked, the mail is stolen but on another ship he sends a wireless for help so that the mail is recovered but he is accused of theft. He is sentenced to hang but the real criminal confesses in time to save him.

"The Whipping Boss"

Monogram Offers Picture Based on Inhuman Use of the Lash in Convict Camps Where Leasing System Prevails

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

It is very evident that the theme of "The Whipping Boss" the second Monogram picture is based on the case of a lad who was the victim of the lash in a lumber camp in a state where the convict leasing system prevailed; a case which obtained a large amount of space in the newspapers and resulted in arousing public opinion and bringing about a reform in this system.

In the main, the picture story follows the actual case, particularly in so far as the treatment of the boy is concerned, although certain changes have been made, a romance introduced for dramatic effect, and a happy ending given the picture.

The outstanding point in the picture and the apparent reason for its production is the inhuman treatment of the convicts. There are scenes where the hero, sick from working in the muck of the cypress swamp is cruelly beaten with a heavy lash, also where the hero just saves an old man from such treatment. A climax has also been introduced in which the whipping boss at the instigation of the villainous superintendent sets fire to a stockade in which the convicts are chained in their bunks. Although the convicts are saved by the timely arrival of members of the American Legion, the effect of these scenes is distinctly depressing and will cause the spectator to become indignant at the thought of such inhuman treatment, which is evidently the intention of the producers.

Introduced into the story are several familiar melodramatic situations, and great stress has been placed on the power of the American Legion for good in a community. The seal of the legion appears on the film.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Breaks Record

"'Why Worry' at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre broke every record for the house during the first and second weeks of its showing and is now on the way to a new high-water mark for the third week," reads a dispatch received this week from Los Angeles.

The telegram adds that the new Lloyd feature comedy for Pathe has proved a sensation and "has surpassed all of Grauman's expectations."

Over 300 Exhibitors Want "Rosita"

More than three hundred exhibitors have placed their orders through United Artists Corporation with Mary Pickford for her latest picture release, "Rosita," according to a statement just arrived at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios.

Having played, it is said, to excellent business at this season of the year at the Capitol theatre, New York, and set new record figures at the Orpheum in Chicago, "Rosita" also showed simultaneously with these two cities in Los Angeles and San Francisco, as well as being held over for a second week in Milwaukee.

Fox Sales Manager on Tour

Richard A. White, sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, is making a visit to all the Fox Canadian branch offices. Conferences will be held at all the exchanges regarding new features of next year's sales campaign. Mr. White will also visit the West Coast branches and return to New York by way of Salt Lake City and Chicago.

During his absence the general sales manager's office is in charge of Clayton P. Sheehan, the Fox Eastern District manager.

New Metro Film for Release Dec. 10

Viola Dana's latest Metro starring vehicle, "In Search of a Thrill," adapted from Kate Jordan's story "The Spirit of the Road," will be released December 10.

Supporting Miss Dana in the principal roles in "In Search of a Thrill" are such well known players as Warner Baxter, Mabel Van Buren, Templar Saxe, Robert Schable, Walter Lewis, Rosemary Theby, Billy Elmer and Leo White.

Boston Press Praises Metro's "Scaramouche"

The press of Boston was enthusiastic over Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," which was presented at the Park Theatre there on November 12 last. The premiere was a brilliant affair with many of Boston's prominent people present as well as good sized representations from Lowell and Worcester and the surrounding towns.

"'Scaramouche,' wrote the critic of the Boston Times, "reminded us of a great painting. It is a great story written by a great writer, filmed under the great hand of Rex Ingram, aided by his great cast." The Boston Record: "It has a sweep and power." "Ingram has given the screen as fine a picture as his other triumph, 'The Four Horsemen,'" wrote the critic of the Boston Post. "'Scaramouche' is as complete and polished as experience and genuine art can make it," wrote the critic of the Boston Globe.

The Boston Daily Advertiser wrote: "'Scaramouche' is a great picture, greatly acted." "Rex Ingram has done it again!" enthused the critic of the Boston Traveler. The Boston American: "Eloquence, revolutionary gatherings, bloodshed, dragoons, luxury, poverty, the cruel aristocracy, and the fiendish rabble, beauty, ugliness, chivalry and honor, love and coquetry, the bullet and the sword—all lend their bit to the picture."

The Boston Herald: "'Scaramouche' is an excellent picture, intelligently produced and acted."

Lloyd's "Why Worry" Is Given High Praise

"Why Worry?", Pathe's feature comedy starring Harold Lloyd, continues to score heavily in prominent key city runs throughout the country. Newspaper critics have been enthusiastic in their reception in every instance.

During the recent engagement of "Why Worry?" at the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, the Post of that city commented in part as follows: "Why Worry?—when movie fans, and who isn't one, can depend upon Harold Lloyd's coming out about once every so often with a can of celluloid, every flicker of which drags their minds farther and farther away from the drab reality of things—Why Worry, indeed?"

The Kansas City Star reviewer wrote: 'Why Worry?' is a 'whiz when it comes to entertainment and completely satisfying."

In Detroit during the engagement of "Why Worry?" at the Adams Theatre, the Free Press calls attention to the extended run of the picture: "So many Detroiters have laughed over the antics of Harold Lloyd in his latest comedy, 'Why Worry?' that this popular comedian and his clever company of funmakers will remain at the Adams Theatre for a third week."

The Public Ledger of Philadelphia, commenting on the presentation of "Why Worry?" at the Aldine, expresses the opinion that this production is "Harold Lloyd's greatest comedy."

Sennett Comedy Subjects for Release by Pathe

At the Mack Sennett Studios Earl Kenton has just completed a two-reel comedy, titled "Inbad the Sailor," in which are cast Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan and Madeleine Hurlock. Roy Del Ruth, who recently completed "Look Pleasant," in which Harry Langdon plays the featured role, supported by Jack Cooper and Albert Vaughn, has started work on a new two-reel comedy with the same cast that appeared in "Inbad the Sailor." Kenton, on the other hand, is directing the same company that appeared in "Look Pleasant" in his latest production just started.

Del Lord, after recovering from a recent illness, is back on the job. The Sennett scenario staff is hard at work rounding out the details for the new comedy scripts for forthcoming pictures to follow those now in process.

Daily rehearsals of new players and directors are progressing under the supervision of Richard Jones, production manager of the Mack Sennett Studios.

Big Circuits Book "America" Series

Another important booking contract on the "Chronicles of America" series was closed this week when the Ascher Brothers Circuit of Chicago signed with Pathe for the entire thirty-three subjects embraced in this group of thrilling historical dramas. The closing of this deal assures a wide showing for this important series in all of the Ascher Bros. theatres located in Chicago and its suburbs.

The Loew Circuit in New York has also contracted for the showing of the entire thirty-three subjects embodied in this group of thrilling historical dramas.

Pre-Review of "Black Oxen"

"Black Oxen," Frank Lloyd's first independently produced picture for release as a First National picture, was given a test preview at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, Calif., recently and despite the fact that the picture was given only a one sheet in front of the theatre an overflow crowd resulted.

The showing, arranged at four-thirty in the afternoon, was announced in the lobby only and the screening began at seven-thirty sharp. The news of the preview spread rapidly and when the initial title was flashed on the silver sheet the theatre was filled.

New Ince Film for First National

Thos. H. Ince's next production for First National will be a drama with the temporary title of "Against the Rules." Based on a story by Frank R. Adams, it is declared to be a worthy successor to "Anna Christie" in point of theme and emotional strength.

An elaborate production is planned, with Leatrice Joy, Percy Marmont and Adolphe Menjou in the principal roles and John Griffith Wray directing.

Vitagraph Film to Be at Rialto

"The Man from Brodney's" will be given its Broadway premiere at the Rialto Theatre, New York, on December 16. This super-feature is a picturization of the famous novel by George Barr McCutcheon and was produced by David Smith for release by Vitagraph.

Immediate Release on "Broadway Broke;" Mary Carr and Percy Marmont the Leads Coming closely upon the success which marked "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law," the screen version of "Broadway Broke," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Earl Derr Biggers, will be released to exhibitors immediately by Selznick Pictures Corporation. It is a Murray Garsson production with Mary Carr in the leading role and was directed by J. Searle Dawley.

Playing opposite Mary Carr, who will always be remembered for her inimitable work in "Over the Hill" as well as for her talent on the legitimate stage, is Percy Marmont, star of "If Winter Comes." The balance of the cast is of the calibre to harmonize with the principals. Among the well-known names are those of Gladys Leslie, Dore Davidson, Maclyn Arbuckle, Macey Harlan, Edward Earle.

Pierre Gendron, Billy Quirk, Henrietta Crosman, Sally Crute, Leslie King, Albert Phillips, Frederick Burton and last, but playing an effective role, "Lassie" Bronte, the dog, known in the picture as "Chum."

The story concerns a once popular Broadway star who finds, as the lines of her face deepen and the color of her hair lightens, that she is no longer able to interest the booking agents. Remembering a manuscript left by her husband, she succeeds in convincing a motion picture producer that it would make a wonderful film. So successful is she in the part she has to play to convince him, that the producer not only buys the manuscript but casts her in a prominent role as the screen "mother."

The millions who remember Mary Carr from her interpretations of "mother" roles, will be quick to grasp the fact that "Broadway Broke" affords her another remarkable opportunity. And remembering how capably she handled other roles, it follows that they will expect no less in this instance. The producers express complete satisfaction with the picture which has been given unqualified praise by all who have seen it at private exhibitions.

Percy Marmont, the lovable Mark Sabre of "If Winter Comes" from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, has a sympathetic part in "Broadway Broke." He portrays Tom Kerrigan, one time leading man for Nellie Wayne, the down and out actress, played by Mary Carr.

A picture of the throbbing life of Broadway in the days when the "roaring forties" roared, "Broadway Broke" introduces characterizations of P. T. Barnum, greatest showman of them all, played by Maclyn Arbuckle; Mark Twain, of the shaggy hair and big heart, presented by Leslie King; General U. S. Grant, with the inevitable cigar, played by Albert Phillips; Augustin Daly, brought to screen life by Frederick Burton.

J. Searle Dawley, who directed, is known as a pioneer director, having forsaken the legitimate stage almost with the inception of motion pictures. Accompanying the release of "Broadway Broke" is one of the most complete lists of accessories ever compiled. Elaborate posters and window cards tell the story in most effective art work. The lobby displays are more lavish than usual. The press book is serviceable and complete. A Broadway picture puzzle is one of the novelties among the accessories. There also are a music cue and a trailer gratis.

"Merry Go Round" Will Excel, Says Laemmle

"'Merry Go Round' will break every record for popularity ever established in the film industry," states Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation. He bases his opinion on the unusual booking of the big feature and on the fact it is being rebooked by many exhibitors, although it is still in the first twelve weeks of its run.

Mr. Laemmle compared "Merry Go Round" with "The Storm," another Universal picture, which is boosted as the most widely shown ever released. Today more than 8,000 exhibitors have shown "The Storm" and Universal exchanges report it still is being booked to an appreciable extent. "The Storm" is less than two years old. "Merry Go Round," in its twelfth week after release date, is far ahead of "The Storm" in its bookings, and promises to go far beyond the former picture in the number and extent of its screenings.

"I am satisfied that more exhibitors in the United States and Canada booked and played 'The Storm' than ever played any other picture," said the Universal chief. "But I am dead sure from present indications that even the record set up by 'The Storm' will be shattered by 'Merry Go Round.'"

"Ponjola" Had Good Run in Manhattan

"Ponjola," Sam Rork's picturization of Cynthia Stockley's novel, which is a current First National release, finished its run at the New York Strand on November 24 after a week of big business. The picture duplicated the success it achieved when it played in San Francisco, Detroit, Chicago and Los Angeles.

The New York Mail called the picture "a drama that reaches the heights of emotional intensity in a logical manner." New York Times: "The story is equipped with good suspense and is compelling. Anna Q. Nilsson is especially effective when she covers her masquerading clothes with a cape taken from another woman in order to make Druro think that Gay Lypiatt still loves him."

The Evening Telegram: "Director Donald Crisp has drawn every ounce of entertainment out of the original story, and has even supplemented it with some valuable touches of his own. With Miss Nilsson is presented a fine cast." The Sun and Globe: "'Ponjola' packed the house at the Strand yesterday with one of the largest crowds we have seen there."

World Premiere of "The Wanters"

The Garden Theatre in Paterson, N. J., was the scene of the world's premiere of "The Wanters," John M. Stahl's latest production for First National distribution, recently. Like its predecessor, "The Dangerous Age," this picture brought unprecedented crowds to the Garden. It features Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis.

Two Warner Films Soon Coming to Broadway

Warner Brothers have two Broadway premieres early in December. "Tiger Rose" will open at the Rivoli Theatre on December 2 and "Lucretia Lombard" will open at the Strand on December 9. It is said to be quite likely that both of these pictures will be held over, in which case Warner Brothers will have two of their Screen Classics playing first runs on Broadway at the same time.

Director Hugo Riesenfeld of the Rivoli, following a private screening of "Tiger Rose," was lavish in his praise of this production. He was particularly pleased by the brilliant performance given by Lenore Ulric. Mr. Riesenfeld also spoke in highest terms of the direction of Sidney Franklin in this picture.

At the Strand, Joseph Plunkett is very enthusiastic about "Lucretia Lombard," a story of flaming passion, produced by Harry Rapf, in which Kathleen Norris' famous novel of the same title has been adapted to the screen. He believes that this picture will make a tremendous hit with Broadway audiences, and is planning special presentation.

Warner Brothers have adopted a unique method in releasing "Lucretia Lombard." The innovation consists in releasing the picture under two titles and giving exhibitors a choice of either. The original title reads "Lucretia Lombard, a story of flaming passion." The extra title reads, "Flaming Passion, from the novel, 'Lucretia Lombard.'" Exhibitors can thus decide which title will make the greater appeal in their respective towns and use that one.

"Lucretia Lombard" was directed by Jack Conway and features Irene Rich and Monte Blue. The supporting cast includes Marc McDermott, Norma Shearer, Alec B. Francis, John Roche and others.

New Company to Star Baby Priscilla Moran

Priscilla Moran Productions were incorporated this week to star Priscilla Moran, the five-year-old child actress, who became nationally known over a year ago when Jackie Coogan's parents took her to live with them upon the death of her mother and illness of her father. She was not legally adopted and is now with her father.

A year's lease for stage and office space has been signed with the Hollywood Studios and a complete new unit building is being erected for the offices.

Millarde Webb, for the past five years associated with Sidney Franklin as co-director and production manager, is president of the new company and will direct the productions. Leo Moran, the child's father, is vice-president. Ollie May Baker, with Charles Chaplin and Jackie Coogan for past four years as financial secretary, is secretary and business manager.

Feature length pictures are planned to star the little girl.

As Accuracy Measure, Carroll Enlists Denver's Historians

Frank J. Carroll, who is now in Denver, Colorado, making preparations for the production of "The Birth of the West" has enlisted the aid and support of numerous prominent Denver citizens and authorities on pioneer days in the West.

Officials of the Colorado library and the state historical societies are working closely with the picture producer to insure the utmost accuracy in depiction of details in connection with the story. "The Birth of the West" is the initial production of the Colorado Motion Picture Corporation and the sponsors declare it their intention to see that the picture is a true record of pioneer history aside from its value as picture entertainment.

Discussing the details of preparation in connection with the picture Mr. Carroll said:

"It is one thing to make what the industry calls a 'Western' production on a studio lot and with reckless disregard of accuracy, and another thing to stage a picture that you will not be ashamed to show to men who really know the birth days of their great country.

"And it is the latter kind that the present day demands. The time is past when an author or director can take any liberties he desires with history. The class of patrons and critics attending the picture theatre of today make exacting demands—and they must be met.

"That is the public's side. For another, think of the money we spend nowadays compared with only four and five years ago. Well, when you get into hundreds of thousand of dollars isn't it only good sense to see that the job is done right? It is hard work digging into history, hunting up individuals who have a first hand memory of the early days, searching for properties that have actually played a part in such action as your story depicts—but it is all worth it.

"I will say it is quite a bit different from the old days though. Then, as soon as we had a story we could start to work. But what a difference now. Here I have spent weeks in research and travel solely on the task of preparation. But the real difference is that when we are ready to start under this method we will do it right. And that is the chief requisite."

Starts on Tour of Inspection

Henry Ginsberg, general sales manager for Preferred Pictures Corporation, has left New York on a tour that will take him to each of the twenty-eight Preferred exchanges in the United States.

The object of Mr. Ginsberg's trip is to aid the exchanges and salesmen in the sales and exploitation drive that Preferred is putting back of "The Virginian" and "Maytime," both of which are just being released. While in Los Angeles, Mr. Ginsberg will confer with B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures, regarding the new schedule for the coming year.

First National Annual Sales Drive Set for All January

Under the guilding hand of E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will start its annual sales drive on the first day of the New Year. The entire month of January will be devoted to the campaign and it is planned to make "First National Month" of 1924 the biggest and most effective sales effort ever conducted by the company.

"For a prosperous New Year book First National first" is the slogan which will prevail throughout the industry during the month of January. Preparations for the campaign have been in progress over a period of many weeks, special accessories including slides, banners and one-sheets are ready, and a publicity drive has been waged through the photoplay columns of the leading newspapers.

"First National Month" will present to the industry five new First National pictures. They are: "Boy of Mine," A. K. McDonald production from the story by Booth Tarkington; "Black Oxen," Frank Lloyd's production of Gertrude Atherton's novel, featuring Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle; "The Song of Love," the newest Norma Talmadge picture; "The Eternal City," Samuel Goldwyn's independently produced picturization of the Sir Hall Caine novel, directed by George Fitzmaurice with a featured cast; and "The Swamp Angel," presenting Colleen Moore.

Although only the opening guns of the drive have sounded over the industry's horizon, First National franchise holders are responding. Play dates on all these five pictures are pouring in and it is probable that each of the five will set unusual records in the number of simultaneous play dates throughout the country.

Music and "Maytime"

Preferred Pictures Corporation has arranged a profitable song tie-up for exhibitors who will book Gasnier's production, "Maytime." G. Schirmer, Inc., publishers of the music score that accompanied the stage presentation of Rida Johnson Young's play, have gotten out a special photoplay edition of the "Sweetheart" song.

This new edition, carrying illustrations from the film production, is designed for special music store tie-ups to be made in co-operation with Schirmer's twenty-two branch offices.

To Direct Again

Al Ray, cousin of Charles Ray, who has been in the scenario department of the Jack White-Mermaid forces, will do his first directing in four years when he starts production on Cameo Comedies, for release through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Wildman Made Head

Truly B. Wildman, Kansas City branch manager of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, was recently elected president of the Kansas City Flm Board of Trade.

"Mailman" Given Gala Los Angeles Premiere

Emory Johnson's production, "The Mailman," dramatizing the lives of United States postal workers and projecting one of the biggest exploitation tie-ups in the annals of the film industry, had its world's premiere Saturday, November 17, at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles.

The opening was a gala occasion, the mail workers' band of sixty pieces serenading the postmaster of the city, P. P. O'Brien, and other notables, including Mayor Cryer and Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O., who was among the interested spectators.

In connection with the premiere, a monster radio jollification was held by Los Angeles mail workers at the powerful broadcasting plant of the Los Angeles Times. Two million listeners scattered throughout the country heard the speeches of many prominent postal workers, as well as songs sung by postal employes and brief talks by Ralph Lewis, Johnnie Walker, Dave Kirby and others of the "Mailman" cast.

The postal workers of Los Angeles joined with F. B. O. and the West Coast theatres in making the opening of "The Mailman" a civic event of high importance.

Renews Contract

Olga Printzlau has renewed her contract with B. P. Schulberg to write screen adaptations exclusively for Preferred Pictures. She is now working on Edwin Balmer's story, "The Breath of Scandal," and will later do the script for several of the biggest stories on Preferred's program. Miss Printzlau has held a place of prominence among the best known screen writers since her first affiliation with William de Mille whose productions she adapted for several years. Her latest task for the Schulberg organization has been the screen version of Rida Johnson Young's play, "Maytime."

"Long Live the King" Has Unique Showing

In the little town of Ojai, nestling in the wooded hills of Ventura County in Southern California, Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," had a unique presentation last week.

Without the blare of the press agents' trumpets and with only gratitude, good will and prayers flowing into the Coogan coffers, the little Metro star appeared in person at the little village theatre and greeted the favored audience, while his picture was thrown on the screen.

It happens that Father John Moclair, who is stationed at Ojai, is a life long friend of Jack Coogan, Senior. The latter took this opportunity to show his respect and esteem for Father Moclair, a man of exceptional abilities and opportunities, who nevertheless chooses to stick to the little parish of Ojai. The proceeds of the sale of seats went without deduction of any expenses whatsoever to the needs of the Ojai parish. With Thanksgiving and Christmas rapidly approaching, it is hard to think of any greater gift that could be rendered in behalf of Jackie than the presentation of "Long Live the King" and his personal appearance which at once delighted and rendered practical aid.

"Long Live the King" will be released November 26.

Three New Goldwyns Due for Production

With the announcement that Rupert Hughes, author-director, had completed the continuity on his next picture-story, and would begin work upon it as soon as his cast is selected, Abraham Lehr, vice-president of the Goldwyn Company, spiked rumors that his studio would join the general shutdown. Hughes will film an original screen story, written and adapted by himself, to be called "True Steel." He now is considering players. Hughes recently completed editing of his last picture, to be released in the near future under the title, "Reno." It is a study of the divorce problems in America, produced on an elaborate scale with an all-star cast.

Victor Seastrom, Swedish director, who recently made his first picture in America for Goldwyn, also is preparing a story for the screen and will begin work as soon as the continuity is finished.

Two companies now are working for Goldwyn, one headed by Alan Crosland, filming Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," the others under the direction of Emmett Flynn, making "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model."

Still a third Goldwyn unit is to begin production in the near future, when June Mathis and Charles Brabin start "Ben-Hur," the immortal Lew Wallace story, which he will make in Italy. The director is now in Italy with his technical staff, and Miss Mathis will leave soon.

Erich von Stroheim's "Greed," from Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," is being titled, while Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," King Vidor's "Wild Oranges," from Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, and Rupert Hughes' "Reno" are completed and awaiting release.

"The Virginian" Scores Triumph on West Coast

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred picture, "The Virginian," has just closed two more successful first run engagements, at the Granada in San Francisco and at the Colorado in Denver. The West Coast premiere at the Granada brought tremendous business to that house, according to telegraphic word received from the manager. In Denver, "The Virginian" set a new box-office record for the Colorado Theatre. Moreover, the local press proclaimed it as one of the thoroughly worth while pictures of the season.

The Denver Post said: "It has plenty of blood and thunder to keep the most blasé theatregoer breathing hard, yet the story is told without unnecessary posturing and gives the effect of being a true picture of the old hair-raising days. Has abundant humor and a love story which gives relief whenever the excitement threatens to come in too big doses."

The Denver Times commented: "The plot is along the lines of the typical western picture but the directing and acting are both on a high level. Excitement prevails but there is an entertaining love story in which Kenneth Harlan and Florence Vidor are the principals."

Chicago Critics Laud Big Universal Picture

Chicago film critics, recently reviewing the Chicago opening of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in the Harris Theatre, waxed as enthusiastic over the big Universal spectacle drama as their New York brethren. They unite in characterizing the picture as a "screen masterpiece" and Chaney's work as the "greatest screen characterization ever done."

The following excerpts from Chicago reviews indicate the high praise meted out to the big Victor Hugo adaptation. The Chicago Evening American said: "Chaney has given a truly marvelous characterization, which, if not imperishable, is astonishingly durable. Director Wallace Worsley has done a rare piece of work. 'The Hunchback' is a photo-drama masterpiece."

The Chicago Daily Journal, wrote as follows: "The claims for greatness lie in the hands of Lon Chaney, whose mind must surely have borne a spectre for his work as the hunchback. With Rabelaisian power, he makes a study of the grotesque, which is the greatest the screen has given."

The Journal of Commerce said: "Here is a picture that is worthy of minute attention, for it has been screened so carefully, it measures up so fully to one's expectations, that it comes near occupying a place apart."

The Chicago Evening Post, also hailed the picture as remarkable, in the following terms: "One more has been added to the truly great gigantic spectacular productions with the completing of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' Victor Hugo's pulsating story has been vividly transplanted to the screen in a lavish manner which will call forth your whole hearted admiration even while you shudder."

"Innocence" Has Been Completed by C. B. C.

Production has been completed by Harry Cohn, producer for C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, of that company's newest feature, "Innocence," in which Anna Q. Nilsson heads an all-star cast, it is announced this week.

The production is a picturization of Lewis Allen Browne's famous magazine story, "Circumstances Alter Divorce Cases." Edward J. LeSaint, who directed many other C. B. C. successes, directed "Innocence" also.

The story is said to be especially timely in that it embodies in the working out of its theme a strong plea against conviction on circumstantial evidence—a woman's honor and future happiness being involved. It is said to have aroused much enthusiasm at a special showing on the Coast to which were invited many well known lawyers and several prominent judges.

Harry Cohn expresses his opinion that it is the biggest C. B. C. production yet made. Earl Foxe, Wilfred Lucas, Marion Harlan, Freeman Wood, Kate Lester, William Scott, Jessie Arnold and Vera Lewis are in the cast which supports Anna Q. Nilsson.

Davies Film Grosses $123,110 at Capitol

The engagement of Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" was brought to a close last Saturday night at the Capitol Theatre, New York, after two weeks of the most sensational success that has been recorded in the history of that theatre. During its first two weeks at popular prices, it has attracted 202,682 persons, who paid $123,110 to see it.

When it is considered that "Little Old New York" earlier in the season had a run of twelve capacity weeks at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, the tremendous appeal that the picture has for New Yorkers is a fact of which the Cosmopolitan Corporation may well be proud.

"Little Old New York" is now in its thirteenth week at the Empire Theatre, London. It is in its seventh crowded week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago. Reports from the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, where it opened last Saturday, state that house records were broken there Saturday and Sunday. In its first week at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, it established records in receipts and attendance.

Indefinite engagements started this week in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Milwaukee, Detroit, St. Louis and Seattle.

Big Exploitation Force Behind "Big Brother"

When Allan Dwan's Paramount production, "Big Brother," which was adapted from Rex Beach's story and features Tom Moore, Edith Roberts and Raymond Hatton, reaches the screens of the country the latter part of December, it will have behind it as a mighty exploitation force the combined power of all the organizations, both national and local, allied with the Big Brother Movement.

This work involves the co-operation of local organizations of the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Civitan Clubs; Elks, Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A., B'nai Brith, etc., to the number of more than four thousand, and the promotion of Big Brother Nights in every community where the picture is shown.

This is made possible by the active and enthusiastic co-operation of the Big Brother Movement, Inc., through its secretary, Rowland C. Sheldon, who is now at work lining up the 143 local Big Brother committees in the United States and Canada which are directly allied with the central organization.

Universal Xmas Special Includes Six Good Ones

Universal is putting out six pictures during December, two of which are Universal Jewel productions.

In the order of their release they are: "The Darling of New York," a Universal Jewel action drama in which Baby Peggy is starred; "The Near Lady," a comedy starring Gladys Walton; "White Tiger," Priscilla Dean's latest Jewel production; "The Red Warning," a Jack Hoxie picture; "His Mystery Girl," starring Herbert Rawlinson, and "Pure Grit," featuring Roy Stewart.

"The Darling of New York" is Baby Peggy's first feature length picture. It is said to be one of her best bets and shows her in a role entirely new to that to which she has been accustomed.

"Hunchback" Makes Big Hit in London

Reports to the Universal home office from London indicate that "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has taken London by storm, and is hailed by critics and public in the British metropolis as a great picture and worthy of hearty support. It opened last week.

The London presentation was in the Empire Theatre, which Universal obtained for a run of considerable duration. The opening, according to cablegrams, was one of the most outstanding premieres ever held in Great Britain. The first night audience was composed mostly of distinguished Britishers, including an unusual representation from royal circles, and many from the nobility.

The theatre was packed for the opening. The presentation followed along the lines set by the world's premiere in the Astor Theatre, New York City. Marc Lachmann, Universal exploiteer, went from New York to London especially to present "The Hunchback."

Following the initial screening, the London first-nighters gave the picture a remarkable ovation.

Warners Reunited as Jack Arrives in East

Jack L. Warner reached New York this week from the West Coast studios, bringing with him Ernst Lubitsch, the famous producer; his wife, Eric Locke; Hans Kraely, special writer, and Frank Cassidy, exploitation expert. Mr. Warner brought with him several important prints to be released on Broadway in the near future.

His arrival here constitutes the first reunion of the four Warner Brothers in several years, as one or two members of the firm have generally remained on the West Coast, in charge of production, while the others stayed in the East. His visit is expected to be of short duration and several pressing production problems once disposed of, and a conference held on new material which the Warners are considering, he will return to his post as production manager of the West Coast studios.

Mr. Cassidy is remembered for his feat in piloting the Warner truck, advertising the Seven Classics for 1922-23, on its transcontinental trip from New York to Hollywood, when he visited exhibitors and effected excellent publicity. He will join the Warners' eastern publicity department.

Metro Will Release "Fashion Row" Dec. 3

Mae Murray's newest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," will be released December 3. Arrangements are now under way to give it an elaborate Broadway presentation after which it will have a general release throughout the country.

"Fashion Row" reveals a wealth of striking gowns, some of which, it is said, were imported especially for this production from the shops of Paris and others were made after designs and sketches made by Miss Murray. The picture will also reveal a series of dances.

"Fashion Row" was written for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin. It was photographed by Oliver Marsh. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman, general manager.

Mrs. Crawford Opens Casting Studios

Mrs. O. T. Crawford, wife of the late O. T. Crawford, St. Louis theatrical magnate, has opened the United Casting Studios at 262 West 99th street, New York City, which is only a temporary address. She will handle publicity, plays and scenarios, and the casting of pictures and legitimate productions.

"The Arizona Express" Started on the Coast

The days of the Pony Express, early Indian uprisings and the building of the first railroad across the United States to the Pacific Coast form the colorful historical background for Lincoln J. Carter's famous melodrama, "The Arizona Express," which has just been started at the William Fox West Coast Studios. Carter himself who has been called the "father of the melodrama" in America, is assisting in transferring his stage success to the screen.

Tom Buckingham is directing the screen version of "The Arizona Express." The following cast has been selected to portray the characters who always used to bring the gallery gods to their feet in the days of the play's stage career: Pauline Starke, Evelyn Brent, Anne Cornwall, Harold Goodwyn, David Butler, Francis MacDonald, Frank Beal and William Humphrey.

Burton King Starts Production

With a production now being released by the Film Booking Offices under the title of "The Fair Cheat," starring Dorothy MacKaill, Edmund Breese and Wilfred Lytell, Burton King announces this week that work will be started on his next series of eight pictures of feature length December 1.

The title of the first production has not been announced but the theme deals with blood transfusion and has a country doctor as its principal character. The technical scenes dealing with the actual transfusion will be made under the supervision of the Rockefeller Institute.

Warner Brothers Finish Belasco Play "Daddies"

Warner Brothers announce the completion of "Daddies," the screen version of the David Belasco stage success of the same name. This is the third Belasco play produced by Warner Brothers this year.

"Daddies" boasts a fine cast. Mae Marsh, Harry Myers and Claude Gillingwater are starred. Others are: Willard Lewis, Claire Adams, Crauford Kent, Otto Hoffman, Boyce Combe, Georgia Woodthorpe, Milly Davenport, Priscilla Dean Moran, King Evers and the De Briac twins.

The picture was made under the direction of William Seiter, with Tenny Wright and Lewis Milestone assisting. John Stumar was behind the camera.

"Shadows of Paris" Is Completed

"Shadows of Paris," Pola Negri's fourth American picture, has been completed at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. Herbert Brenon, who produced the picture, began work September 20 and finished in eight weeks, which was the exact scheduled time.

The story of "Shadows of Paris" was taken from the French play, "Mon Homme." It had a remarkable run in Paris and the French provinces.

Keith Books "The Virginian"

The United Booking Offices have contracted for B. P. Schulberg's picturization of "The Virginian," by Owen Wister, to be shown in eighty-one Keith, Moss and Proctor houses throughout Greater New York. This circuit will have immediate play dates on the production, the first of which will be a week's engagement at Moss's Broadway Theatre, beginning November 26th.

Niblo Finishes New Metro Picture

Fred Niblo has completed his newest production, "Thy Name Is Woman," It is now being assembled and edited and should be in the East for pre-viewing some time during the next several weeks. Ramon Novarro played one of the big roles in this picture.

Timely News Story Boosts Picture

The Ashland Theatre at Ashland, Oregon, took advantage of a news story and booked "Loyal Lives," the Whitman Bennett production based on the life of United States post office employes. A mail train was held up in the Siskiyou Mountains south of Ashland.

The newspaper reports showed the local robbery to be almost identical in method with that employed in the picture, which was shown while the news of the hold-up was still fresh in the public mind. The post office authorities and mail carriers co-operated in exploiting the picture.

Block Resigns from Famous Players

Ralph Block, former New York dramatic critic, has resigned his position as editor and supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky. Block is at present negotiating with a prominent producer to direct a number of feature productions.

Prior to his association with Famous Players, Block was in turn director of publicity and editorial director for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Barthelmess Picture Progressing

The construction of the big cottage set in John S. Robertson's production of "The Enchanted Cottage," starring Richard Barthelmess, was completed at Inspiration Studio in Fort Lee, last week.

Work on the picture, which is a First National release, is progressing rapidly and it is expected that the film will be completed by the first of the year.

Considering Two Witwer Series

Two Witwer series are under consideration for early filming by Mal St. Clair, director, who recently rejoined the F. B. O. production forces after a brief excursion into features with Wesley Barry.

One series is "Alex the Great." The other is "The Telephone Girl."

Begins Tenth Year as Art Department Head

Vincent Trotta, pioneer art manager of the motion picture industry, has just entered upon his tenth year as head of the art department of Paramount. One of the real veterans of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, Mr. Trotta began his term of continuous service even before the formation of that company, for it was with the old Paramount Pictures Corporation that he first assumed the duties of his present position, when the Paramount headquarters were in the World Tower building in West 40th street.

A year previous to his association with Paramount Mr. Trotta had organized for the Gaumont Company the first art department in the industry. His work with Gaumont was largely confined to posters. His connection with Paramount, where he assumed charge of all the art work on the trade and newspaper advertising, heralds, booklets and other advertising accessories, marked the beginning of the use of the modern art lay-outs in motion picture advertising and he was also one of the pioneers in the creation of colored inserts in trade paper advertising.

Mr. Trotta's department is not only said to be the largest in the motion picture industry but it is one of the largest in any line of commercial business outside the art specialty houses and some of the leading advertising agencies and engraving concerns. An aggregate of between seventy-five and one hundred men have worked under his direct supervision since the department was organized and the personnel averages between ten and fifteen artists, including apprentices. All of the work is supervised by Mr. Trotta himself and many graduates of the so-called Trotta school are now in charge of art departments of motion picture companies and in other branches of the business.

The Paramount advertising department's colored inserts on the special seasonal announcements in the trade papers have long been looked upon as models of advertising art and never fail to draw favorable editorial comment, not only in the picture trade publications themselves but in the advertising and printing trade journals. The same is true of the direct-by-mail booklets, one of which issued in connection with the Paramount "First Forty-one" and entitled "Your Contract for Paramount Pictures," won second prize against hundreds of entries in a contest at the International Advertising Exposition at Springfield, Mass., for the best piece of direct-by-mail advertising submitted.

Fox Releases for the Week of December 2

"The Net," the latest William Fox special production, two star series pictures and one Sunshine Comedy are announced for release the week of December 2 by Fox Film Corporation. "Johnny's Swordfish," an Educational Entertainment, will be released December 9.

"The Net" is an emotional drama of mystery and thrills adapted from the book and play by Maravene Thompson. J. Gordon Edwards directed. Barbara Castleton, Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe are the three principals in the notable cast.

"Cupid's Fireman" is the Charles Jones feature on this week's release. It is adapted from the Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," and presents Jones in a series of dramatic situations behind the footlights. William Wellman directed the picture.

Life in the interesting and dramatic days of 1849 in the South and West is pictured in Dustin Farnum's latest starring picture, "Kentucky Days." Margaret Fielding, who plays Mabel in "If Winter Comes," Bruce Gordon and William DeVaull are the principals in the cast.

The Sunshine Comedy on this week's release is "The Income Tax Collector."

Pickford—Fairbanks Studios Hum with Work

Great activity is going on at the Pickford-Fairbanks and Chaplin studios.

Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," is reported as being nearly one-half under way, while Marshal Neilan, the director, is making great progress on the exterior scenes surrounding Haddon Hall.

Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad" is more than three-fourth completed. The biggest mob scenes are scheduled for shooting this week. "The Thief of Bagdad," Mr. Fairbanks asserts, will show some of his greatest screen work, both dramatically as well as from the athletic standpoint.

Charles Chaplin, the creator of "A Woman of Paris," has gone into seclusion and is preparing the story for his next picture which, his associates say, will be a rip-snorting comedy of possibly not more than three reels.

Goldwyn Spectacle Goes Into Capitol

Goldwyn's Emmett Flynn production, "In the Palace of the King," a dramatic motion picture spectacle directed by Emmett Flynn and based upon F. Marion Crawford's popular novel, will be screened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, next week. This picture is Goldwyn's biggest contribution to the costume-spectacle films. In the beauty of settings and photography and excellence of acting and directing it ranks among the year's best offerings.

June Mathis made the adaptation and has kept the spectacular subservient to the very human and highly emotional drama in which the King of Spain, his brother, one of his generals and the latter's two daughters are the principal actors. Filming this story was a tremendous and costly undertaking, it is stated, involving the construction of a palace 280 feet high and 300 feet long and one of the greatest sets yet constructed for motion pictures.

Blanche Sweet heads the cast as Dolores and others are Edmund Lowe, Pauline Starke, Sam de Grasse, Hobart Bosworth, Aileen Pringle, William V. Mong and Lucient Littlefield.

"Call of the Wild" Cut to Six Reels

In line with his recent pronouncement in favor of a maximum of six reels for feature productions, Hal Roach has cut "The Call of the Wild" from seven to six reels.

This production was adapted from Jack London's famous dog story of the same title and made under the direction of Fred Jackman. The picture was released by Pathe on September 23 and has since been played by leading first-run houses throughout the country.

Continues Run

The Preferred picture, "The Virginian," continues its successful run. Max Allen, manager of the Allen Theatre, Windsor, Ontario, wired B. P. Schulberg: "Absolutely broke all records."

Will Film "The Yoke"

Announcement comes from the Warner Brothers home office that screen rights have been procured to "The Yoke," Hubert Wales' novel.

This story is to be adapted to the screen by Warner scenarists for production by Harry Rapf.

Kiwanis Club Endorses "Michael O'Halloran"

That the Kiwanis Club endorsement of "Michael O'Halloran," the screen version of Gene Stratton-Porter's popular novel, is proving a boon to exhibitors, is evidenced by the marked increase in bookings on this picture reported by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. G. A. Falkner, branch manager for Hodkinson at Washington, D. C., reports private advance reviews of "Michael O'Halloran" by the Kiwanis Club of Richmond, Va., the Kiwanis Club of Norfolk, Va., and the Baltimore, Md., Kiwanis Club. The Columbus, Ohio, Kiwanis Club has also asked permission to review "Michael O'Halloran" with the view of co-operating with the exhibitor in his showing at Columbus. From the Lufkin Chamber of Commerce, Lufkin, Texas, comes a request to Hodkinson that "Michael O'Halloran" be given a special showing at the first-run house there. Reports from the Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Ill., state that the Quincy Kiwanis Club will co-operate with the Orpheum in its showing of the picture.

Many new exploitation aids are now in course of preparation by Hodkinson on "Michael O'Halloran," among them a special broadside showing the various Kiwanis tie-ups now in operation, and containing many novel and attractive exploitation stunts. These will be available for the exhibitor at an early date.

"Grit" Has Premiere at Greenwich, Conn.

Crowds which taxed the capacity of the Greenwich, Conn., theatre at three performances on Wednesday, witnessed the world premiere presentation of the Film Guild feature production, "Grit," starring Glen Hunter, scheduled for early January release through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Grit" is from an original screen story by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Clara Bow, Osgood Perkins, Dore Davidson are also members of the cast.

"Grit" is the fourth of the Film Guild productions with Glenn Hunter to be distributed through Hodkinson.

Hodkinson to Distribute Four Kirkwood—Lila Lee Features

What is regarded in film circles as one of the most important feature distribution contracts entered into in many months, is the announcement from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that it has just closed with a producing unit operating at the Thomas H. Ince studios, for four super-features, co-starring James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, two of screendom's most popular favorites.

The first of these features, bearing the title of "The Painted Woman," has been virtually completed, and will be ready for preshowing shortly after the first of the year.

James Kirkwood and Lila Lee each has won individual fame in the field of the silent drama.

The popularity of James Kirkwood, one of the outstanding leading men of the screen, has been growing with leaps and bounds, and has been made more secure by his two latest pictures, "Human Wreckage" and "Ponjola," his current feature now playing the leading first run theatres. Mr. Kirkwood has recently played in productions of the following companies: Goldwyn, Fox, Famous Players and Associated First National. Some of his best known productions include "The Struggle Everlasting," "In the Heart of a Fool," "The Scoffer," "Man—Woman—Marriage," and "Bob Hampton of Placer."

In addition to his prestige as a screen luminary, James Kirkwood was one of the foremost actors of the legitimate stage, with which he was identified for upwards of eighteen years. His most recent triumph was with Channing Pollock's much-talked-of play, "The Fool."

Lila Lee, until recently a Paramount star, first came into the public eye at the age of ten, when as "Cuddles" she made her stage debut in a Gus Edwards Revue. Joining Famous Players, her initial vehicle was "A Daughter of the Wolf." Her reputation grew rapidly and her work drew much favorable comment in such productions as "Male and Female," "The Prince Chap," "Heart of Youth," "Midsummer Madness," "The Charm School," "The Easy Road" and "Dollar-a-Year Man." For some time she was leading woman for Thomas Meighan, their last productions being "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Homeward Bound" and "Woman-Proof," the latter just recently released. She played the leading female part opposite Rodolph Valentino in Blasco Ibanez's production of "Blood and Sand."

"The Kirkwood-Lee co-star productions will be made at the Thos. H. Ince studios in Culver City, California, and will be super-features in the fullest sense of the word," W. W. Hodkinson states. "These features, following our recent announcement of the Harry Carey series, now in production, is an earnest indication to the trade of our intention to furnish the exhibitors with worth-while pictures from the best independent sources during the coming year."

SIGNED TO APPEAR IN HODKINSON RELEASES
James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, who will star in a series of four pictures for distribution by W. W. Hodkinson, Inc.

New Picture Titled "Boy of Mine"

The new Booth Tarkington story, produced by J. K. McDonald for First National distribution, will be issued under the title of "Boy of Mine." The picture has had two working titles, "Old Fathers and Young Sons" and "Misunderstood."

McDonald is the producer of "Penrod and Sam," the First National Picture which created a sensation when released several months ago.

Jones in New Film

"Not a Drum Was Heard," a story by Ben Ames Williams, has been selected as the next Fox vehicle for Charles Jones. William Wellman is directing.

Franklin Seeking Big Film Plots

Producer-Director Sidney Franklin is making the rounds of New York for literary material for his forthcoming productions under the Warner Brothers banner. Scenarist Paul Bern accompanies Mr. Franklin and both are looking over all of the available dramatic material along Broadway.

It is understood that a number of popular plays and stories have been purchased, but no definite announcements can be made yet in this regard until matters pertaining to copyrights can be settled.

Callaghan-Amsterdam Transaction

Andrew J. Callaghan, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, closed a deal with Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, for the Fred Thomson series of six Western pictures for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

The deal includes that part of Pennsylvania east of and not including counties of Potter, Clinton, Center, Mifflin, Huntington and Fulton; that part of New Jersey south of and including Burlington and Ocean counties and city of Trenton in Mercer County; entire State of Delaware.

Jackie Coogan Fills Holiday Need

That First National's Jackie Coogan pictures are perennial holiday favorites among exhibitors and public is again proved by the requests for such productions as "Oliver Twist," "My Boy," "Trouble," "Daddy" and his latest release, "Circus Days," for bookings during the forthcoming Christmas season.

According to First National exchanges, exhibitors find that the holiday period, primarily belonging to the children, just as surely belongs to the children's favorite screen player.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Secrets of Life" Given Extensive Article in Scientific Magazine

Popular Science Monthly, a magazine which publishes news regarding the latest scientific inventions and other items of scientific nature written in non-scientific language, and which is read by over a million people, has devoted two pages of reading matter and photographs to a write-up on the Louis Tolhurst microscopic camera and cool light process of photography and to the "Secrets of Life" series of microscopic subjects released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

This closely follows a three-page article on these interesting subjects published in the December issue of the Motion Picture Magazine, one of the largest and most popular of the "fan" publications and which has a tremendous national circulation.

Editors of large newspapers and magazines are giving exceptional publicity to this series of pictures, hailing them as something new to the screen, and as the pioneers in a new land of promise for the motion picture theatre-goer.

Previous attempts to market subjects of a scientific nature have failed, mainly because the subjects lacked that human interest quality which is so necessary to carry the appeal to picture audiences. It is because the "Secrets of Life" series is built primarily to entertain and to instruct in the form of entertainment, that these pictures have met with success both in theatres and in the public prints.

The series has not only gained the hearty endorsement of scientists at the American Museum of Natural History as well as prominent educators throughout the country, but also has won the approval and recommendation of the owners of large representative theatres playing the series.

Will Rogers in "Uncensored Movies" Prominent on Pathe's Dec. 9 List

Prominent in the list of short subjects arranged for release by Pathe, the week of December 9, is "Uncensored Movies," the third of a series of two-reel comedies starring Will Rogers, produced by Hal Roach.

Once again Will Rogers offers to the screen audiences a delightful treat of original humor and wit. In this subject, Rogers engages in a line of entertainment for which he has already become famous on the stage. In his own inimitable way the comedian caricatures such well-known players as "Bill" Hart, Tom Mix and Rudolph Valentino. There are satirical allusions, charming and unoffensive in force, to the prowess of DeMille, Griffith and Fairbanks in their respective fields; and also some amusing sidelights on that necessary ingredient to every screen success—the human touch. In "Uncensored Movies," Pathe promises an attraction of a decidedly novel and distinctive character.

"Why Elephants Leave Home" is a two-reel actionful adventure picture, depicting for the first time on the screen the perils and thrills experienced in the hunting, capturing and training of wild elephants.

"The Lava Crusher" is the title of Episode No. 5 of "Ruth of the Range," Ruth Roland's serial for Pathe.

Speed-up action, peppered with humor, makes "Scorching Sands," featuring Stan Laurel, one of the funniest of this Hal Roach series of one-reel laugh-provokers.

The current issue of Aesop's Film Fables series illustrates in a decidedly funny way how "The Best Man Wins."

Mark of Approval

Pointing to it as a distinctive mark of approval, Pathe announces that four series of "Our Gang" comedies, beginning with "Derby Day," have been booked by the Fenway Theatre in Boston. The Fenway is a first-run house and has been designated as a Paramount demonstration theatre in Boston. It is managed by S. Barrett McCormick, one of the country's leading showmen.

Review Board Praises "Secrets of Life"

The highest mark of approval has been placed upon Educational's new "Secrets of Life" series by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures in the selection of one of these single reel pictures for showing at the Town Hall, New York City, as an Exceptional Picture.

"The Spider," the third release in this series of microscopic subjects, produced by Principal Pictures Corporation with the new process perfected by Louis H. Tolhurst, was selected by the National Board to run in conjunction with "Anna Christie" at the showing given by the National Board Wednesday, November 28, before a selected audience.

Universal to Release Four Century Comedies in December

With four Century Comedies set for December release by Universal, a most successful year for Stern Brothers' organization will come to a close.

For December 5th Jack Earle's latest subject, "A Corn Fed Sleuth," will be released to theatres all over the country.

December 12th has been designated as the date of release for "My Pal," a comedy starring Pal the dog.

"Buckin' the Line," with Buddy Messinger, will be released nationally on the 19th of December. This is an ideal subject for this month, since it deals generally with football as played by the back-yard kids. A juvenile Army and Navy game is one of the outstanding features of this film.

"Hansel and Gretel," starring Baby Peggy, will conclude the year. In this delightful fairy tale Peggy portrays the part of winsome Gretel of age-old fame.

Big Circuit Books Rogers Series

West Coast Theatres Circuit has contracted for the entire series of two-reel Pathe comedies starring Will Rogers, for showing in over twenty cities in Southern California including Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and San Diego. The series includes thirteen subjects to be released one every four weeks, beginning with "Just Passin' Through," released October 14.

"You're Next" Is Latest Century

Al Herman's latest opus for Century Film Corporation, has been turned over to Universal for a release date. Instead of "Next Please," which was the original title of the story by David Bader, publicity representative of Stern Brothers, the comedy has been called "You're Next."

The action of the story is unusual. In a fight to win the same girl, one of the rivals opens an outdoor barber shop.

The story is carried to a fast and furious finish by Mr. Herman. Henry Murdock, William Irving and Helen Stocking, as well as Joe Bonner and Bernard Hyman, make up a cast of popular Century comedians.

"Go West" at Strand

Following the showing of "The Knockout" two weeks ago at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, another of the Hal Roach series of "Dippy Doo Dad" single-reel comedies for Pathe release was presented this week at the big Broadway house. The latest of this series of clever comedies with all-animal casts to be shown at the Strand is "Go West."

McCoy to Co-Star

Harry McCoy, whose work in Century Comedies has created considerable interest, has been elevated to co-stardom and with the youthful giant star, Jack Earle, will be featured as a team in six Century comedies. McCoy is a veteran of the screen, having appeared with Mack Sennett even before Chaplin.

Unique Distinction

At the request of the director of the National Father and Son movement, the National Committee for Better Films has drawn up a list of pictures that may be used in connection with National Father and Son Week. The Educational-Christie comedy, "Be Yourself," is said to be the only two-reel subject included in the list.

Two Titles Changed

Two title changes are announced by Century Comedies, the Buddy Messinger comedy, "Boys Will Be Boys," has been changed to "The Caddy" and "Own a Home," featuring Harry Sweet and the Follies Girls, will be known as "The Tourists."

Earle Film Finished

Century announces completion of "Keep Moving," starring Jack Earle, assisted by Harry McCoy and a cast of well-known players.

Books Another

Following the announcement that the new Paramount demonstration theatre in Boston has booked Pathe's "Our Gang" comedy series, comes word that the Fenway adds further to its program of Pathe bookings by signing up the Will Rogers comedy attraction, titled "Uncensored Movies."

Lewis Buys His Own Own Stories

Ralph Lewis, the F. B. O. star, has secured two stories for the first of his new series of Ralph Lewis productions.

Charles Kenyon made the adaptation, the title of which has not been decided upon.

"The Ghost City"

Universal Serial Features Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Two episodes of Universal's newest serial, "The Ghost City," shown for review indicate that it has a story of average serial strength with unusually thrilling and well-handled climaxes. It is a "western" with Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris in the featured roles and the opening chapters indicate that the story deals with a plot of a certain unknown clique to obtain money under threat of draining a reservoir on which the village depends.

Chapter one, "The Thundering Herd," gets away from what appears to be the main theme and deals with the attempt of the heroine to reach the scene of action in time to prevent foreclosure of a mortgage on her father's ranch. This introduces some good aeroplane scenes and ends with an exceptional thrill where a herd of cattle stampedes and the infuriated animals seem to pass directly over the hero and heroine and also the camera.

In the second chapter, "The Bulldogger," the reservoir theme again comes to the fore and the action introduces a final thrill where the villain, seizing important records, escapes on a motorcycle, followed by the hero on horseback. The hero jumps onto the machine which plunges over a cliff onto a ledge and thence into the reservoir below. This is an exceptionally well handled scene.

In addition to the featured players, there is a competent cast including Al Wilson, a stunt aviator of note.

Judging by the opening episodes, this serial should furnish entirely satisfactory entertainment for the average serial fan.—C. S. S.

"Universities of the World"

(Fox—Educational—One Reel)

Famous universities and colleges from different parts of the world are pictured in this exceptionally interesting group. Oxford, the University of Paris, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Vassar and some of the most celebrated state universities are included. Glimpses of their buildings, campuses and presidents afford entertaining subject matter. —M. K.

"Scorching Sands"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Stan Laurel's adventures on the desert where he is held by a hostile tribe provide a fair measure of fun in this Hal Roach comedy. He saves his head by agreeing to wed a foreign princess without beauty as an asset. But after various escapes he flees with a beautiful tourist, aided by a rather temperamental camel. It should be entertaining to most fans.—M. K.

'The Corn-Fed Sleuth'

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Jack Earle, the young Century giant, is featured in this comedy which is built of the familiar idea of a boob detective. The hero, a farm boy, learns by correspondence how to be a detective. Going to the city, he becomes the prey of a gang of crooks who use him to obtain his own brother-in-law's furniture. He succeeds, however, is getting it back. There are some amusing situations and it is a comedy of average audience appeal.—C. S. S.

"A Dark Horse"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Farmer Alfalfa's cider combined with the mule has such a terrific punch that the famous turf champions, dubbed Zev and Papyrus, have no chance after the mule joins the race. It turns out to be a dream but is highly amusing while it lasts. A good representative of Paul Terry's Fable series. —M. K.

'The Great Outdoors'

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the snappiest number of the "Spat Family" series yet released. The personalities of the three combatants, the woman, her husband and her brother, are exceptionally well pointed, and the situation, showing them trying to win a wager in the pine woods, where they are to live one week without servants, provides any number of amusing and some hilarious incidents. An excellent choice for any theatre.—M. K.

'Pathe Review No. 48'

(One Reel)

Modern methods of candy-making is a rather tempting study in this review. Other attractions are pictures of the peacock and his family; the grape gardens in Michigan, and tinted views of "The Valley of the Giants," in Crecy, France.—M. K.

"Join the Circus"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is plenty of action here, but nothing sufficiently new or clever to distinguish it. Snub Pollard and Paul Parrott are circus performers of the "ham" variety and their acrobatics, riding and chariot racing are a medium for most of the comic effects. The circus scenes have some appeal, but most of the number is ordinary.—M. K.

"Black and Blue"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A plot which is closely adhered to, good work on the part of the principals, headed by Jimmie Adams, rapid-fire action, much of which is of the knockabout type, keeps the spectator amused and makes this Christie comedy one which will thoroughly entertain the average patrons. The story is a farce, dealing with the attempts of a rival suitor to prevent the hero's marriage. He resorts to all sorts of devices, even to shaving the other fellow's head and staining him black.—C. S. S.

"A Matter of Policy"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This comedy is based on the oft-used idea of a man who tries to get hurt in order that he may collect accident insurance. It ends by his succeeding and finding out his policy is only a sample. Neely Edwards is the star and the manner in which he handles the situations will provide quite a number of laughs.—C. S. S.

"Exit Caesar"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

An amauteur theatrical performance in a rube town is broadly burlesqued in this Mermaid comedy, giving opportunities for a lot of slap-stick which will cause considerable amusement for the majority of spectators. As is often the case with comedies of this kind, the action gets away from the main idea, there is a fake diamond hunt and the familiar chase in which the villain gets covered with tar and feathers. While there are quite a number of amusing situations, it is not up to Jack White's best and lacks the originality which is so evident in many of his comedies.—C. S. S.

'Pathe Review No. 49'

(One Reel)

The picturesque is a strong element in this review which shows fantastic glimpses of sea gulls in flight; charming wax reproductions of life in the Arctic zone; difficult feats of mountain climbing in the Cumberland Mountains, England; and some particularly beautiful color scenes showing the ceremony of a Japanese girl taking religious vows.—M. K.

the hero is the head of the local post, and it is the legion that is shown as being responsible for the rescue of the boy and the bringing to justice of the guilty parties.

The playing up of the American Legion offering opportunities for tie-ups with that organization, and the wide publicity secured by the case on which the story is based, gives opportunities for attracting patronage and should be of great assistance to the exhibitor showing this picture.

The cast is composed largely of well-known players who acquit themselves creditably, including Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Bedford, J. P. McGowan, Clarence Geldert and Wade Boteler.

Story

Jim, while riding a freight trying to get back home, passes through a town, is arrested, sentenced to imprisonment, and under the convict leasing system is turned over with others to a lumber company and made to work in unsanitary surroundings in a cypress swamp where he becomes ill and notwithstanding his sickness is cruelly whipped by the company's whipping boss. His mother has sent money to pay his fine, but not getting a reply she comes from a distant state to the lumber camp. Forrest, head of the local American Legion post, seeking to abolish the use of the lash on convicts, helps her and they secure an order for Jim's release. Livingston, head of the company, seeking to destroy evidence that he has had Jim whipped, has the whipping boss set fire to the stockade in which the prisoners are chained. Forrest and the Legion boys save the prisoners. Jim, who has been spirited away by friends, is brought on the scene. Livingston and the whipping boss are sent to prison. Woodward, president of the company, wipes out the inhuman conditions in the camp. Forrest, who has saved Woodward's daughter from a convict, patches up the difficulty he had with the girl when he fought her father's treatment of convicts, and they become engaged. Jim finally regains his health.

PROJECTION

Making Good Bad

When, after an enormous expenditure of effort and money, a really high grade photoplay is finished, the director swells out his chest and hides not his admiration for his work under a bushel, or under anything else for that matter. The Cameraman ditto: the "Stars" ditto—several times and then some, while the producer—oh well, he blushingly (?) admits that the thing is not at all bad.

The production is projected before studio folks and friends in the screening room at the studio, or at office of the producer, and is pronounced good. It is next projected in a large theatre filled with invited guests. The applause is generous, since the production seems to be nearly all its boosters have claimed for it—I say "nearly all," because nothing human could possibly quite equal the claims of the dyed-in-the-wool booster. To all who have seen it up to this time, however, including the somewhat critical audience assembled in the theatre, it has seemed worthy of enthusiastic praise.

It is now "released," and shortly is shown in a theatre near the home of friends with whom the director is stopping for a week end, whereupon the director, with vest buttons popping with the strain and hat band as taut as a fiddle string, herds the aforesaid friends into the theatre to view the wonderful "child of his brain."

It Is Wonderful

And he finds it to be indeed wonderful. For an hour and a half he squints at the screen wrathfully, while his friends look at him curiously, wondering why he was so insistent upon them visiting the theatre. For what they saw was at times a bit hard to see at all; also, as a whole it did a bit of a shimmy, with an occasional time when a whole row of stone and brick buildings would jump bodily into the air a few inches, settling down with an inaudible slam; also there were two breaks in the film, with complete stoppage of the show each time.

At regular intervals the screen was decorated with "End Part One," "End Part Two," etc. The actors did not move as they had moved at the studio, but with unnaturally quick, jerky steps. They all appeared to be in a terrific hurry about something. A horse, which the director had caused to trot through a scene at carefully calculated speed, went through as though it had swallowed a stick of dynamite and expected it to go off real soon. At regularly recurring intervals flashing spots of white were seen, where some enterprising genius punched from one to a dozen holes in the end of each reel of film to save him the burden of having to watch the action for a change-over cue; also recurring marks where the owner of the film had rammed a punch, composed of well up to a hundred small holes, through from two to three frames, in order that the said owner (and the audience) might know who the film belonged to.

There are whole scenes which have a crazy-quilt, mottled appearance, due to oil thrown on the film from the moving parts of an over-oiled projector. As to focus, the picture is real sharp in the center only, and the blacks in the lower portion of the screen are light gray, because enterprising tooters of wind instruments and wielders of rosined bows just MUST have sixteen-candle-power lights in order to see black notes on white paper not more than eighteen inches from their liquid-brown soul windows.

Can good be bad? There seems to be but one reply, Viz: in the case of a photoplay it certainly can, and very often is.

The possible faults in the projection of a photoplay before an audience is not in the least overdrawn in the foregoing, except that only in the worst cases do we find all the faults spoken of present in any one show. To see a goodly number of them is, however, a very common occurrence.

When I attend a motion picture theatre it is usually my custom to jot down a record of the projection faults observed. September 10th, according to my note book, I attended a certain theatre in Mt. Vernon, New York, concerning which I find the following record: Discoloration of light at bottom, gradually getting worse until corrected in one and a half minutes; "End Part One" showed for few frames; constant movement of picture as a whole—worse on one projector than on other—probably due to badly worn intermittent sprocket or movement, or both; discoloration of light at bottom—very bad, one minute; "End Part Four" showed; dirt in aperture shows badly; picture out of frame two feet until corrected after whistling, hand clapping and stamping by audience; projection speed entirely too fast for most scenes, not altered at all; slight flicker tendency and a trifle of travel ghost; slides advertising future shows very dirty and badly handled.

That, mind you, is the record of one show, projected by a man getting the union minimum scale.

Let us now examine into the matter of what is necessary to really high class projection, imagining no vain imaginings, but setting forth only those things imperatively necessary to high class projection—those things which must be provided if the audience is to get 100 per cent. value for its money, and the box office therefore to have the maximum possible drawing power for the class of show given.

First, there MUST be a skillful, CAREFUL projectionist. I say "skillful," because to high grade projection real skill, or knowledge, if you prefer the term, is imperatively essential, particularly if the projection is to be done efficiently from the viewpoint of cost. I say "careful" because no matter how wide is the range of knowledge possessed by the projectionist, if he be careless or slovenly in his work—if he be one of those well known "Aw-that's-good-enough" chaps, his knowledge will count for very little; his work will be mediocre.

Second, there must be first class, high grade projectors, without which it is extremely unlikely, not to say impossible, that a photoplay will be projected at its full possibility of value. Also, while it may be possible that full value be got to the screer with an old, out-of-date projector in the hands of a very skillful projectionist, still it is unlikely, even though the projector mechanism may have been kept in excellent repair. The reason for this is partly psychological, the average projectionist feeling that if his employer does not place sufficient value on high grade projection to supply him with up-to-date projectors, why should he, the projectionist, expend mental and physical energy in an attempt to compel back-number equipment to equal the performance of up-to-date projectors. And, except possibly in small village theatres, the man is in a measure right, too.

Back-number Projectors

"What would I call back-number projectors," you ask?

A fair question! I would call any projector more than three years old a back number, for two reasons.

First, in that time there will have been more than sufficient improvements to fully justify installing projectors:

Second, the improvement in screen results due to up-to-date, new projectors will only have to be sufficient to sell an average of two or three additional seats a day to not only pay for new projectors every three years, but also to pay six per cent. on the money invested, and surely no sane man would seriously question the proposition that sufficiently improved results will be had to increase seat sales by that amount, considering the thousands of seats you have for sale every day many of which often are NOT sold:

Third, there must be ample direct current available. Granted that a very bright screen may be had with A. C., still the light quality is not there, and the result is never equal to D. C. projection.

Fourth, there must be a projection room of sufficient size to allow the men to work comfortably, and the room must be well-located from the point of view of projection results. It must be well-ventilated and well-equipped with all essential things, including toilet and wash basin. The observation ports must be large enough to allow the projectionist to have a full view of the screen when standing or sitting in working position beside the projector.

Fifth, the auditorium must be intelligently lighted. A photoplay just simply cannot be made to appear at its full value to an audience if the screen be light-struck. In the language of the immortal poet, there ain't no such animal! If light from any other source than the lens reaches the screen, then it will smear itself over the blacks as well as the whites, and will make the blacks gray, exactly in proportion to the amount and quality of the stray light. It may or may not turn the whites yellow, but it injures the contrast of black and white, and in many instances entirely ruins the more delicate shadings of photography.

Sixth. I have left one most important factor till the last, viz.: The equipment incident to projection must be kept in the very best possible repair, and the repairs for projectors should be bought ONLY from the projector manufacturer or a responsible agent.

Given these various things I have named, there is no good reason why the high grade photoplay cannot be put on the screen as a brilliant, beautiful thing which will bring good prices and enjoy liberal patronage, or the photoplay of mediocre merit be at least placed before audiences at its full value.

Lacking any of the things I have named there will be an inevitable reaction on the screen and in the box office. The high grade production will have its value to the audiences lowered in exact proportion to the aforesaid lack, while the photoplay of less merit will have little or no merit at all.

Carbon Flaming

Some while ago I asked the engineers of the National Carbon Company to give the reason for flaming at the carbons, saying that I believed it to be caused chiefly by impurities in the carbon.

I have just found on my desk the following, which I believe is the reply from the National, though there seems to be no letter with it, nor any notation on the sheet itself. It reads:

Flaming or chasing of the projection carbon arc is a phenomenon which caused considerable annoyance to projectionists and to audiences during the earlier stages of the motion picture industry. Intensive scientific research has isolated the cause of flaming, and careful manufacturing control of materials and products has practically eliminated this cause of annoyance from the better class carbons.

Today the occasional case of "chasing" may be found only when the so-called "neutral" carbons are used with alternating current, but this combination is gradually being superseded by two combinations non-conductive to flaming. These are the usual direct projection arc trim and the White Flame alternating current trim.

The phenomenon was caused by impurities in the carbon shell, such as iron, calcium and sodium, which were oxidized to an ash in the intense heat near the arc. The ash formed near the crater and had a tendency to halve the anode voltage, thus pulling the arc to the side of the carbon. The arc would flicker and chase around the side of the carbon for about two seconds, until all the ash had been volatilized. When the current passing through the carbon was increased to an overload, the rate of formation of ash was accelerated, with consequent increase in flaming.

Flaming was noticeable to audiences only as an unsteadiness, or flickering of the light on the screen. To the projectionist, however, a chase was characterized by a long, yellow, unsteady arc, moving about the side of the carbon.

There is some misunderstanding here, if this is the National engineer's reply. The information is valuable; also I think that to projectionists it will be new. The flaming I had reference to, however, is not of this nature, but a long, constant, steady blaze coming from the crater and, with the ordinary projection arc, shooting up and forward. It makes for unevenness of heating of the condenser, dirties the collector lens very fast and sets up excessive lens breakage. What we want to know is the why and wherefore of this "flame," which often is present in highly objectionable degree in one case, and not in another where the same amperage is used and the same make of carbon. We thank whoever it may have been that sent in the above, but want further light.

To Make a Shutter

R. C. Higgins, Projectionist, York Theatre, Toronto, Ont., says:

In the issue of September 15 an unnamed party requests the correct procedure for making a rotating shutter. This may be done, without trouble, in the following manner:

First—Measure distance center of shutter shaft to center of projection lens, and mark these two points in position on paper;

Second—Strike an arc and, with correct size of spot in correct working position, project light to the screen;

Third—Place a piece of tin, preferably black in color, in the light beam at the plane at which the shutter is to operate—at the aerial image if practicable;

Fourth—Measure diameter of light beam;

Fifth—At the point on the paper representing the lens center, designated as "B," draw in, carefully, the rectangle (if using slide carrier) of light, or with a compass, the circle if not using a slide carrier. Be sure to have point B as the center of rectangle or circle;

Sixth—Draw two straight lines from point representing center of shutter shaft, designated as "A," to extreme edges of circle or rectangle of light at B. With a protractor measure the degrees between these two lines, which we will assume to be ten degrees;

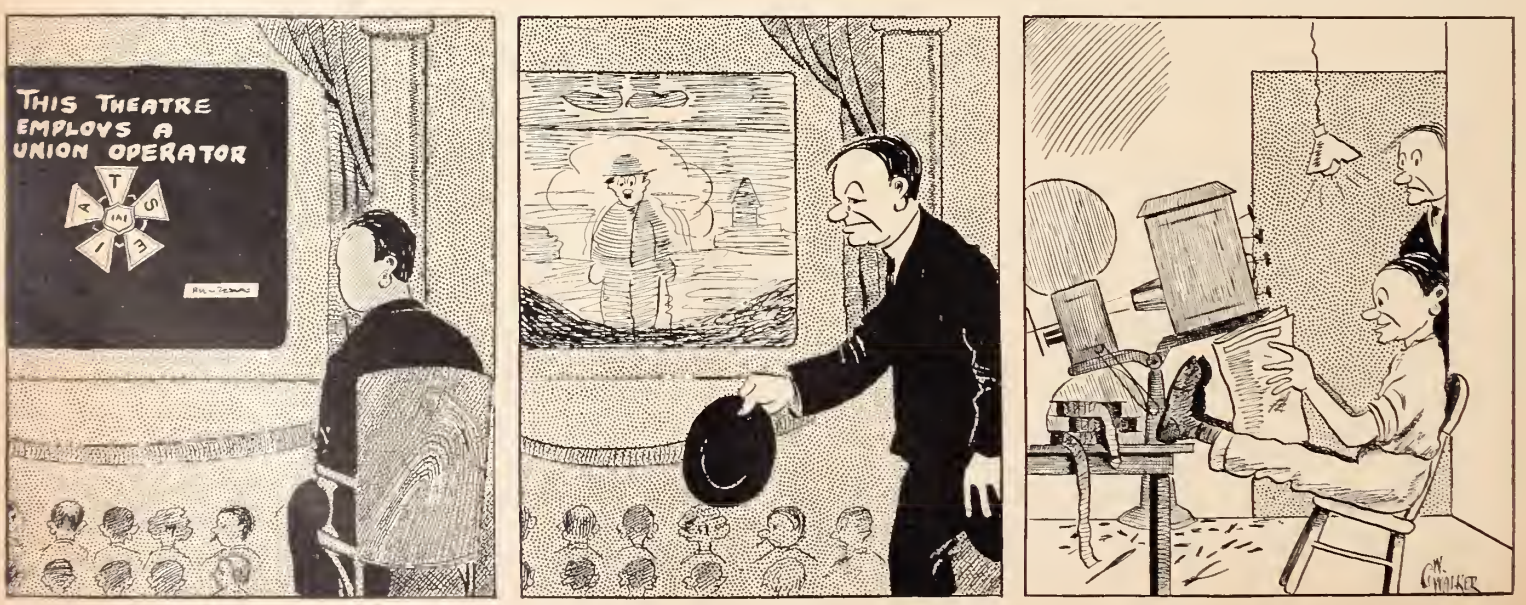
Seventh—All projectionists know the ratio of the various standard professional projectors (Huh! Do they?—Ed). Well, if we were using a projector having a 60 degree time for movement of the film, we would just add the width of the light beam (10 degrees in our case) to the 60 and would have, as a result, a 70 degree master blade width.

This of course allows nothing for lost motion due to worn gears, etc., but I have used this method and found it very successful. As to my observation regarding the intercepting blades, if you have a heavy amperage and a rather slow projection speed, it is necessary that all blades be the same width if flicker-tendency is to be reduced to its lowest limit. However, up to and including 60 amperes, projecting 75 feet and up, per minute, it is permissible to make the intercepting blades a full ten per cent. less in width than the master blade, with all light spaces equal.

Friend Higgins sends a diagram, but I think it hardly necessary to reproduce it. I see nothing wrong with his procedure, except that if the intercepting blades of a three-winger be made narrower than the master blade, then it is impossible to make all light openings the same. The better practice under this condition is to make the two openings next the master blade equal, and the center one of less width.

Possible

It is entirely within the range of possibility that within the year you may be called upon to handle a proposition radically different from anything you have ever dreamed of. How would you like to project films something like two and one-half inches wide, huh? Well, maybe you won't—also maybe you will, and if it really does come through it'll be a stem-winder. It's a Chicago stereoscopic proposition. I've seen samples of the film and would "poo-poo" the whole thing, but I'm not prepared to cast an altogether frozen eye at anything sponsored by so able a man as George K. Spoor, of the old Essanay, particularly when I happen to know he has been working on this particular proposition for more moons than you would care to spare time to count! Well, we'll see what we'll see byemby. Meanwhile don't get all het up and excited. If it comes through at all it'll be quite a spell yet.



This represents exactly what the editor saw in a theatre recently. What do YOU think of it? The person with the hat on is supposed to be me. Did not this man DISGRACE the union he belonged to? Ought not the union slide to be TAKEN AWAY FROM HIM and he be fined in a good, substantial sum for such a disgraceful performance? WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT IT?

Thirty-five New Houses Building and Twenty-one Old Ones Being Improved

IN the following list of thirty-five picture theatres projected, but nineteen furnish definite information regarding the contemplated cost of the houses.

The highest figure given is $750,000, at which figure the house planned for erection on Belle Plain Avenue and Lincoln Robey Streets, Chicago, ties the new Saenger house, at Shreveport, La.

From this figure, the anticipated expenditures run down to as low as $10,000, at which latter cost a two-story house will be erected in Dickson City, Pa.

Between the maximum and minimum figures given above, there is a wide variety of costs. One house will be erected at an expenditure of $500,000, one house at $400,000, one at $350,000 and one at $300,000.

Another will cost $150,000, while two prospective builders figure theirs at $100,000 each.

Getting below $100,000, there are one at $80,000, one at $70,000, one at $60,000, one at $50,000, one at $45,000, one at $40,000 and one at $32,000.

Where They Will Be Built

In regard to location, the score for the various states is as follows:

California 3, Illinois 2, Indiana 1, Kansas 2, Louisiana 1, Massachusetts 1, Michigan 2, Missouri 1, Nebraska 1, New York 5, Ohio 3, Oregon 1, Pennsylvania 7, Rhode Island 1, Tennessee 1, Texas 1 and Wisconsin 2.

By which it will be noted that in this particular list, the Keystone beats the Empire State by two houses.

But all the building activities shown in this issue are not confined to the erection of new houses. In twenty-one already existing theatres improvements will be made, on which the expenditures involved range from $88,000, on the Pittsburgh Camerphone, down to $1,000 on Harry Schwartz's Gerard Avenue house, Philadelphia.

This marvelous combination heater and ventilator heats and gently distributes fresh, pure air in winter—supplies an abundance of cool, clean air in summer. Keeps your theater comfortable and healthful the year round.

Combined Heater and Ventilator—for Moving Picture Theaters

Many moving-picture theater owners who have thoroughly investigated heating and ventilating systems have unqualifiedly chosen Skinner Bros. Heaters. These heaters are so unusual in design and operation that their performance really astonishes everyone—they combine effective heating and ventilating in one unit.

From a box-office standpoint this means everything to you—when you install the Skinner Bros. Heater you keep your theater at a comfortable temperature and rid it once and for all of the stuffy, foul atmosphere that keeps so many patrons away.

No outside pipes or ducts are used in the Skinner Bros. System—no coils hanging on your walls—no fittings block your aisles—no smudge or dirt on your decorations—no fire hazard.

Performance of these heaters is guaranteed when installed as directed by our Engineers. Investigate—right now—send for Catalog B-8 and the names of moving-picture theater owners who have installed this heating system.

FOURTH SERIES

Directed by EDWARD LAEMMLE Stories by H. C. WITWER

This greatest series of two reel pictures ever made was Reginald Denny's pride—he lived and loved "The Leather Pushers." It was only after an exhaustive search and careful consideration that a successor to Denny was chosen—Billy Sullivan. The above wire from Denny himself is convincing proof that Sullivan has scored a decisive hit in Denny's famous role and that exhibitors are assured of a tremendously powerful continuation of those famous pictures.

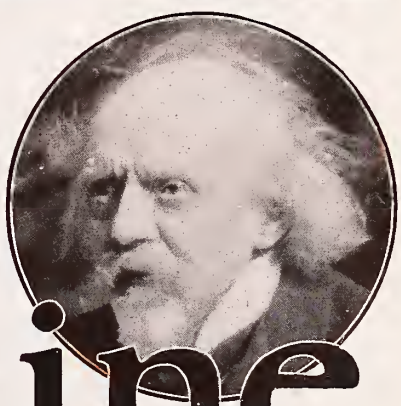
Victor Seastrom

has directed a giant attraction that will go down in box-office history. We state here unconditionally that Victor Seastrom's achievement is the most important screen work to be given exhibitors this year!

NAME T

HE MAN!

All over the world this attraction will draw the money of the masses, because it speaks the language of the millions. It is the most significant picture creation from the pen of the world famous author



Sir Hall Caine

Read This!

ANOTHER motion picture has been added to the industry. It is Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man!" adapted from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man." But it is not just another motion picture. It is something more than that.

It is a bit of Reality carved right out of life itself— as real as the face of your mother, or your own hand. It convinces you of its Humanness, of its stature through its Simplicity.

There is no striving after effect. The story is just acted and directed Simply and Sincerely and the effect is there. Nobody knows how Seastrom does it.

But he does it. He has communicated his own Simplicity and Sincerity to Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Hobart Bosworth, Aileen Pringle, Creighton Hale, and the other members of the cast; they have never acted better.

No human heart can escape the Drama and the Emotion which Seastrom has lifted from life and transferred to the screen. It speaks the universal language of the heart, no matter how noble or ignoble that heart may be.

See it and be convinced how great a miracle the mechanism known as a motion picture camera is capable of, when there is Heart, Intelligence, Humility and Sincerity in the driving force back of it —the mind which directed it.

no record like this!

"THE COVERED WAGON"

closed last week its absolutely phenomenal run at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood.

The closing week's business broke the house record by $1,624 —a record established also by "The Covered Wagon."

"The Covered Wagon" ran 34 weeks at Grauman's Egyptian and is being taken off to allow for the presentation of "The Ten Commandments."

The total house capacity in money for the Egyptian Theatre is $25,068. "The Covered Wagon," in its 34th week at the Egyptian Theatre, grossed $25,133.

In the 34 weeks in which "The Covered Wagon" played at the Egyptian Theatre the gross business was $712,045, and 697,717 persons saw the picture there.

The average weekly business for 34 weeks of "The Covered Wagon" run at the Egyptian Theatre was $20,942.20.

The run of "The Covered Wagon" at the Egyptian Theatre is without equal in the entire history of the entertainment business.

And throughout the entire world, no picture ever produced has consistently gotten the patronage that has been accorded James Cruze's "The Covered Wagon."

It has established a record that is absolutely and unqualifiedly without any precedent whatsoever.

—and yet—

the tremendous business done by "The Covered Wagon" will be topped by the business done by Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments," another Paramount Picture, which now goes into the Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood.

Paramount has the pictures!

YOUR theatre has made money largely through your ability to entertain two crowds in an evening. But you can't play to two completely different audiences in an evening when your feature runs ten reels or more in length. There aren't enough hours in the evening to get in two whole shows based on such a feature.

And it is NOT entertainment. But you can give your patrons ENTERTAINMENT —and two shows in an evening—if you pick features of proper length and surround them with Short Subjects such as Educational offers.

"THE OPTIMIST"

Is Winning New Laurels for Hamilton Everywhere

The Los Angeles Record says:

"The comedy is worth more serious consideration than the feature at Loew's this week, not because Griffith has stamped Lloyd Hamilton with approval by starring him in a full-length picture, but because 'The Optimist' is a priceless snatch of whimsical burlesque. Hamilton is due to be 'discovered', even as Chaplin, as a comedy genius of laughable ability."

The Los Angeles Times says:

"Praise be! There is also a cracking jazz comedy starring Lloyd Hamilton, called 'The Optimist,' good for a laugh a minute..."

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer says:

"Lloyd Hamilton registers several laughs a minute with his new comedy, 'The Optimist,' now in the Allen. His 'gag-man' seems to have been working overtime thinking up good ones for this picture. It shows a lot of hard work, and the results are worth it... Unlimited possibilities.

"'The Optimist' is honest and honorable slapstick. It certainly cinches Hamilton to his often quoted place in the trio of Chaplin, Keaton and Hamilton."

Coming!!

The first of the Palmer photoplays "JUDGMENT OF THE STORM," backed by the biggest advertising campaign in the entire history of the industry.

Ponder over these factors—

Twenty-five nationally circulating magazines reaching more than 40,000,000 people per month with the campaign running nearly three full months.

50,000 Palmer students and over 300,000 interested people banded together into one mighty force to advertise the picture.

$48,000 worth of special newspaper advertising for exhibitors to back them up and insure the huge success of their showings.

These are a few of the colossal forces behind this first Palmer photoplay—

"JUDGMENT of the STORM"

It's an F. B. O. Picture

Besides this, being one of the really big time productions of the year with a cast as fine as any that ever appeared before the American public, this picture as a box office "draw" will set new standards, for millions will flock to see this great story written by a plain Pittsburg housewife.

You'll hear a lot more about "JUDGMENT OF THE STORM" in the coming weeks. Watch the tradepapers. Keep open time for this one.

You're going to experience something entirely new in film business, something every exhibitor has asked for and wanted for years. To be distributed by—

LOU TELLEGEN

PAULINE FREDERICK

PAULINE FREDERICK and LOU TELLEGEN, famous stars of screen and stage, play leading roles in "Let No Man Put Asunder," the J. Stuart Blackton Production which will be released by Vitagraph. This super-feature is an adaptation of Basil King's famous novel on divorce. Leaders of social thought of today stand aghast at the spread of domestic discontent throughout the world. Basil King's story of three couples, gifted with riches and social position, who find life tasteless and who seek in vain for happiness over luxurious roads of idleness is one of the strongest arraignments of social folly that has ever been written. The screen drama, a highly emotional and gripping translation of the author's indictment of frivolities which lead to unhappy marriages, by its frank presentation, points the way to a cure for marital discord.

The picture provides for Pauline Frederick the greatest emotional role she has ever essayed. Miss Frederick is noted for her dramatic interpretations of women torn by conflicts of love. In Mr. Blackton's new picture all of her artistic prowess is given full flight in the gamut of emotions she is called upon to translate in moving film. Petrina Faneuil, the character she plays, will undoubtedly take its place at the head of all of the screen portraits this remarkable actress has contributed to motion pictures.

The part of Dick Lechmere, awarded to Mr. Tellegen, famous as "the great lover" of the screen, is one for which this actor is exceptionally fitted. Lechmere's marriage, divorce and the tragedy that ensues, lifts the role out of the conventional "third-in-the-triangle" class into one of appealing sympathy. He is married to an opera singer and after their separation weds Petrina, whose union also has been smashed through modern follies, and in the end makes the supreme sacrifice and Petrina is restored to happiness with Harry Vassall, the man she first married.

Vassall is played by Leslie Austen, one of the most popular young leading men of the day. Like Mr. Tellegen he is an actor schooled on the legitimate stage and makes a splendid foil for "the great lover."

The opera singer is played by Helena D'Algy, a beautiful young Spanish actress. Miss D'Algy is a striking brunette and a dancer of marvelous ability. One of the most sensational episodes in the picture is that in which she dances as a lure to Dick Lechmere.

Others in the all-star cast selected by Mr. Blackton are Pauline Neff, whose distinguished personality fits perfectly the role of Lady Emmy de Bohun, Violet de Barros, who plays Polly, Martha Petelle, Gladys Frazin, Clifton Webb and Homer Lind.

Vitagraph has provided gorgeous scenic investure for "Let No Man Put Asunder." Especially designed sets have given full play to Mr. Blackton's famous artistic photographic compositions and he has evolved a score of new effects in lighting which promise to add to his fame as an originator of revolutionary methods.

Every scene in this gripping drama of the marriage problem is one of luxury. The play deals with men and women of wealth and leisure. It shows life as it is lived in society; the sordid by-ways have no place in this drama of human emotions.

Every element of fan appeal and box-office value has been drafted by Vitagraph for this great special. In cast, in direction, in mounting, and in drama the qualities are sure fire winners. There is no subject so much discussed today as the divorce problem —"Let No Man Put Asunder" presents it with frank finality.

"Fashion Row" is the greatest hit Mae Murray ever put over — a box-office attraction that has everything to insure record-breaking business.

The star has a universal draw—this picture will build her vast following and will build business for you. In a terrific melodromance, pulsating with peril and passion, Miss Murray radiates genius, discloses amazing versatility, dominates every scene.

Robert Z. Leonard has given "Fashion Row" a production more elaborate even than his preceding Tiffany triumphs. Scenes like the society frolic at a Russian masked ball on a Long Island estate, like the packed theatre audience frantically cheering great Farinova, and scenes like the sumptuous society haunts on "Fashion Row, will dazzle audiences.

And the Murray gowns!—scores of gorgeous creations worth a king's ransom—that the women would walk miles just to see! The cast supporting the star has such well known names as Earle Fox, Elmo Lincoln and Freeman Wood. Every factor combines to make "Fashion Row" a sizzling success that will sky-rocket the exhibitor into record receipts. Be the first to book it!

You'll Smash Into "Dough" With "Fashion Row"

Here is the landslide you've been waiting for—a whale of a box-office picture with a different Mae Murray than you've ever seen before. You'll see her do the most amazing work of her career, in the dual role of two sisters, one a Russian peasant girl and the other a famous actress.

The fans will marvel at her as a whirlwind dancer in a Russian dive—they'll love her as Zita, the innocent immigrant girl who is made the pawn in a man's revenge—they'll rave over her as Olga Farinova, great tragedienne and idolized mystery woman of Broadway—until a man with a scar and an errand of vengeance came out of her past to solve the mystery!

"Fashion Row" is the story of Beauty and the Beast in a setting of New York's smart set—of a beautiful woman who built around her a world of fame and luxury and castles that touched the skies, and of the beast that made them all come tumbling down!

"Fashion Row" is a sure-fire box-office wallop. It will make money for every exhibitor who plays it. See that it makes money for you!

An Exhibitor's Picture

You can put over "Fashion Row" to a barrel of profits by using the Metro press sheet, exploitation ideas and the great array of high class accessories. Eight pages devoted exclusively to exploitation. Double the number usually supplied. That's what Metro thinks of this production.

All ready for you. The finest and most extensive line of advertising material ever made available on any picture.

You don't have to ask for newspaper space on Mae Murray—all you have to do is to fill it. You can grab columns on this star and this picture.

The title means merchant tieups galore. Every angle of exploitation can be played to the limit on "Fashion Row"—and Metro shows you how.

It's Different!

An actress worshipped by the world, married to the scion of an aristocratic family, but tricked by her avenging pursuer into a trap from which there was no escape—that's Mae Murray as Farinova, whose life was a lie that hounded her, but whose love was honest.

A peasant girl seeking her sister in a strange land, made the tool of a hate-scarred villain — that's Mae Murray as Zita, the drab blossom who bloomed into a lovely flower.

The picture public will go wild over "Fashion Row." It's jammed with fighting action — thrills-a-plenty — and Mae Murray at her ravishing best!

"Boy of Mine"

First National Release Starring Ben Alexander Can Be Recommended Without Qualifications

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. Not because it is one of the most lavish but because it has one of the best stories, is an example of the finest directing and presents acting that is very near flawless. Furthermore, it features Ben Alexander.

It is a gem among pictures because it is amazingly entertaining without any hokum. Just where the dramatic tension is the greatest and one expects one of the time-worn twists, something supremely natural instead takes place. This is perhaps the picture's most distinguished feature.

Booth Tarkington's reputation for creating realistic boy fiction is stoutly upheld. Ben Alexander is a lovable, misunderstood and imperfect boy. He is tremendously appealing because he seems so entirely unconscious of the camera.

The picture is life from a boy's viewpoint. You are made to feel, just as in reading Tarkington, that youth is a detached kingdom with experiences and emotions of its own that very few adults take the trouble to understand. Its tragedies are either insignificant or ludicrous to outsiders. This gives the picture that wonderful blending of comedy and sympathetic interest that reaches any type of spectator.

William Beaudine's directing in this production will be remembered by anyone who is interested in better pictures. He seems to have disciplined a cast of already accomplished players into an interpretation of human character so complete and interesting that nothing is left to be desired. Henry Walthall as the repressed father, without any understanding of his son but possessed of a great love for him, is a new screen study. Irene Rich gives a beautiful performance as the mother and Rockliff Fellowes as the boy's pal is delightful.

The comedy deserves special mention. The scenes in the church are extremely funny and the incidents connected with the boy and the rag picker's son getting hold of the "revolaver" are worth making a second trip to see the picture. "Boy of Mine" is one of those few pictures no one should miss.

The most human picture ever made

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

"Get the Habit"

ABOUT this time a year ago there was considerable agitation regarding the excessive length of feature productions.

Letters from exhibitors were numerous; producers and distributors came to the front with frank opinions.

Then the hub-bub died. And it cannot be said that this season's productions gave any encouragement to the exhibitor seeking to BUILD a programme of varied entertainment.

Here is a thought: Production plans for Filmland's "second half of the season" are now under way. Book and play scouts are scouring Broadway; studio gates are swinging wide.

Now is the time to set it down flat and plain as a dictate: No more padded eight—and nine-reel specials.

A good picture in six and seven reels is still a good picture—if it IS good. While many a corking piece of entertainment in seven reels has been made a colorless flivver by the tricks that extend it to nine reels.

EARL HAMMONS, of Educational Films, pointed out one very interesting angle on this question of excessive feature length in his last week's Moving Picture World interview.

While on the subject of curtailing production costs, declares Mr. Hammons, why not give some thought to the waste footage that serves no good purpose and very often proves harmful?

After viewing most of the pictures of the season the writer is strongly inclined to the belief that there comes a point in the life of every continuity when the production board says:

"Here is where we will have to put in a ball scene, a midnight bathing party, a mob or a wreck. Something to carry the action over two more reels —and it must be big or the audience will get wise to us."

Being "big"—it must be costly.

The result is that a story which probably had a real reason for existence at the outset, by the introduction of the time-tried devices becomes what the daily critics term, "Another one of those things."

THE matter of initial production cost, serious as it may be, is but a minor evil in comparison with the real crux of the waste footage problem.

Excessively long features are dulling and killing the exhibitor's opportunity to provide entertainment.

The appeal, the pull, the one vital factor in the growth of the motion picture theatre is the thought in the mind of the average patron: "There is sure to be SOMETHING on the bill that I'll like."

That thought built the motion picture.

That thought created the picture-going HABIT —and the habit is no more when would-be patrons look up the title of the feature and reach their "yes" or "no" decision solely on that basis.

Let's "get the habit" working for us again.

Let's get the public thinking: "There is sure to be SOMETHING on the bill that I'll like."

It's money in the box office.

ALL of which brings us back to our starting point.

Last year saw much more discussion of the excessive length question than there is at this moment. And nothing was done.

Production schedules of roseate hue were under way; all you had to do was to make "bigger and better" pictures and you would get "Covered Wagon" money.

In the twelve months that have intervened a number of us have learned sad lessons. Quite a few of our most untrammeled imaginations are willing to admit that "it is still the picture business."

We are down to earth. This is stock-taking time. Don't let it pass without serious thought and ACTION on the subject of proper feature length.

Oklahoma Men Condemn Tax; Talbot Re-elected President

OKLAHOMA CITY, Dec. 4.—The Oklahoma Managers and Exhibitors Association convened in annual session at Oklahoma City yesterday and today, with the largest attendance in its history. Morris Lowenstein, vice-president, presided in the absence of President Ralph Talbot, who was unable to attend. A new constitution, set of by-laws and code of ethics were adopted, and slides recommended for both national and service associations. Resolutions requested United States Senators and Congressmen to vote for the admission tax repeal and work for the abolition of the music tax. The selling of films to non-theatrical institutions charging an admission was condemned. The employment of an attorney by the executive committee was authorized. The Far East movement was endorsed.

S. A. Handy, attorney, of Kansas City, spoke on the music tax and L. J. Lally of the same city on reciprocal insurance as a savings proposition. It was voted to investigate the insurance proposition. Tom Ryan, representing the F. I. L. M. Board Adjusting Bureau, and L. W. Brophy of Muskogee were other speakers. A grand ball was given Monday night and the convention adjourned Tuesday night with a banquet. The next annual meeting will be at Oklahoma City on the first Monday in December, 1924.

The following officers were elected:

President, Ralph Talbot, Tulsa; vice-president, Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City; secretary, L. W. Brophy, Muskogee; treasurer, Harry Brutton, Norman. Executive committee: John Feeney, Henryetta; Fred Pickerel, Ponca City; A. B. Momand, Shawnee; J. H. Moulder, Sapulpa; William Smith, Tulsa.

Music Tax Truce Is Ended

Exhibitors in general throughout the country have been misinformed regarding the merits of copyrights on music belonging to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, according to that organization's special advisor, E. C. Mills. Conferences with the executive board of the M. P. T. O. A. are terminated, says Mr. Mills, who declares that it is obvious that no adjustment, amicable to both sides, could be reached through them.

The old condition now exists and will exist, states Mr. Mills. Under it the exhibitor cannot use the society's music unless he obtains a license from the society's headquarters in New York. Using such music without the license he faces prosecution which, according to Mills, has a minimum fine of $250 for those adjudged violators.

Fines totaling over $125,000 have been imposed upon 500 exhibitor violators, according to Mr. Mills. About 1,000 other defendants in this category effected an adjustment of their cases before trial, he states, adding that at the present time charges are being preferred against from 400 to 500 exhibitors in the United States for this alleged copyright infringement.

Robertson Visiting

South American Movie Official in New York Conferring with Manufacturers

Juan Robertson, official of the Sociedad General Cinematografica, one of the leading film distributing and exhibiting companies of Buenos Aires, Argentina, arrived in New York a few days ago. He is here to close several deals with the moving picture manufacturers of this country in co-operation with Mr. Juan Kunzler, the local representative of the South American corporation.

Mr. Robertson is an authority in matters of film booking and distributing, and is well known all over the southern hemisphere. He intends to stay in New York for a few weeks and then will visit coast studios before returning to Argentina.

Sociedad General is, at present, the sole distributor in South America of the Metro, Pathe, Warner Brothers and Al Lichtman pictures.

Lesser on Way West

Irving M. Lesser, vice president of and Eastern representative for Principal Pictures Corporation, has left for the Pacific Coast to hold a conference on production, distribution and general activities of Principal.

To Paint Town Blue

Klan in Youngstown, Ohio, Against a Liberal Sunday

It looks as though the recent Ku Klux Klan political victory in Youngstown, Ohio, whereby the man they supported for mayor was elected, will mean the blues for the movie shows after January 1. Charles Scheible is the mayor-elect. He publicly received the support of the Ku Klux, whose head, Col. E. A. Watkins, led the fight for his election. Watkins was supported by a number of ministers who sought enforcement of the blue laws.

Since the election Scheible has been on the fence as regards enforcement of these laws, and as a result Watkins got the ministers together and forced his way into a position of power, also putting himself in line for the office of chief of police. The first of December the ministers called Scheible into a conference at which a recall was threatened unless Scheible reaffirmed his pledges to enforce all the laws, and gave evidence of his sincerity in considering Watkins for police chief.

A number of business men interested in Sunday amusements and the sale of gasoline have arranged a meeting to prepare a legal defense in the event the blue laws are enforced.

Made "Big U" Sales Head

Al Lichtman Succeeds E. J. Smith as General Sales Manager

E. J. Smith, general manager of sales for the Universal Pictures Corporation, has resigned, and Al Lichtman, who recently joined the Universal home office staff, has been appointed by Carl Laemmle as the new general manager of sales.

Mr. Smith has two propositions under advisement but is anxious to take a short rest before plunging again into the business in which he has spent the last ten years of his life. Lichtman takes over the Universal sales organization at a time when it is contemplating its most active period.

Manhattan Exceeds $7,000

Just 261 of the 287 theatres in Greater New York have deposited a total of slightly over $7,000 as their share of National Motion Picture Day proceeds. National President Sydney S. Cohen expressed his enthusiasm over these returns, saying they are but representative of the co-operation he received throughout the country. The final report will probably not be made until within the next few weeks, as Mr. Cohen now is daily receiving checks from different sections of the States.

Rogers Leaves Mastodon

Charles R. Rogers announces his resignation as an officer of the Mastodon Films, Inc., and Burr-Rogers Producing Corporation. "I find that I cannot give these two companies as much of my time and attention as they require, owing to the fact that I am so entirely engaged in the Corinne Griffith and Hunt Stromberg, Harry Carey units," he writes.

President Coolidge Recommends Repeal of Admission Tax

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Repeal of the admission tax on theatre tickets is recommended to Congress by the President in his message transmitting the budget estimates for the fiscal year beginning July 1, next. With the President's recommendation behind it, the success of the move for the abolition of these and certain other of the war taxes seems assured.

"We have now reached a point in our financial program where we can lighten the tax burden of the people," it is declared, "which is an added reason for taking a firm stand against any and all programs of spending that would tend to absorb the expected margin between receipts and expenditures.

"Having in mind that the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, contemplates that the Chief Executive, under the fortunate situation in which we now find ourselves, shall make such recommendations as in his opinion the public interests require, I recommend a revision of tax laws along lines which will effect a reduction of income taxes by taxing earned income more lightly than income from business or from investments; by reducing the percentages of the normal tax, and by reducing the surtax rates, with commencement of their application at $10,000 instead of $6,000. I also recommend repeal of the tax on telegrams, telephones and leased wires, and of the tax on admissions, and revision of the miscellaneous taxes which are a source of inconvenience to taxpayers and difficult to collect. On the other hand, amendments which would cause some increase of revenue should also be made to existing income tax laws relative to deductions of capital losses; deductions from gross income for interest paid and non-business losses sustained, where income from tax-exempt securities is involved; and the manner of taxing community incomes. These changes would reduce taxes by more than $300,000,000, which is safely within the probable surplus.

"I know of nothing," continues the President, "which will give the people of this nation greater assurance that we are unalterably committed to a campaign of economy in public expenditure than a reduction of our present taxation. It will take from the realm of debate plans which contemplate extravagant expenditures or expansions of the business of Government beyond those necessary to keep pace with a growing nation, and fix as the measure of our requirements an amount which will represent what is actually necessary to carry on efficiently the proper business and functions of Government and meet our fixed debt charges payable out of current revenue."

Ordinary expenses of running the Government during the coming fiscal year will total $1,645,791,971, it is indicated in the estimates, while an additional $1,985,371,158 will be required for interest payments and reduction in principal of the public debt, making the total appropriations required $3,631,163,129. This is a reduction of slightly less than $200,000,000 in the departmental expenses, as compared with appropriations for the current fiscal year, and of approximately 230,000,000 as compared with the present appropriations for all purposes.

While no specific appropriations are asked for moving picture activities by the War or Navy Departments, the funds for recreation carried in the estimates contemplate continuation of the moving picture entertainments furnished the men in those services, while the Department of Agriculture and the Interior Department expect to continue their moving picture activities. The Department of Commerce, which experimented with moving pictures last year, has discontinued production.

Grainger Returns

Goldwyn Cosmopolitan Sales Manager Back from Tour Predicts Favorably

James R. Grainger, general manager of sales for Goldwyn Cosmopolitan, returned recently from his trip to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., and to many of the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exchanges. He reports that the exhibitors throughout the country are enthusiastic about the quality of the big pictures which they have had from the distributing corporation, and that many of the films are breaking records in various of the big cities.

Many Bills in Congress Affect Industry

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Repeal of the admission tax was one of the first matters to come before the 68th Congress at the opening of the session on December 3, House Bill No. 2, introduced by Representative McGregor, of New York, and referred to the House committee on ways and means, providing for the repeal of this tax. It is expected that similar measures will be introduced within the next few days by members of Congress who have been urged by their constituents to give their assistance to the removal of this tax.

Representative Johnson, of Washington, introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to free places of amusement from the payment of the so-called music tax. This is to be accomplished by an amendment to the copyright law striking out the words "except in case of public performance for profit" from the sentence reading, in full, as follows: "The payment of the royalty provided for by this section shall free the articles or devices for which such royalty has been paid from further contribution to the copyright except in case of public performance for profit."

Several other measures dealing with moving pictures were also introduced at the opening of the session, even before the House was able to organize so as to transact any business. Representative Sanders of Indiana reintroduced his bill, which failed of passage in the last Con gress, prohibiting the interstate transportation of inflammable moving picture films, which was referred to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce.

Representative Knutson, of Minnesota, has introduced a bill repealing the admission tax on entertainments, including moving picture exhibitions, when all of the proceeds inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational or charitable institutions or organizations or the American Legion.

There are also several bills providing for the repeal of the tax on telegrams and long-distance telephone messages, and measures dealing with the copyright law, but in the rush of bills introduced in the first days of the session it was impossible for the Government Printing Office to keep current the work of printing them, and their details are not yet available.

Production Possibilities in South Stir Ernest Shipman

The purpose of Ernest Shipman's present tour of the Southeastern states, which was veiled with mystery at the time he left New York about a week ago, has been definitely explained by this letter received from him. It follows:

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 3.

LAST week was one of kaleidoscopic action for my moving picture camera eye. At Washington, D. C., Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., cut through the official red tape so effectively that, within a few hours, the acceptance of our request for Governmental co-operation in connection with the making of our first Long Island picture, "The Romance of the Coast Guard Patrol," was on the records over the signature of Rear Admiral W. E. Reynolds, Commander of the United States Coast Guard. This action insures a moving picture which should be a credit to the industry and a lasting monument to the splendid traditions of the U. S. Coast Guard.

At Richmond, Va., I had the honor of meeting Governor E. Lee Trinkle, Mayor George Ainslee, W. T. Dabney, manager and Charles M. Montgomery, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. Words cannot express the solidity of purpose, the clearness of vision and the exalted ambition which animates the leaders of state and community interests in this part of the country. I found here considerable discussion of the Drinkwater stage version of the life of Robert E. Lee, and a growing sentiment for a moving picture which would do greater justice to events of his period. This may result in a picture creation for Virginia which will include Lee and the other foremost figures of his day.

Charleston, S. C., teeming with material for no end of motion picture possibilities, has a wealth of messages for the public of the world. Here I found actual preparations for my coming, fully scheduled and arranged for by Dr. R. S. McElwee, in charge of the Bureau of Foreign Trade and Port Development, and Meigs B. Russell, energetic manager of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mayor-elect Tom Stoney, whose ancestry dates back for 300 years in Carolina patriotism, was most enthusiastic in tendering the co-operation of the city in the making of one or more big feature pictures. Locations for a studio have been offered with a view to establishing definitely our fourth industry in this cradle of Southern civilization. Here, in Charleston, as in Richmond, a superficial survey of the untouched and untold film possibilities overwhelms me, and to hurry through seems nothing short of a sacrilege.

The business-like air and generally progressive attitude I have found in Jacksonville was just as I had expected from the splendid letters I had received from the Chamber of Commerce. On my arrival I found nearly 1,000 photographs of almost every kind of scenery and background, together with types of people, location addresses and other invaluable information. This file makes it possible for a producer in his headquarters at Jacksonville to select his locations without leaving his office. This is my first experience with such practical efficiency outside of the regular film producing organizations, and it has "sold" me on Florida.

The two days of research work here have already proven that I am making no mistake in committing my associates to Florida for future film activities. After a trip south, I will return here to complete such arrangements as are necessary for the establishment of this fourth industry in this part of the country.

The Paramount exchange here is one of the most efficient I have ever had the pleasure of visiting. Because of the excellent results it is obtaining with the co-operation of the energetic mayor of Jacksonville, I am going to distribute all my new features in Florida from Jacksonville.

Decision Affects All Interstate Trade

Omaha, Neb.—The United States Supreme Court decision which upheld the contention of Attorney Dana Van Dusen of Omaha in the case of Charles G. Binderup, against the Pathe Exchange, the Omaha Film Board of Trade, and other exchanges, will affect every big industry in the nation doing an interstate business according to Attorney Van Dusen.

The Supreme Court held that dealing with a branch house within a state is interstate traffic, if the home company of which that branch is a part is outside the state. This was the bone of contention.

Binderup, owner of a string of more than thirty theatres in Nebraska, sued the various exchanges and the Omaha Film Board of Trade for $700,000 damages charging that they had violated the Sherman Anti-trust law in refusing to ship him films as per his order.

The exchanges charged that he had violated his contract in showing films in more than one theatre, and further held that they were not subject to the Sherman Anti-trust law in that Binderup who lived in Nebraska, had dealt with a Nebraska branch, after the films had come to rest in the state.

Pathe Denies Rumor

A statement this week from the Pathe home office emphatically refutes the rumor that its branch-office in Spokane is about to be closed.

Martha Mansfield Dies of Burns

Martha Mansfield, popular actress of the Fox Corporation died in San Antonio, Texas, November 30, as the result of burns received while she was playing the leading part in the Fox production, "The Warrens of Virginia."

Miss Mansfield had just finished her acting for the day, and had stepped into an automobile, when the costume of the time of the Civil War she was wearing, suddenly burst into flames. It is thought the flames originated from the match of a careless cigarette smoker.

Several actors rushed to Miss Mansfield's assistance. She was hurried to a hospital where she died 24 hours later.

Miss Mansfield was born 23 years ago in Mansfield, Ohio, but was reared in New York where her mother now lives. Miss Mansfield gained prominence in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" in which John Barrymore starred. She appeared with Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," and recently was seen in "Potash and Perlmutter."

Bob Dexter Resigns

Versatile First National Official Will Write Fiction

Bob Dexter, advertising and publicity director for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. has resigned, effective December 29th, in order to devote all his time to fiction writing.

Dexter enjoys the distinction of being one of the youngest and at the same time one of the most successful advertising men in the motion picture business. His career started in Australia, where after several years' experience as a reporter and cartoonist he became assistant to C. L. Yearsley, in charge of the advertising and exploitation for J. D. Williams' enterprises.

When Yearsley came to America, Dexter was appointed his successor, although he had just passed his twenty-first birthday. A few years later Bob followed his former chief to New York and joined the advertising department of First National. His exceptional aptitude for the work resulted in rapid advancement and last June, when Yearsley left for a three months' vacation, Dexter took over the entire direction of the department. In September he was formally appointed director of advertising and publicity.

But along with motion picture work, particularly during the first year of his stay in America, Dexter found time to write considerable fiction, which was so well received that he was offered a contract by one of the largest publishing combines in the country. Recently this offer was renewed and accepted at an even more attractive figure.

Dexter will leave First National with a fine record of accomplishment behind him and with the best wishes of all his associates. No man in the organization has more friends.

M.P.T.O.A. Devises Definite Plan for Repeal of the Admission Tax

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A definite plan of action looking to the repeal by Congress of the admission and seating capacity taxes, and for the amendment of the copyright law in such manner as to free those furnishing entertainment involving the use of music controlled by the Composers Authors and Publishers Association from royalty liability to the members of that organization, was promulgated at the two days' session of the national board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The meeting was held at the New Willard Hotel and was well attended. The sessions were presided over by Sydney Cohen.

The activities of the directors were not confined to the discussions of the sessions, for they took advantage of the opportunity afforded them by their presence in the National Capital to visit the congressmen from back home. It is understood that they found a great deal of sympathy among the men they visited for the repeal of the burdensome and aggravating taxes placed upon them by the existing revenue law.

Assurances have come, for instance, from Senator James A. Watson, of Indiana, a member of the Senate Finance Committee and a power in Congress, that he is heartily in favor of eliminating from the tax law the provisions complained of. However, the Senator has declared, he is not favorable to any plan to bring repeal legislation before Congress—and that would be a part of the program promulgated by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon—unless there was considerable assurance of its adoption. He is against giving an opportunity for such a measure to become the football of politics during the session, and here, it is pointed out, is the opportunity for exhibitors and other business men throughout the country to become active in their own behalf.

It was the sentiment of the meeting that there is much hard work to be done in the immediate future. The exhibitors of the country must present a solid front if they are to gain their point, and they must centralize their efforts in the Washington campaign. With this in mind, a resolution was adopted extending a hearty and cordial invitation to any and all organizations which may desire to help present a united front to the end that the repeal of the admission taxes may be effected.

On the House of Representatives side of the Capitol, Representative John Garner, of Texas, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, who has made a long study of general conditions, has expressed himself as of the belief that in order to secure the repeal of the so-called nuisance tax provisions of the present law, in which are included the admission and seating capacity taxes, it will be desirable for the theatre owners to secure from and give to other lines of business co-operation leading to a united front with respect to all industries thus discriminated against.

Friends of the picture industry in Congress have indicated that it will be only by the "pack" method that repeal action will be secured. It must not be overlooked that there is considerable opposition to the repeal of the theatre taxes, and there are men prominent on the Ways and Means Committee who are frowning on that portion of the Mellon recommendations. Some of the Congressmen have been very frank in expressing themselves to their interviewers, others have hedged and some have openly come out in favor of tax repeal. Much of this information was presented by the individual members of the conference in the shape of reports from the various States.

At the conclusion of the meetings the following prepared statement was issued:

A meeting of the National Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was held at the Hotel Willard, Washington, D. C., on Friday and Saturday, November 30 and December 1. The meeting was attended by representatives from all parts of the country, and among those were Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; J. S. Phillips, Forth Worth, Texas; E. J. White, Montana; William Bender, Jr., South Bend, Indiana; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Fred Seegert, Milwaukee; W. A. True, Hartford; G. C. Schmidt, Indianapolis; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis; H. J. Schad, Reading, Pa.; Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; George Aarons, Philadelphia; Martin G. Smith, Toledo, O.; Jules Greenstone, Rochester, N. Y., Charles Rappaport, Philadelphia; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C.; John McGuirk, Philadelphia, and Sydney S. Cohen, New York.

The first day's session was devoted to a report of the activities of the men in their various states with their members of Congress, and there was general discussions of both local and national importance on questions touching the film industry in general and more particularly with the repeal of the various taxes, viz: the admission tax, seat tax, music tax, and other national legislative affairs. Many of the members present had the opportunity of meeting their representatives at Washington.

The second day's session was devoted to a discussion of the report of the activities of the National Legislative Committee, which had been appointed some time ago for the purpose of securing legislative relief and the repeal of the above taxes. All work of the Legislative Committee was approved and they were instructed to proceed with their endeavors and to do such things as would bring about the success of their efforts along these lines and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in meeting assembled at the Hotel Willard, Washington, D. C., November 30 and December 1, 1923, having received the report of the activities, work and accomplishments of the National Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America since the last meeting, looking toward the repeal of the burdensome admission taxes, and invitations having previously been extended to any and all interested in this problem to co-operate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Now, then, be it:

Resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at this time again extend a hearty and cordial invitation to any and all organizations which may desire to help present a united front to the end that the repeal of the admission taxes be effected.

Japanese Educator Here as Student of the Cinema Art

By TOM WALLER

SLOWLY and quietly, in accord with its usual policy for accuracy rather than speed, Japan is absorbing the fundamental detail and basic principle of the successful American producer. Unheralded, S. Kubata, a college professor, arrived from the Far East several months ago. It was not until the other day when he visited James O'Neill at Will Hays' office that a letter of introduction from the Consulate General of Japan revealed his mission.

Methodically, Kubata is surveying the American field. Deliberately he is tracing the whys and wherefores as to how the American filmed love scene is so realistic and how the American director goes about to void it of that stiffness which is the primary cause of the Japanese film being so low rated in its home territory, O'Neill was told. Then there are a myriad of other things he wants to take back to Japanese megahone wielders.

Japan foresees a craze for the cinema which within a comparatively short time will nearly equal, within its own jurisdiction, that of the Yankee country, Kubata gave O'Neill to understand. Home production whenever within the power of achievement has always been the world's understanding of the silent people on the island continent. And Japan today imports two thirds of the film shown in its theatres from America. Japan never expects to see the elimination of American film within its boundary but it is hopeful of reducing the import percentage and becoming less of a recluse in the movie world. In other words Japan is hopeful of home made films being the favorite in the homeland—and later on to have a comfortable exodus for a place in the rest of the world.

Prior to the earthquake the Setting Sun land had seven home studios. These were located in and about Tokio. Kubata has not received word as to the number that stand today.

But Kubata would seem to regard the earthquake, as concerns the Japanese industry, not wholly as a catastrophe. Instead of salvaging the antique, Kubata would favor a brand new reconstruction—a reconstruction inspired by American ideas and American practicality.

Decadence of European Films Due to Faulty Exhibitor Cooperation

By STEPHEN BUSH

THE decadence of the European film is evidenced in most illuminating fashion by the statistics of import and export. According to the best figures available the export of film to Europe has been steadily on the increase while the import of foreign film into the United States has been going back not only steadily but rapidly. The full significance of this fact can only be appreciated when one knows with what difficulties the import of foreign films into the various countries of Europe is really attended.

In looking at the causes of the decline of films made by European manufacturers not the last nor least is the apathetic attitude of the average European theatre owner. The exhibitors here offer the film to their public in a sort of careless, indifferent fashion; they do not even attempt to sell their films to the patrons. Friend Sargent's celebrated department, "How to Sell the Film to the Public," would be like a treatise on higher algebra to a primary class in a public school.

The owner or manager of the humblest show house in some obscure country town in the States knows and practices more showmanship and selling art than the average exhibitor in the big towns here. Here all films are treated pretty much alike. Newspaper advertising here is hardly any, a couple of indifferent posters are stuck up around the theatre, advance notices are rare. Of course there are exceptions in the big centers like London, Paris, Rome, Berlin and Vienna, but the rule is quite as I have described it.

Now the reaction of this lazy and incompetent attitude of the exhibitor on the producers is most injurious. Their initiative is deadened at the outset. The producer becomes a pessimist, figuring constantly on minimums, as there are no maximums. He begins to realize that the returns on his cheap stuff are very nearly as large as the returns on his best efforts.

It cannot be said that the public is altogether indifferent and unresponsive. Indeed as the public is often what the exhibitor himself makes it, its lack of discrimination and appreciation must in most instances be attributed to the negligent theatre owner himself. Whenever the least effort is made to arouse the public the success is plain. Advertise a film as an "American sensation" or a "real American comedy" and even this simple appeal will invariably bring results. I am thoroughly convinced that American methods of exhibition will double and treble the receipts of the theatres in Europe in a very short time. Europeans no less than Americans appreciate quality. Scores of cities in every part of Europe could be named where a house conducted on American ideas and methods would be the most profitable kind of an investment.

The proper appeal will bring the best of clientele, but the years are passing by and no effort seems to be made to extend the sphere and increase the attendance at the motion picture theatre. The continual triumphs of the American film in every part of Europe and the world is the greatest imaginable compliment not only to the American producer and exhibitor but equally to the American public, which, insisting on the best of film fare, has made the European audience more exacting. Our public has been spoiled perhaps, here every bit of quality is still thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed.

A group of German film men have after years of experiments—so it is said—produced a curious contrivance which is supposed to supply "effects" and especially imitations of music to correspond with the action on the screen, like the marching and playing of a band, military and other signals, etc., etc. It was to be a sort of glorified trap-drummer. Having attended a trial of the aforesaid contrivance, for which the most extravagant claims had been made, I must confess that it failed to register in any of the important details.

"Artistic effects," it will be remembered by all the old-timers, were freely advertised in the columns of The Moving Picture World something like ten or more years ago and comparing these "effects" with the German invention I would say that I would much rather have the old "effects," crude and disappointing though they may have been. The musical effects were particularly unsatisfactory, the only thing pleasing was the imitation of the violin. It had been promised to do away with the grating sounds which no method of mechanical synchronization has heretofore ever wholly eliminated. The promise was not kept; on the contrary the grating sound was accentuated. An effort was also made to reproduce the human voice but that failed utterly. Most of the reproduction was scarcely intelligible.

One of the Jackie Coogan productions had had a phenomenally successful run in Berlin and even the highbrow editors of the press pay the little artist high tribute. The various reviews and criticisms in the papers have started a discussion in professional and artistic circles as to just what constituted the merits of the feature.

The German critics have a cherished set of traditions and rules which they apply like chemical tests to every film or theatrical production and judged by these rules and theories the Jackie Coogan play must of necessity have failed. Hence these ponderous pundits are now at war with themselves and with each other.

Of course it would be too much to expect them to abandon their pet rules and principles but somehow the success of the "irregular film play" had to be explained. As a result they have evolved a new set of rules applicable specially to juvenile plays hailing from New York or Los Angeles. Well, they might as well get out of their dilemma that way. What a tremendous value this editorial discussion would have had for the publicity end if it had happened in a regular country like the U. S. A.

Swedish Exchanges Slashed by Slump; Public Discriminating

By TOM WALLER

SWEDEN'S long winter nights are equalized regarding the most popular of indoor sports. One night is spent reading a timely book and the next is devoted to selecting the movie house where the cinema version of that novel, or one as popular, is being shown. Even more so than here, movie advertising, for the most part, regulates or especially "popularizes" the books which undergo screen interpretation.

As American producers now seem to be catering to the reading public, American films are the films of the day for Sweden, there furnishing seventy per cent. of silver screen amusement. Regardless of books however, although in his mind they furnish the most apt of screen material for such a nation, Knut Husberg, whose opinion is thus recorded, declares American movies will always dominate Swedish houses.

The Independent houses over there suffer far more than the Independents here, says Husberg, head of the purchasing department of the A. B. Svensk Filmindustri, Sweden's leading movie concern, the interests for which he was here for a short period, returning home this week. His company controls about 100 Swedish theatres and handles film for 400 exhibitors. Much American product is distributed by his company, even though several of the bigger producing units have exchanges dotting the Swedish map.

The house that is not tied up with popular American product is the nearest thing to being "outta' luck." The Swedish theatre goer is essentially discriminating. Unlike many of his American brothers, this discrimination, borne up by inherent stubbornness, bears hard upon the independent who has not the desired picture. When the seats are sold out in the theatre that has, this gentleman, instead of taking second best, turns around, goes home and continues reading until the eventful night when a seat in the specified house is procurable.

Such a condition—the small exhibitor who specializes in cheap pictures—with such a discriminating public, is one of the reasons to which Husberg attributes the present slump in the Swedish industry; a slump, he says, which has cut the number of exchanges into nearly one half during the past year. The primary factor for this temporary decadence, Husberg says, is that Sweden is now experiencing in full the war's aftermath. This aftermath is not only tightening the purse strings but is callousing the discriminatory side of the public. However, Husberg burnishes the prospects of the ensuing year; hailing it as an emissary of normalcy. The home product now does not exceed twelve films yearly, but these are good pictures, says Husberg who advances the belief that Sweden will never go in very strong for production when America is so close by.

Husberg is "sold" on Associated First National's product and policy. His latest visit was primarily to view this company's material which he booked when in the making last spring.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Balaban and Katz Purchase Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago

Balaban and Katz have purchased the Roosevelt Theatre from Frank J. Godsol of Goldwyn Pictures, who took over the house from the Ascher Circuit several months ago. The house is under lease to Balaban and Katz for five years at a reported rental of $5,000 a week and the change of ownership takes place on January 1. The price paid for the 1,600-seat theatre on the valuable State street location opposite Marshall Field & Company's main store is reported at $1,926,000.

The Roosevelt Theatre was built by the Ascher Circuit as their leading picture theatre about three years ago, and after operating the house for a little over a year leased the building to Balaban and Katz at the record rental of $5,000 a week for a term of five years. The house has been used for extended runs of feature pictures at popular prices.

The many friends of Dee Robinson, well-known manager of Peoria, Ill., will be glad to hear that the major operation he underwent at the Presbyterian Hospital here last week was successful, and they hope to see him back on the job at an early date.

The new movie theatre that Manager Greenough is putting up at Streator, Ill., is expected to be ready for opening early in February.

The Avenue Theatre at 3106 Indiana avenue has been taken over by Foleck and Goldsmith, who also operate the Empress and the State Congress theatres.

Edward Schiebel of the Plum Theatre, Streator, Ill., was a visitor along Film Row last week.

The Hyde Park Theatre at 5314 Lake Park avenue has been taken over by James Plodna. E. J. Walsh has been made manager. The house seats 650. Some improvements will be made.

It is reported along Film Row that Aaron Jones has resigned as managing director of the new McVickers Theatre, which recently passed under Paramount control from Jones, Linick & Schaefer. Mr. Jones will devote most of his time to the interests of his firm and supervise the new building projects that Jones, Linick & Schafer are interested in, as they may build a couple of movie houses next year.

The well known theatrical firm of Marks, Goodman, Marks and Harrison, with offices at 1641 Roosevelt Road, has dissolved partnership and Louis Marks, with Meyer S. Marks, will be known as Marks Brothers in the future. They have taken over the management of the Broadway Strand at 1630 Roosevelt Road, the Orpheum Theatre at 1208 South Ashland avenue and the Marshfield Theatre at 1650 West Roosevelt Road, all west side houses. Julius Goodman and Louis H. Harrison will continue in business under the firm name of Goodman and Harrison, and the Marshall Square Theatre at 2201 Marshall boulevard and the Illington Theatre, 2114 West Twenty-second, will be under their management. These houses are also located on the west side. At one time the firm was interested in building a new movie house on the north side of the city but as yet nothing has materialized in that direction.

Philip Billiet will build a $20,000 movie theatre at Annawah, Ill.

A. W. Stoolman now is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Champaign, Ill., and Charley Pyle has given up his connection with the house to devote his time to the Park Theatre in that city and other houses that he controls at Danville, Ill.

Frank Fisher, well known manager of movie houses at Kewanee and LaSalle, Ill., in the heart of the coal country, will finish the movie house at Janesville and may extend his circuit in Wisconsin.

Joe Goldsmith, Morris Froelich and Louis Mansback have formed the Follies Amusement Company, with offices at 1210 South Michigan avenue, and will operate and maintain theatres and other places of amusement showing pictures and other programs.

Ascher Brothers, who have been quietly getting rid of unprofitable theatres of the circuit for the past few years, are branching out again. Last week they leased the North Center Theatre which is to be built at Lincoln avenue, Belle Plaine and Robey street, from Jacob Horwitz for a period of twenty years from January 1, 1925, when the new house is expected to be ready for the movies. J. E. O. Pridmore will be associated with Architects Oman and Lillenthal in designing and supervising the erection of the house, which will seat 3,000 and be the last word in theatre construction. The house will have a lobby 140 feet in length running through from Lincoln avenue to Robey street, making it one of the largest in the city. It is reported that the Ascher Circuit will pay $55,000 a year rental. Work will start about the middle of December on the new house.

Polka Brothers, who own the movie theatre at Glen Ellyn, Ill., plan to build a 1,000-seat house there. While the village bars Sunday movies, Polka Brothers will go ahead with their plans as soon as they can arrange terms with Sam Bowden, lessee of the movie house now being operated in the village.

FRANK LEVIN

Here is the Adams Theatre, Chicago, manager who each year treats the children in his neighborhood to a Thanksgiving show, with all the fixin's. Remember reading about it a couple of weeks ago?

When the new Washington Square Theatre is finished at Quincy, Ill., for Pinkleman and Cory, chain theatre owners, it is proposed to close the Gem and Savoy theatres on Hampshire street now operated by them and concentrate the business in the new house. Work on the Washington Square Theatre is going ahead rapidly and it is hoped to have the opening early in the spring.

Again the distributors of prize-fight pictures win out, as the management of the Rose Theatre on West Madison street will show the Dempsey-Firpo pictures to the public after securing an injunction from Judge Charles M. Foell restraining the police and city authorities from stopping the exhibition.

Manager Harry Greenman reports a big business at the New Monroe Theatre all last week, as the premiere of the Tom Mix picture, "North of Hudson Bay," was here.

Indiana

At least one and probably two new theatres are planned for South Bend, Ind., in the near future. Representatives of a group of theatrical men who operate a chain of amusement houses in the Middle West were in the city a few days ago looking for a suitable location. The proposed theatre would seat 1,600 to 1,800 and be devoted to feature productions and vaudeville. Another new theatre proposed for South Bend will be devoted exclusively to vaudeville.

Herman J. Arnold, who for several months has been managing the Lyric in Vincennes, completed a deal a few days ago by which he becomes owner and proprietor. The purchase was made from the corporation which took over the Wilkerson-Lyons enterprises. Mr. Arnold for several years managed the Red Mill, one of the first picture theatres in Vincennes, and was manager of the Lyric when it was first opened. Later he and Herman Becker purchased the theatre and then sold it to the Wilkerson-Lyons concern. Pictures will be shown at the Lyric every night in the week, with vaudeville added on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

The Paramount Theatre on West Mulberry street, Kokomo, has been sold by the Grand Theatre Corporation, headed by W. H. Arnold, to Henry Quigley, clerk of Howard county, and F. H. Summer, of Hartford City.

The Arc Theatre, for many years one of the popular picture theatres at Crawfordsville, has been sold by William Heasman to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jackson, owners of the Strand. Heasman bought the theatre in October from Clarence Stroh, who had owned and operated the place for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson bought the Strand in May.

The new Broadway Theatre, 2400 Broadway, Fort Wayne, which has been under construction since April, made its official debut to the "movie" fans of the city with Thomas Meighan in "Back Home and Broke" as the feature. One of the features of the new theatre is a baby carriage "garage," a room just off the lobby arranged for the express purpose of "parking" baby carriages. A women's rest room is connected with the "garage." The theatre is owned by the Broadway Theatre Company, which was organized about a year ago by the men operating the Grand and Transfer theatres. H. L. Mollet is president, J. P. Mollet, manager, and R. H. Mollet, secretary-treasurer.

Ten-year Kansas Ban Lifted on "The Birth of a Nation"

Indications are that "The Birth of a Nation," after ten years of disbarment, will at last be shown in Kansas. The film was submitted for approval to the State Board of Motion Picture Review in Kansas City, Kas., by C. W. Stater, exhibitor, who claims the exclusive Kansas rights to show the film. The film was passed with certain eliminations, although the censors have not yet affixed their signatures to the official card of approval.

The picture was submitted to the present board immediately after it took office last June, but was withdrawn by Stater after it was viewed and before action was taken. The film has had a checkered career in the state. It was barred by two administrations, those of Governors Capper and Allen.

Members of the review board admitted that many eliminations would be made. The showing of the picture in Kansas has been objected to by R. G. Liggett, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, representing a majority of the exhibitors of the state. These objections are based on the nature of the film, which, in Mr. Liggett's opinion, might inspire racial prejudice.

R. W. Cassity, owner and manager of the Opera Hall at Purdin, Mo., has sold the contents of the hall to Willard Ross, who has removed them to a one-story building, which will be remodeled into an up-to-date picture house.

The Gem Theatre, a house for the colored in suburban Kansas City, and owned by Guy Shriner, has been completely and extensively remodeled and redecorated.

C. E. ("Doc.") Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, is making trips through the territory getting new members.

W. D. Fite recently sold his interest in the Novelty Theatre at Wichita, Kas., to Charles Bull, his business partner. They are still mutually interested in the Iris Theatre at Eldorado. Mr. Fite is looking for a new house in a town of about 10,000.

Perry Rhine of the Liberty Theatre, Ft. Scott, Kas., reports a very large business on "Merry Go Round," and patrons asked for a return engagement.

Sam Harding of the Capitol Enterprise Corporation, is in New York in company with Joe Cooper.

The Liberty Theatre, owned by Sam Harding, Kansas City, scored a success by the presentation of a Broadcasting Revue last week. It is a new stunt in this section and all credit goes to Lee D. Balsly, house manager. The musical program at the de luxe performances was broadcast from the theatre.

J. W. Watson of the Benton Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, has installed recently a new pipe organ.

Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman Theatre of this city and Milwaukee, is in New York.

Triple Day and Date Booking in St. Louis on Ray Picture

Floyd Lewis, district representative for Associated Exhibitors, has concluded a deal with Spyros Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company, whereby "The Courtship of Miles Standish" will play day and date at the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol, following a week's run at the Pershing Theatre, Delmar Boulevard near Hamilton Avenue, at a $1.65 top.

Such Is Fame

An amusing incident, but one having a pathetic side as well, came to light as a result of the Universal picture, "Drifting," starring Priscilla Dean, being shown at the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, recently. John A. Schwalm, who guides the destiny of the Rialto, received a letter from a local woman who, after setting forth her qualifications and references, applied for the job of caring for the theatre, explaining that she would do so much cheaper than Priscilla Dean, as she was out of work, etc.

Schwalm, although unable to determine whether the writer of the letter was a practical joker or a practical charwoman, decided to investigate and arranged for a personal interview at his office. It was then that the true facts were learned. The application had been based on a statement which Schwalm was overheard to make that Priscilla Dean was "mopping up" for him at big money. The woman, who was well along in years, took the remark literally, not knowing that the subject of the remark was a movie star. She got the job.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row during the past week included: Dr. Tettley of Flat River and Farmington, Mo.; Tom Evans of Glen Cardon, Ill.; Iscar Wesley, Gillespie, Ill.; W. L. Norman, Benld, Ill.; Tom Reed of Duquoin; George Larmer, attorney for the Reed, Yenn & Hayes Circuit; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Bob Cluster, Johnston City, and Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.

Because of adverse conditions in the coal fields of Illinois and Kentucky and parts of Missouri a number of theatres have closed. Among them are: Auditorium, Dawson Springs, Ky.; Advance, Advance, Mo.; Star, Horse Cave, Ky.; Crystal, Creal Springs, Ill.; Electric, Conway, Mo., and Bijou, Scottsville, Ill. The fact there has been no real demand for soft coal in recent weeks due to the mild weather has played havoc with financial conditions in the coal fields.

The booking arrangement between the Marquette, Palace and Majestic theatres, all located on Franklin Avenue, St. Louis, has been called off. Dr. Harry Hamburg is now looking after the bookings for the Palace and Majestic, while Frank Speros is looking after the Marquette.

W. D. Gladish has purchased the Midway Theatre at Fornfelt, Mo.

The Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, has changed its policy and is now showing a feature picture with four acts of vaudeville.

The Gem Theatre, Overland Park, Mo., has been opened by Ben Woody. It accommodates 350 persons.

Charley Goodnight of De Soto, Mo., was a visitor at the Fox exchange last Wednesday.

Jimmy Grainger, Goldwyn official with Mrs. Grainger, was the guest of William Goldman, owner of the Kings Theatre, at a Thanksgiving Dinner at Goldman's beautiful new home at the corner of Union and Washington Boulevards. Grainger spent a few days in St. Louis.

Cincinnati

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which is making attendance history at Cox Theatre, is in its third week and still going strong. An added feature during the current week is the singing of the choir from St. George's Church at the beginning of the second part of the picture. Three special showings are being given on Dec. 1, 8 and 15, for which the Times-Star, a local daily, is offering tickets at 30 cents to every boy and girl between the ages of 6 and 16 who is a pupil of a public, private or parochial school in the city. Other holdovers for the week are "Rupert of Hentzau" at Gifts, while "Ponjola" is repeating at the Family, having previously been shown at the Strand. Both houses are a part of the Libson chain.

Roy H. Beattie, manager of the Palace Theatre, who has been ill for several months, has again been discharged from the Jewish Hospital and is back in his apartment. Beattie expects to resume his duties at the Palace at an early date.

The Chakeres Amusement Co., Springfield, Ohio, operating the Majestic, one of the largest picture houses in the city, will soon begin work on a 2,500-seat house to play Keith vaudeville and pictures, in opposition to Gus Sun's Regent Theatre. This looks like a real war, as only recently the Regent took Paramount pictures away from the Majestic, thus giving the Regent Paramount and First National. The Majestic has lost its Fox films to the Liberty, which now has Universal, Fox and Goldwyn. The Majestic has the new Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan program, while the Fairbanks, legitimate house, is grabbing up the specials between road show dates.

A. T. Loggie, as a taxpayer, has filed suit in the Common Pleas Court at Steubenville, Ohio, to restrain the city of Steubenville from leasing to the La Belle Amusement Co., headed by George Schaffer, certain city property upon which to erect a theatre. Loggie alleges that the lease was made without securing competitive bids, and that it would be imprudent to rent the city's property for the small sum of $12,500 for the first year and $15,000 annually thereafter.

Harris P. Wolfberg, manager and part owner of the Capitol Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., which was completely destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, announces that the house will be rebuilt, with a seating capacity of 2,500.

The Washington Theatre, Toronto, Ohio, a new house, will be formally opened on Christmas Day with "Merry Go Round." Peter Callageous, formerly an exhibitor of Salem, Ohio, will manage the Washington.

Rudolph Friedrich, one of the most prominent exhibitors of Lorain, Ohio, died suddenly of heart trouble. The deceased owned and operated the Elvira, Standard and Paris theatres in Lorain, and the Park at Amherst. The houses will continue under the management of his widow.

Washington, D. C.

Sunday morning belongs to the churches, in the opinion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. This was inferred from a decision rendered on a request of the Washington Chamber of Commerce for the opening of the picture theatres of this city Sunday morning, December 2, for the entertainment of the soldiers, sailors and marines who came here for the big football game the previous day.

Stock in the Crandall Ambassador and Tivoli theatres is being offered to the public at $100 par, with a 20 per cent. bonus in common stock. The first named has a capital stock issue of $350,000, of which $200,000 is preferred, while the Tivoli is capitalized at $650,000, of which $400,000 is preferred. The stock offered is 8 per cent. cumulative preferred and it is pointed out in the prospectus that no Crandall theatre has ever passed a dividend.

First Egyptian-style Theatre in San Francisco Seats 2,000

The Alexandria, a $350,000 Egyptian theatre, was formally opened at San Francisco on the evening of November 26 and this city now has the first theatre of this type in Northern California. The house is located at Eighteenth avenue and Geary street, in the Park-Presidio district, and forms the nucleus of a new business section of which much is expected.

The opening was made a community affair, with Mayor James Rolph, Jr., delivering the address of the evening. Officers of the four improvement clubs of this district also participated in the dedication. The new theatre has a seating capacity of slightly less than 2,000 and has been built without a balcony, the rear section being curved in stadium fashion to provide an unobstructed view.

The Egyptian idea is carefully carried out in every detail of the house. Sphinxes guard the outer lobby and Egyptian designs are to be found everywhere. One of the interesting personalities of the house staff is the hostess, Evelyn Powers, who presides over the grand foyer, wearing an Egyptian gown and headdress. Music is furnished by Ben Black's Band and an organ presided over by Frederick Rowley.

The Alexandria is owned by Al Levin, who has been connected with the theatre business in this city for years, and George A. Oppenheimer, of George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., distributor in California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands for Warner Brothers' productions. The opening bill included "Going Up," with Douglas McLean, and an "Our Gang" comedy.

The death of Thomas O'Day, which occurred at San Francisco on November 25, came as a shock to members of the picture fraternity, as there was no inkling that he was in any immediate danger from his illness. Although but 42 years old, he had been connected with the picture business for almost twenty years and at the time of his death owned picture theatres at Vallejo and Marysville and was interested in the Hippodrome Theatre in this city. He was associated with G. M. ("Bronco Billy") Anderson in the early days and directed one of the first Wild West pictures ever produced, this being filmed in Niles Canyon, near San Francisco. He is survived by a widow.

Morris Gallas, who has been operating the Isis Theatre at Twenty-first and Mission streets, San Francisco, has secured a ten-year lease on the Majestic Theatre. The house will be remodeled and new equipment will be installed by Walter A. Preddey. This theatre was originally built for the Ackerman & Harris Circuit and immediately following the great San Francisco fire was one of the best known theatres in the city.

E. C. Cunningham, who is remodeling his theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, making selections of new equipment and arranging bookings.

Ralph Grunauer, assistant to Harry Arthur, general manager of West Coast Theatres, paid the San Francisco division a visit recently.

Charles Thall, assistant to A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres of Northern California, recently went to Stockton to confer with Nick Turner, manager of the T. & D. Theatre, and Fred Miller of the State Theatre.

A picture theatre equipped throughout by Walter A. Preddey, of San Francisco, has been opened at Yuba City, Cal., by Mrs. E. Thorndyke. This is the first theatre opened in that place.

The Star Theatre at San Juan, Cal., which has been burned twice, is being rebuilt.

William Englehardt, an exhibitor of Truckee, Cal., recently paid San Francisco one of his infrequent visits, accompanied by Mrs. Englehardt.

George Rust, of Georgetown, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco and announced that he had closed his picture theatre for the winter.

The Star Theatre at Colusa, Cal., has been purchased by L. B. Smith, of Marysville, Cal.

The presentation simultaneously of "A Woman of Paris" at the Granada and California theatres, San Francisco, proved a great success and records for attendance were smashed at the former house. Midnight shows were necessary the opening night to accommodate the crowds and seven shows a day were on the regular schedule. The stage presentation was identical for the week at both houses, the California show starting a half hour earlier than the one at the Granada to enable musicians and principals to make the switch.

The new theatre of Dr. C. H. Lindner being erected at Colma, Cal., will be opened early in January.

Oakland Theatres, Inc., has been incorporated at Oakland, Cal., with a capital stock of $500,000, by Ernest L. Brune, of Berkeley, A. M. Duncan, E. B. Smith, F. M. Moore and M. Giguiere, of San Francisco.

Better Pictures, Inc., has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $200,000 by C. D. Dethiefsen, M. P. Kitchen and E. A. Fitzpatrick.

Seattle

One of the most brilliant affairs of the season was the Northwest premiere of the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Heilig Theatre, November 23. For representative brilliance the audience was as great a success as the picture. Governor Louis F. Hart and a party of eight state officials occupied boxes, as did all prominent city and county executives. Business and professional men, society, and high officials of the navy were present. An audience of 2,000 packed the house and went forth "sold" on the picture, which is doing an absolute capacity business at advance prices, with all seats reserved. A lavish exploitation campaign helped to put it over. The run will be indefinite.

In spite of this heavy competition, and the fact that "first night" was a blustery, rainy one, excellent business was done by "The Spanish Dancer," "The Virginian," "The Midnight Alarm" and "Little Old New York." It is truly a banner week for Seattle film fans.

A rumor is current that Mr. Connell, of Newman & Connell, who recently sold their two houses in Hoquiam, Wash., to Dolan & Ripley, is planning a 500-seat, 10-cent house in downtown Seattle. The site, at Third avenue, near Pike street, was formerly occupied by a cafeteria and is in the same block with the Princess Theatre, which for a time housed 10-cent first-runs last Spring.

Howard S. Clemmer has dolled up his Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, with a brand new electric sign. That's "tellin' the world," Doc!

Art Brown is new house manager at the Rex Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho.

Manager Frank Edwards, of the Winter Garden, hooked up with the entire postal department for his showings of "Loyal Lives." The city's 300 postal employes delivered 50,000 heralds for him. Eighty mail wagons bore mounted one-sheets advertising the picture for a week in advance. To accommodate the crowds the house opens daily at 9:00 and closes at midnight, during the run of the picture. On opening day, Sunday, in spite of tremendous competition, long lineups waited, extending for nearly a block.

A. F. Cormier planned a coup for Thanksgiving. The annual football game between Centralia and Chehalis teams is the big game of the year. Everybody turns out from the sister cities and feeling runs high. Mr. Cormier, therefore, took Alex Singelow, cameraman, down from Seattle to photograph the game, securing a good live special of about 400 feet. This he planned to spring after the close of his Thanksgiving feature, "Why Worry?", and while the game was still fresh in the minds of his patrons, who will welcome a chance to see it over again.

John Hamrich is back from New York, where he spent three weeks conferring with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan officials regarding the recently reported deal which involved his Blue Mouse theatres. Final arrangements are believed to have been made.

Manager Robert W. Bender, of the Columbia Theatre, distributes slips within his house organization for a monthly prize suggestion contest, which brings as its reward at least one cash prize every month.

A HIGH KICKER

See the exhibitor. The exhibitor is kicking. He is kicking at the high price of films. Will the exhibitor's kick reach its mark? Yea, for it packs a mighty wallop! Joe St. Peter, of the Rose Theatre, Everett, Wash., is the kicker in the picture. "Little Joe" is but six feet four. We have no less authority than that of Seth Perkins, manager of Seattle Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, who pals around with Joe, that the little chap is continually kicking about the price of Goldwyn films. Hence Perkins requested a photograph, registering the aforesaid emotion, so that he would not get lonesome when Joe was absent.

Mr. St. Peter is 73 years old. Isn't he an active chap? Perhaps 'tis kicking keeps him so. He is an old timer in the picture business, having started about fifteen years ago with a Nickelodeon in Portland. He has owned houses in Olympia, Centralia, Everett, Bellingham and Port Angeles. He is a life member of the Elks and is president of the State Lodge. He also is a prominent Shriner. If we were Mr. Perkins we should keep a respectful distance from St. Peter's kick, unless we wanted to go visit St. Peter. This chap don't seem to have any golden key.

Two Impressive Ceremonies Mark Philadelphia Opening

Two impressive ceremonies marked the opening of the new $2,000,000 Fox Theatre in Philadelphia during the week. The first of these took place on Sunday evening when an audience of invited guests witnessed in private showing the first film, "The Silent Command," to be shown in the handsome new structure at Sixteenth and Market streets and a program of elaborate scope. The house was filled to capacity and the enthusiastic demonstrations that greeted speakers and film gave ample proof of the warm welcome extended by the Quaker City public to this Fox amusement enterprise, with its beauty and luxurious comfort. Dedication of the building was made by Mayor-elect Freeland Kendrick following a short introduction by former Judge John M. Patterson. The mayor-elect complimented William Fox and the management on the introduction to the city of this highest type of picture establishment.

On Monday, when the theatre was opened to the public, another special program was arranged. The dedication program consisted of a prologue dedicated to William Penn and employed a male ensemble of 20 voices. Then followed a special edition of the Fox News Weekly of luminaries in Philadelphia public life, a soprano soloist, a prologue to the main play and "The Silent Command," produced with the co-operation of a number of naval officers stationed at League Island, who were present at the opening.

The theatre seats 2,500 comfortably, with spacious aisles giving easy access to the seats, luxuriously upholstered. The building also includes a sixteen-story office structure above the auditorium, and is constructed throughout of reinforced steel, concrete, marble and terra cotta. All of the interior doors and trimmings are of furniture steel with baked enamel finish.

A spacious foyer and lobby on the Market street side is finished in Italian marble with solid marble floors to match. The auditorium has a balcony and orchestra with three rows of loge seats and two rows of proscenium boxes, seventy in all, fitted with stuffed floss divans. An artistic decorative scheme predominates throughout the entire house, old rose brocade being used as background against Convent Sienna marble, with blue Belge marble basing. The latest projection machines are used and for the first time in Philadelphia a rubber screen on the stage. The organ is the largest in the city and has the console mounted on a hydraulic pressure elevator which raises the organist six feet above the level of the orchestra platform.

In addition to a diversified show program it is the purpose of Manager Ernesto Rapee to include pretentious prologues to the main features and to be distinctive in themselves.

Over-exertion, caused by chasing a gang of colored boys from the front of his theatre, the Lloyd, in Chester, Pa., caused the death last week of D. D. Neild, who resided at 3339 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia. Mr. Neild, who was lessee and manager of the Lloyd, caught one of the gang and brought him back to the theatre, where he called the police to place him under arrest. As the policeman entered the office, Neild said: "This is the cause of all my trouble. Lock him up and I'll appear against—" The sentence was never finished, for he fell into the arms of the policeman. With the assistance of the projectionist, John McElwee, the body was removed to the hospital where he was pronounced dead, and later the remains brought to his Philadelphia home, from where burial services were held.

When an automobile delivery truck belonging to Oscar Ginns, owner of the Ginn chain of picture theatres in Wilmington, Delaware, took fire last week, twenty-six reels of films as well as the truck were destroyed. The truck, driven by H. H. Grubb, was transporting the films from Philadelphia exchange houses to Wilmington and took fire near Holyoke, Delaware. The loss is estimated at $2,000 for the film and $2,500 for the auto. There was no insurance.

Allegheny Theatre Company Transfers Hollen and Cooper

Paul Hollen, for the past several years manager of the Oakford Theatre at Richwood, W. Va., has been transferred to the Lyric Theatre, Beckley. This theatre is the newest and seventh addition to the chain of houses owned in West Virginia by the Allegheny Theatre Company.

C. E. Cooper, of Hinton, will take charge of the Oakford house. For the past year he has been managing the Temple and Masonic theatres at Hinton, and has been with the Allegheny Theatre Company since its organization.

The company has moved its offices from Hinton to Beckley. P. L. Dysard, general manager, will be located in the last named city.

F. N. McCullough, of the Cameo Theatre, Oil City, Pa., has a method of preparing slides that any exhibitor will find useful. Paint the space to be lettered with white show-card ink. After it is dry, scratch what you have to say on it with a nail. This will show white letters against a black background on the screen.

Eugene Quigley, for the past year manager of the Kearse Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., has resigned his position owing to illness, and has gone to his home in Chicago to undergo further treatment.

Harry C. Gordon, manager of the Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., resigned his position. Mr. Gordon has been manager of the new $400,000 house since its opening on June 3. He has not made known his future plans, but stated that he would assist during December in "breaking in" the new manager to succeed him, whose name at this writing has not been given out by the West Virginia Amusement Company, owners of the theatre.

Leopold Miller will build a new picture theatre at Elm Grove, W. Va. The present theatre building will be incorporated in the new structure.

Charlie Couch, who for years has conducted the Grand Theatre at Carnegie, Pa., is looking for a buyer, as he intends to take his family to California next spring.

Canada

William Cranston of Toronto, pioneer showman and prominent for years in Canadian picture circles, is critically ill with Bright's disease. He is looked upon as the dean of exchange men in the Dominion, his achievements including the taking of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" as road shows throughout the length and breadth of Canada and Alaska on a number of transcontinental tours. After these tours, he was with the Allens at Toronto for a time and then became Canadian general manager for United Artists Corporation, after which he joined up with Ernest Shipman for the distribution of Shipman's Canadian-made productions.

Texas

Robberies of picture theatres in Dallas, Texas, have occurred so frequently that few exhibitors are leaving large sums in the theatre safes. Perhaps the fifth or sixth attempt of its kind was made at the Rialto Theatre, in the loop district of Oak Cliff, suburb of Dallas, recently. As Manager Jack Hadra was preparing to leave the theatre late at night, three suspicious characters parked their auto a few feet from the theatre. Hadra determined to stand his ground and at this moment a city detective came on the scene. Hadra and the detective ran for the men to do battle, but the would-be yeggmen entered their car and sped away. The Rialto, incidentally, lost several hundred dollars when yeggmen blew open the safe recently.

The Happyland Theatre, Dallas, running tab and pictures, has been leased by R. A. Carter, who has renamed it the Lyric.

The Dye, Ford and Rogers panhandle circuit has reopened the Mission Theatre at Wichita Falls, Texas.

A change of interest has occurred at El Paso, Texas. J. M. Edgar Hart has taken over the management of the Unique Theatre, T. M. Hervey relinquishing that job after more than ten years at the helm. For the first time in years, the Unique will offer first-run pictures only.

Work has been started on the new $750,000 picture theatre in Shreveport, La., for the Saenger-Ehrlich interests. It will be rushed to completion. The Saengers' new theatre at Pine Bluff, Ark., is progressing rapidly.

A. R. Powell, who for some years managed the Sugg and Kozy theatres in Chickasha, Okla., has purchased the Highland Theatre at Guthrie, Okla., and now is managing it.

John N. Stewart, who with his brother, M. D. Stewart, operates a theatre in DeLeon, Texas, has bought the building housing the Wonderland Theatre, Kaufman, Texas.

A. L. Middleton, one of the best known small-town exhibitors in the United States, has sold his theatre at DeQueen, Ark., and is looking for a location either in Arkansas, Texas or Oklahoma.

Omaha

The Marcus Loew interests of New York are given control of the Empress Theatre of Omaha within fifteen days, according to the terms of the decree filed by Federal Judge Woodrough at Omaha more than a week ago. As previously reported in this paper, Loew sued for possession of the Empress in the federal court at Omaha, claiming that he had a purchase contract with W. N. LeDoux, former owner, before the latter sold the theatre to the World Realty Company of Omaha. The decree directs LeDoux now to deliver the assignment to Samuel A. Shirley, Loew's Omaha representative.

E. F. Blazer, attorney for LeDoux, said an appeal bond had been filed with the circuit court of appeals at St. Louis. If this is not approved, he said, the Loew interests would get possession at once. Otherwise they would have to wait until the appeal is decided. The appeal cannot be heard until next June. S. A. McIntyre, local manager for Metro, said Metro is prepared to put in its pictures at once if given control.

Judge Woodrough's decree further directs B. H. Dunham of the federal court to determine what if any damages have been sustained by the Loew interests in the alleged failure of LeDoux to carry out his original sale contract with Loew.

The Palm Theatre, Omaha, was damaged by fire about $2,000. Fortunately the blaze started at 1:15 A. M. and so the house was vacant. The cause is unknown, but it is thought someone may have thrown a lighted cigar or cigaret on the floor at the last performance in the evening.

Children Banned from Dancing in Watertown, N. Y., Theatres

Some of the Watertown, N. Y., exhibitors found themselves in hot water the past week when twelve children of that city, all under 16 years of age, were summoned before Judge H. F. Porter and charged with a violation of the law by dancing at amateur productions in several of the local theatres. Some months ago, considerable attention was aroused when a young girl who had been dancing in the theatres of that city, was brought before the court, and as a result the child was ordered to discontinue the practice. It appears that the theatres have been offering prizes and drawing good crowds. But this practice will now have to cease, according to the courts.

Many exhibitors in northern New York will regret to learn that Edgar B. Haines, who has been covering this section of the state since last May for Universal, has quit his position and gone to Newark, N. J., where he will enter the real estate business. Mr. Haines drove his territory and was always ready to help an exhibitor out whether it be in the projection room, or ushering. Many exhibitors will recall his excellent photographs of northern New York scenery.

With a prize of $25 to the person who guessed the identity of the greatest number of business men of the city, who appeared in celluloid, with backs turned, the Avon in Watertown, N. Y., did a whoppin' business the past week. The idea was entirely new locally and caught on in wonderful shape. This week the picture is being shown with the faces of the men, so that everyone, whether prize winner or not will know how good a guess he or she made.

Co-operating with the Mark Strand in Albany, the trolley company of that city assisted materially in the first of the Junior Movies last Saturday, when over 800 children were splendidly entertained under the auspices of the Albany Mothers' Club. Without cost, the trolley company brought all of the children from the orphanages to the theatre. Girl Scouts served as ushers. The next Junior Movie will be held on the morning of December 29 at the same theatre and "Circus Days" will be shown.

Many exhibitors in this section have booked "The Chronicles of America." The list includes the American of Troy, Park of Hudson, Orpheum of Amsterdam, Royal of Albany, Lincoln, Pearl and Happy Hour of Schenectady, Robbins-Eckel of Syracuse, Olympic of Watertown, Avon of Utica, Strand of Pittsfield, as well as Lou Buettner's entire circuit.

Every child in Watertown who brought a bundle of used clothing to the Avon of that city last Wednesday afternoon was admitted free of charge to a showing of "Circus Days." The bundles were later on handed over to the Salvation Army and distributed among the poor people. There was a similar plan at the same theatre last year which netted something more than 1,000 bundles. The mayor of the city heartily endorsed the scheme.

Some idea of the success which has attended the management of the Leland Theatre in Albany by Oscar Perrin can be gained from the fact that Mr. Perrin has now decided to open the gallery of the house and charge the same admission as on the first floor and balcony. And what is more, Mr. Perrin is getting it not only from the men but from the women. The gallery used to resemble a dungeon, but fresh paint and lights have made it attractive to the extent that patrons prefer to sit there to standing.

"Little Old New York" made a record at the Lincoln in Troy last week and is being held over for this week. In Schenectady the same picture last week established a new box office record at the State. In Rome it opened on Thanksgiving Day for 50 cents, the highest price ever paid for a picture in that city, and played to capacity audiences.

It's a safe bet that Oscar Perrin, who manages the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany, will not be obliged to do much in the way of Christmas shopping for his children this year. Every souvenir that comes Mr. Perrin's way goes home to gladden the hearts of the children.

William Shirley, of the Farash Theatre Corporation in Schenectady, announces that he has bought the entire year's output of F. B. O. Mr. Shirley is entertaining Al Boasberg of New York this week.

A singer, with slides, was tried out at the Albany Theatre here last week, and judging from the hearty reception given, the idea will be further employed by Samuel Suckno, owner of the house.

Morris Silverman, who has made a small fortune out of two theatres in Schenectady, now is dickering for the Barcli in that city, a house which was recently purchased by R. V. Erk of Ilion. It is said that the house is being held for $25,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Vineberg observed their wedding anniversary last Wednesday night by attending the Elks' ball in Albany. Incidentally, it was the first night that Mr. Vineberg had taken off from his duties as manager of the Mark Strand in many a week.

Among the visitors in Albany last week was M. E. Troy, who runs houses in Chatham and Hudson. And another who greeted the representative of the Moving Picture World was L. L. Connors of Cambridge.

Court Decides Against Loew in Buffalo Theatre Dispute

Under a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals, the Golde Clothes Shop, Inc., is given the right of possession of the Main street lobby of Loew's State Theatre. Simon Fleischmann, attorney for the Golde interests, asserts he has the right to ask that a writ be issued to the sheriff to force the Loew interests out of the lobby in Main street and put the Golde Clothes Shop there. The heads of the Golde interests in New York will be consulted, however, before such a move is made. The legal battle between the Loew's Buffalo Theatres, Inc., and the Golde Clothes Shop, Inc., has been waged for over two years and has been in every court in the state. Maurice C. Spratt, who died last Monday, was counsel for the Loew interests.

Sydney Samson, president of the Film Board of Trade, has appointed the following committee to arrange for a Get-Together Dinner-Dance late this month: Henry W. Kahn, Metro; Bob Wagner, Hodkinson; Clayton P. Sheehan, Fox; Howard F. Brink, Educational, and Mr. Samson, Bond. James Speer of Dependable exchange has been appointed a member of the Film Board of Trade.

Harry Abbott has closed the Criterion Theatre, refusing longer to sink money into a losing venture. Mr. Abbott is about the tenth to try and put this theatre over.

In order that Ben Berinstein would get his show on the screen in time for the evening show at the Majestic, Elmira, L. Mullen, booker at the Renown exchange, drove his new Chevrolet all the way from Buffalo to Elmira with the film, arriving a few minutes before the evening performance started. Then he started home with the thanks of the management.

Eddie Weinberg, former manager of the local Strand, is alive and well in London, according to a post card which arrived in town this week. Ed is manager of one of the Universal houses in the British metropolls. He is stopping at the Hotel Cecil.

Charlie Hayman had a terrible time in Niagara Falls on Thanksgiving Day. His show failed to arrive and he became so worried over it that he could not eat a thing from the table packed high with Thanksgiving delicacies.

The old Academy Theatre in lower Main street, recently opened by Al Sherry, is attracting S. R. O. business. This house was put down as another impossibility but Al is putting it over like a house afire.

James Cardina received many congratulations on his beautiful neighborhood house, the New Varsity, which was opened to the public Tuesday evening, November 27. The house was literally buried in flowers on opening night.

Record Attendance Marks in Milwaukee Thanksgiving Week

Thanksgiving week found Milwaukee houses playing some of the biggest attractions of the season, with record attendance marks being generally set as a result. Ascher Merrill, managed by Roy C. MacMullen, selected the holiday season for the opening of "Little Old New York," and true to expectations and its run in other cities, the picture shattered all records and gave indications that it would enjoy a healthy run of three or four weeks.

Starting Friday, Nov. 23, the film drew 4,200 patrons on the opening day, most of them social and business leaders of the city who responded to special invitations from Mr. MacMullen. Saturday and Sunday even eclipsed this mark, approximately 4,500 being on hand on each day.

Running neck and neck with the Merrill were Saxe's Strand, the Alhambra, Garden and Butterfly, other downtown houses, each featuring unusual programs.

At the Strand, Eddie Weisfeldt held over for a second week "Flaming Youth" after that picture had set a mark for attendance during its first week. The film equalled the attendance figure established by "Safety Last," Harold Lloyd's picture which figured in a sensational run at the Strand several months ago. As a result of the decision to hold "Flaming Youth" for a second week, Mr. Weisfeldt postponed "Three Ages."

At the Alhambra, the offering was "If Winter Comes" and attendance during the first few days indicated that the public would demand a second week of this picture from Leo A. Landau, manager. The Garden, Mr. Landau's other downtown house, meanwhile showed "The Acquittal" and packed them in likewise.

The Butterfly, with an extensive advertising campaign to help it regain its former position as a first run house, featured Mae Murray in "Fashion Row," and according to A. J. Cooper, new owner, drew capacity.

The admission tax war in Wisconsin has taken on a new meaning with the seizure of the Strand Theatre at Kenosha by the Government for the alleged non-payment of tax. According to A. H. Wilkinson, internal revenue collector at Milwaukee, the theatre will be sold shortly to satisfy the claim of the government for $2,212.

an Eight-Cylinder Birthday

What gross did your pictures turn over for Spanish markets in 1923? Didn't you get just about all the traffic would stand? And by what per cent will you increase your gross in 1924? And how will you get it—simply by asking for it? Or by building up through public, press, and trade a definite demand for your pictures which you can readily translate into more money for 1924?

The medium is at your hand in CINE-MUNDIAL. Without a competitor, without a contemporary, it is the beloved film dictator for the trade, the press, the public in all Spanish speaking countries. Throw your Spanish campaign into high with the eight-cylinder birthday book which CINE-MUNDIAL is bringing out for January, 1924, with a paid circulation of 50,000 copies. Fifty thousand salesmen telling Spain and Latin-America What's What in American films for 1924. Get aboard their eight-cylinder machine before December 10.

Rick Ricketson Wins Paramount Prize With Huge Two-State Touring Pageant

OFFERING prizes aggregating $700 for the best stunts worked by a Paramounteer on Paramount Month brought out hundreds of good ideas and landed thousands of dollars worth of publicity. The first prize could have been awarded immediately following the close of the contest, but the decision as to the other three winners held up the judges. These were Claud Saunders, director of exploitation; A. M. Bottsford, advertising manager; Charles E. McCarthy, publicity manager; L. J. Bamberger, assistant to Saunders, and Sam D. Palmer.

They have announced that the awards have been made to Rick Ricketson, Denver; Russell B. Moon, New Haven; Kenneth O. Renaud, Salt Lake City, and Joseph T. Emerling, Omaha, in that order. The prize money was split $250, $200, $150 and $100.

Rick Never Headed

Ricketson took his cue from the constant appeal of his chief to promote the small towns as well as the cities. It has been Mr. Saunders' constant thought to persuade his exploitation staff to help the little houses, which most sorely need such help, and Rick's stunt was planned to provide each town within reach with the nucleus of a local celebration of some sort that would put over the idea of Paramount Month.

Early in the summer he arranged with the Willys-Knight factory to loan him a chassis on which he could build a tableau float. This was provided with advertising material for Paramount and carried a gas tank for the inflation of balloons, a generator and searchlight and a bombing machine.

Planned Ahead

Through correspondence and personal solicitation Rick sold the idea to his entire territory. The Mountain States Theatres Corporation agreed to provide two additional floats and supply thirty framed banners and cutouts provided that Ricketson would tour their territory first. After that he could have the floats and banners for the other towns.

Other theatres were tied to some local scheme, a baby show here, a popularity contest there, and a beauty contest somewhere else. Each local manager planned what he could, and where possible hooked the idea to some civic enterprise, such as the opening of a new paved highway at Golden, fairs of Weld and Adams counties and the Pike's Peak Festival. At Grand Junction an escort of cowboys and girls met the tourists and guided them into town, the Mayor of Delta turned over the keys of the city, and in default of anything definite, the Mayor of one town would send a message to his brother in the next stopping place and the delivery of the message would be the feature of that event.

A Continuous Performance

On September 1, Ricketson started out to cover the territory, working first for the Mountain States, as agreed. Four, six and even eight towns were made in a single day, the events being timed so that the touring floats could come into a town, head the parade, stir things up and rush on to the next booking.

On arrival in each town the salute was fired, the special stunts were observed, the parade toured the business streets, and then two six foot gas balloons would be sent up, with passes or fan fotos attached. These balloons were purchased in bulk and by this means the cost was cut to $1.25 for the pair.

As soon as the balloons were released, the trio of floats would rush off to the next town, and hold a similar celebration there. In the early evening the searchlight would be put to good use.

The Willys-Knight Company had broadcasted instructions to all agents to line up the W-K owners, and at no point did the line drop below twenty cars in support of the floats and often rose to seventy or eighty. The cut shows the head end of a 75-car parade in Canon City, with the Mayor riding with Rick.

Over in Wyoming

It was not possible to cover all of Wyoming as well as Colorado, so Rick arranged with the Rialto Theatre, Casper, to handle a popularity contest with a trip to Hollywood as the prize. The usual subscription vote was used, and at a cost of about $500 the Rialto not only did a huge current business, but sold off about $6,000 worth of tickets, many if not most of which will be used during the dull pre-Christmas days.

The winner was sent to Hollywood and a pictorial record was made of the trip, which included a trip to Portland by water and a return from there. Under the title of "Miss Wyoming in Hollywood," the winner was featured in a personal scenic, which was run with a trailer made up of scenes from the current product to the end of the year.

As the contest was statewide and the papers taking news service from the Casper paper used the story daily, thousands of lines of publicity were given all of the exhibitors in the state at no cost to the theatres or Paramount. For that matter the entire cost to Paramount did not require a fourth figure for its expression, and brought in publicity worth a hundred times the cost. Rick earned his $250 and more.

After a Word

Close-Up, the house organ for Paramount theatres department, is after "pretentious," and Mort. Bloomstock is on the trail of those who misuse this habitually misused word.

It does not mean "elaborate," but rather connotes trickery and the effort to impress through misrepresentation. Paramount managers are being urged to drop it from their vocabularies, and it would be well if others not under Harold B. Franklin's observation followed suit. Put it into the same pen with "replica"—and lock the door on the outside.

Remember that 1924 is going to need a Midnight Matinee. Don't overlook this real money.

RICK RICKETSON'S PAGEANT CAR AT THE HEAD OF THE PARADE IN CANON CITY COLORADO

You will note the Mayor riding in the car, silk hat and all. Most of the mayors along the route were glad to cooperate because in every town the pageant was hooked to some local event. In Canon City the Daily Record offered cash prizes for the best floats and seventy-five cars were lined up in the parade. This stunt was worked forty times in Colorado and Wyoming.

Planted Skeleton of Capt. Applejack

Thirty-three different angles were worked by Oral D. Cloakey for Strangers of the Night when that picture came to the Regent Theatre, Ottawa. Some of the numbers are two or more parts of a related stunt, but they are all separate items.

His most sensational stunt was to plant the skeleton of Capt. Applejack in an excavation along with a heavy iron box. This was fixed with the police, but apparently not with the workmen on the job, and the result was a sensation when the steam shovel dug up the skeleton, which was carted off to the police station. The following day the box was forced open and found to contain four passes to the Regent for Strangers of the Night. The first day newspaper stories were guardedly worded, because the reporters evidently had their suspicions, but about a third of a column was pretty good, even at that, and the papers were able to save space when the box was opened the following day and the contents reported.

Mr. Cloakey also worked the treasure hunt as outlined in the Bonns-Ferguson yellow kids, but he added his own touch by requiring that the finder of the treasure be in possession of a copy of the co-operating newspaper in which the location of the treasure was hinted at. The treasure was represented by certificates good for a pair of seats or cash sums ranging from one to ten dollars. All had to be presented to Capt. Applejack himself at the newspaper office, which was the excuse for a picturesque pirate in the newspaper's counting room.

A special screening was made for the press, and two hundred well known persons were invited to swell the audience. Both newspapers were given co-operative pages, and a safe company gave both its windows to a double display. One side showed an old-fashioned safe with the door wrenched off and a burglar departing with his loot. The other side showed one of the safes manufactured by the exhibiting company, with the burglar's tools all broken, the safe proof against strangers of the night.

A different angle was found for a sporting goods store. Here a tent was set up in a woodland dressing. Inside the ten was a figure with a gun, sharply silhouetted against the canvas wall by a strong light. This stranger of the night was a stuffed bear.

A burglar alarm system supplied its red emergency cars for perambulators and placarded every client's home or place of business with the statement that "These premises are protected against Strangers of the Night by the Dominion Messenger and Signal Co." The same company also occupied a vacant store window with a display of the apparatus used in its system. The emergency cars also invaded Hull, just across the river, where you go to get a drink.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AFTER a week's rest, during which time they aided in the broadcasting through Station WEAF of the Brooklyn Mark Strand first radio concert, the members of the singing chorus are back again, appearing in three numbers on the program with Mary Pickford's "Rosita." Jerry and Her Piano Quartette were held over for this program, making a line-up of four musical presentations in addition to the Topical Review and a special comedy on the supper show. Out of the two-hour show the musical part took up twenty-three minutes, the Review eight minutes and the feature one hour and twenty-nine minutes.

The Piano Girls, with pianos set at different angles from the week previous, opened without lights excepting individual baby spots which were placed in the instruments to pick out only the face of the player. Deep blue plush cyclorama was used as background to contrast the drop of last week. After a minute two light amber and two light pink spots overhead dimmed up, followed by red borders and blue footlights. This lighting remained to the close, as only two numbers, "Bit by Bit" and "Canadian Capers," were played. Seven minutes, with no lighting from the front.

The Symphonized Jazz, five minutes, was special arrangement of "Moonlight Kisses" and "No, No, Nora." Two 150-ampere Mustrum floods from the booth, magenta color, flooded the entire stage, with one dome flood of same amperage hitting the right half of orchestra with orange and another dome flood on left half with light blue. Purple borders large stage. Six color blend spots and three box lamps of same color hitting silver draw curtains throngh the glass traps across the stage behind the foots, shooting from beneath. Two arch spots, color blend, hitting silver draws from the sides. Transparent fabrics columns at proscenium arch color blend top and bottom.

As Thanksgiving Day falls in this week, Krenser's "Prayer of Thanksgiving," sung by the chorus, lends the proper atmosphere. The back drop was neutral blue, with set piece landscape winter scene five feet high across stage one foot in front of the drop. Church with transparent windows, lighted from behind, at the left. The chorus of eighteen girls costumed as Pilgrims entered from th eleft in twos, threes and fours, grouping center stage for the song. X-rays of small stage light blue. Two light blue box lamps on the set, with two color blend arch spots shooting across from side to side. Large borders green-blue. Two dome Menstrum spots, one deep blue and one purple, on musicians alone. Light blue transparent windows. At finish the number was closed in by silver draws.

After the chorus, seated in with the orchestra, had sung Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" for Armistice Memorial scenes in the Review, the "Rosita" atmospheric prologue was presented. Backed up by deep blue plush cyclorama was a huge set-piece fan of Spanish design, upon which were hung several bright shawls. A raised platform copied from the photoplay was in front of the fan, and grouped around this at opening were the eighteen singers in Spanish costume. They sang "Spanish Serenade," and at finish Mlle. Francelli, made up as Mary Pickford in the picture, came on from left and onto the platform, as a basso, made up as male support in the film, entered from right. Dancer went through "La Rosita" dance, with interpolated business, and then followed specially written song, "Rosita," by the bass, with a close by the ensemble. A 150-ampere light blue flood from the dome covered the stage, with magenta x-rays, and rose and amber spots from the sides on the shawls. Overhead spots on the set were amber, orange, light blue and light pink. Front lights included two booth Mestrum floods, orange, on sides and orchestra. Two light amber transparent windows, and red borders large stage.

NOW IT'S PARAMOUNT WITH THE ORIGINAL COSTUME

John E. Kenebeck borrowed a costume from Pola Negri to put over The Spanish Dancer in Des Moines and used it for window display after letting it be worked at a Spanish Surprise Party given by one of the college societies

Has Sorority Party for Spanish Dancer

John E. Kenebeck, who has been doing unusually good work for Paramount in the Des Moines territory, has been promoted. When the exploitation staff was shot to pieces John was sent out to Australia to see what he could do out there.

Just before he left he used a novel stunt for The Spanish Dancer, about to play at the Des Moines Theatre. He wanted something out of the way so he persuaded one of the societies of Drake University to give a Spanish Surprise Party at the home of one of the local graduates the Friday before the opening. Members of the sorority and society people were present in numbers and the surprise was a preview of the picture and the display of the wedding dress worn by the star in the picture, and which had been loaned by the Lasky organization. This was worn by one of the members of the society. After this use it was put on a dummy and set into a dry goods store window as shown in the cut.

WHAT CAR DO YOU SUPPOSE TRILBY HAS? A LAFAYETTE

One of the girl ushers at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, looked almost as much like Andree Lafayette as she thought she did, so they dressed her up, put her in a Lafayette car and sent her around town to tell of the coming of the play.

Trilby Model's Car Match for Her Name

Things came pretty soft for one of the girl ushers at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, the time they played Trilby. She looked something like Andree Lafayette and the resemblance was heightened by the costume they gave her. The Lafayette Motors Co. made it a family affair by donating a car and a banner told that Andree rode in a Lafayette, "of course."

When she was not driving around she was used in the lobby to preside over the shoe and stocking displays, the usual window hookups being used in the stores tied to this scheme.

Special work consisted of a painted sign on the side of the theatre and a 24-sheet board in one of the very few spots available for posting in Market street. There was a lavish display of paper elsewhere and the co-operating concerns took extra newspaper space to ride on the general campaign.

Ray Coffin, for Richard Watson Tully, and Charmes M. Thall, publicity manager for the West Coast Theatres, collaborated on the stunts and put over the production with a big bang.

Poster Competition Helps in Three Ways

Making a poster competition the chief publicity stunt on Jackie Coogan in Circus Days put the picture over for the Rialto Theatre, Champaign, Ill.

The town has the State college and Charles Pyle, with some help from Al Sobler, hooked the art class to a practical competition. The university paper got back of the idea and put it over to the students, and the local sheets came in with comment when the best examples were displayed in store windows. That stunt alone might have put the picture over, but Mr. Pyle got hold of a woman clown and sent her around the streets with a team of goats and a trained duck, all three with clown ruffs around their necks.

The tobacco hook-up was used and the Potash and Perlmutter Firpo stunt was adapted to a local football stunt. The explanation as to why the U. of I. would win the coming football game was that they had the best line-up, just as the Rialto had the best show. It was not very cleverly adapted, but it was an appeal to college pride and so it helped.

Trailed

Because Potash and Perlmutter in stage form had pleased Great Falls, Mont., among other places, William Steele, of the Liberty Theatre, spent most of his advertising money to tell his world that the screen version was better than the original with "Much as you enjoyed the play, you will admit that the picture is much better."

They came to find out and most of them voted in the affirmative.

Rented a Store

An entirely new twist was given the window stunt when The Green Goddess played the Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J.

The Goldwyn exploitation man suggested a reproduction of the scene of the airplane crash in a window in a vacant store, and the Distinctive studio made the set and the figures of George Arliss and the others who figure in that scene.

It attracted so much attention that the store was hired by a man who figured that if half as many looked into his window it was a good location.

When the Capitol Theatre, the T. & D. house in Sacramento, played Dulcy, M. B. Hustler tied an automobile accessories store to the picture with the urge not to be a Dulcy, but to buy a specified brand of tire chains and avoid skidding. It did not cost much for the card and it helped popularize the play with motorists, who urged others not to be Dulcys when they were caught without chains.

CLOWN AND CARTOONS HELP JACKIE COOGAN IN CIRCUS DAYS IN ILLINOIS

A Poster Competition, open to the students of the University of Illinois, got publicity in the local ad. college papers as well as in store windows, for the Rialto Theatre. This was built up with a ballyhoo as shown in the companion cut, a woman dressed as a clown steering a goat team and a clown duck through the streets. The tobacco hook-up was employed to good advantage.

Baby Peggy Is Now Subscription Agent

Using the Baby Peggy Doll to get subscriptions is a new form of co-operation which appeals to the newspapers and brings the theatres using these comedies a lot of exploitation not charged against the house.

The Evening Sentinel, Milwaukee, gave a doll for five six months' subscriptions, provided the names were new, and the Atlantic City Press Union used a gross of the dolls on a similar scheme. Both used page displays to put the appeal over. Papers in Lancaster, Pa., and Rochester, N. Y., have used the stunt with similarly good results, and the idea is spreading through the efforts of Century Comedies publicity.

The newspapers naturally have to play up Peggy's screen appearances at the local houses, and in some instances they have handled the Baby Peggy Club idea as a further exploitation.

All the manager has to do is to book in the comedies.

Having worked out the Peggy resemblance contests, the publicity department is planting the subscription scheme with a Baby Peggy Sundae in a formative stage to follow this. A picture on this page shows how the sundae worked in the window of one of the most popular candy stores in the theatrical section of Broadway. The photographer did not bring out the advertising matter very clearly, but in addition to the seven photographs there are two dolls and three window cards, a good score for a single window.

WHAT THE BABY PEGGY SUNDAE GOT IN ONE STORE

This window is in the heart of theatrical Broadway, New York, and scores seven photographs, two dolls and three cards. The cards are supplied by Century comedies. The concoction costs a quarter and is said to be worth the price and more.

Uses Full Pages in Neighborhood Towns

Most managers think that they are hustling along at top speed when they take a full page in the home town paper now and then. J. C. Wodetsky, of the Murray Theatre, Richmond, Ind., fades them with four full-page displays for The Bright Shawl in as many feeder towns, Centreville, New Paris, Fountain City and Boston. Each page also carried a large cut of Harold Lloyd on the facing page as a compliment.

Mr. Wodetsky writes that this out-of-town drive builds business every day and is especially good for the supper shows on Saturday and Sunday. It gives him a standout on the swing shows on those two days, and runs up his box office record most pleasingly.

He adds that this is not an experiment, but that he has made it work in Bridgeport and New Haven, when he was with Poli, and in Kalamazoo, with the Butterfield circuit. Having given it a full try, he is passing it along for the rest.

Small-town full pages do not cost a great deal of money, and all they pick up is pure velvet. The manager who overlooks full drives on his surrounding territory is losing money, unless he happens to be packing his house every day, every show, with local patronage.

Mr. Wodetsky sends in a personal letter head that is as shrinkingly quiet as a calliope at a baby's funeral. It's terribly loud, but it tells the world that 21 years of experience in promotion has converted him to publicity ideas even on a personal letter head. It is not that he is swell headed. He is merely taking some of his own medicine, and the Murray owners will tell you that his medicine is a pretty good tonic.

A Pathe Release

AN EFFECTIVE FRONT BANNER BASED ON THREE SHEETS

This was arranged by Stanley Brown, of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, from the paper on Why Worry and after that all that worried him was getting the money safely over to the bank, and he does not mind cares of that description.

A Waiting List

Tod Browning, the First National franchise holder in New Haven, has something new. You've read until you were tired about the tremendous crowds around a show window. Tod tells of a waiting list.

When he had Ashes of Vengeance at the Olympia he decided to tell about it, so he hooked a store to a resemblance contest, with Norma (alias Omar), pearls and a wrist watch and box parties as the prizes. Then he got an "original" costume for the window and was sitting pretty, but the store people had to call a cop. The cop saw to it that each person got a good look and then made way for the next.

And he further adds that the policeman on duty at the theatre estimated that at times the line in front of the box office was a thousand persons long. To prove it he submits a photograph of a crowd of 1,023 persons, the odd 23 being onlookers on the other side of the lobby.

Didn't Worry

With Irene "herself" as competition, L. A. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., almost broke his record on Dr. Jack with Why Worry? and at almost no cost, since he got the bulk of his space free. It took two days of hard rains to keep him below the top figures on the other Lloyd picture.

Part of his space he won with a hook-up page with the merchants and he got a total of three-fourths of a page with the old names-in-the-classified-ads stunt.

Working Again

The laughing Okeh record was dug out to knock them for a goal at the Strand Theatre. Two of the laughing heads of Harold Lloyd were placed on either side of the instrument, and the record was run with a repeater.

H. C. Farley remembered that this had worked well in other places with Dr. Jack, and he was pleased to find that it did just as much for Why Worry?

GETTING AN ENTIRE WINDOW FOR COMEDIES ALONE

The Newman theatres in Kansas City got a full window for Lloyd Hamilton and Mermaid Comedies shown at their theatres, and put a permanent kick in the announcements of their small features through the coming season. They make money on comedies.

Took Entire Window for Comedy Program

Realizing that comedies sell many more tickets than most managers realize, the Newman theatres in Kansas City framed a window in a kodak-pen shop for the Mermaid Comedies, which they feature on their programs.

There were pictures of the stars, a few scenes, mention of the most imminent comedies and dates for the next booking, and the passersby got the idea that comedies must be worth while if a theatre went to so much trouble.

With the Newman, Royal and Star all using Mermaids, this comparatively slight effort gave all three houses a stinger for the small features that will last well into the season. Sure they are only two reels long, but if a two-reeler can sell tickets, why not talk about them even if you do happen to regard them as bobtails? Help them to make all the money for you that you can get. Most managers would be surprised could they get actual figures on the direct drawing value of the comedies, which often sell over a non-appealing feature title. The Newman knows.

Atlanta Theatre in Yellow Sheet

Although most of the tried out stunts in the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan "yellow sheets" are those worked during the run of the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, makes the grade with an exceptionally good house front on The Green Goddess. This has been reproduced and attached to the book. The Metropolitan has every reason to be all swelled up. The cut on this page gives a better idea of the stunt. Smoke can be used if incense pots can be put where the painted braziers now stand. Since this is atop the marquise the use of incense is not necessary. Any material that will make a heavy, visible smoke can be used, or a steam pipe can be run up from the boiler room if the latter is conveniently located. Attachment can also be made to a radiator.

The yellow book on The Green Goddess is a clash of color schemes, but it is worth a lot of money to the man who is going to play the Arliss production, for it lists stunts suitable for any type of theatre and at costs ranging from almost nothing to about half what the idea is worth. Each of these yellow books seem to be a little better than the last one, and they reflect great credit upon the editors, Eddie Bonns and W. R. Ferguson.

Fed the Stars

Booking Potash & Perlmutter into his Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, the same week Carr and Bernard were at the drama house in the next volume, Col. Fred Levy gave a luncheon to the stellar lights and invited others of prominence to complete the party.

And, in spite of his efforts, the story of the luncheon got into the papers rather extensively, and somehow it did not hurt business in the least. For that matter it helped both screen and stage play.

A Goldwyn Release

THE BEST FRONT WORKED ON THE GREEN GODDESS

This is from the Metropolitan theatre, Atlanta, and was selected for use in the "yellow sheet" on the Arliss play as being the best yet shown on this feature. It suggests a lot of work, but the receipts paid for the labor cost and material with a profit.

This Auto Dealer Advertised Penrod

It is to be taken for granted that there is always a free matinee on Penrod and Sam. But you can make this special work better if you give it a new form. Pass the cigars to Sid Lawrence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids.

E. C. Sackett is an automobile dealer. Sackett was given the passes and advertised that he wanted every child in the Furniture City to see this wonderful story of childhood days.

He was so anxious that all the kiddies should get a chance that he offered free tickets. All any child had to do was to come to the store with the name of some person who was in the market for an automobile, the details as to the type of car he desired and the make of his present boat.

Of course, there was a lot of duplication and some deception, but Sackett got a lot more information than the big display advertisement he used cost him, and Lawrence contributed the tickets, which cost him less than the newspaper space would have done.

And then you can take an encore on the next picture with the piano dealer, who is always willing to pay for prospect names, and perhaps the sewing machine man can be interested for a third try, if you do not space them too closely together.

The beauty of the scheme is that it gives the salesman a chance for an approach. Instead of a cold start he opens with "Little Willie Brown tells us you are looking for a sedan." The prospect may say that Willie is a gifted little liar, but he has started talking. That's the hardest part, and that's over with. Tell that to the dealer when you take him the idea.

Redder'n Red

Edward Lewis, of Keith's 81st Street Theatre, New York, used 800 red bulbs under the marquise when he played Goldwyn's Red Lights and used two red floods on the roof to catch attention before you got to the house. Cutout letters from the posters proclaimed the title on three sides of the marquise.

He also used a novel introduction to the film. A tiny point of red was thrown on the screen and irides out until the entire auditorium was flooded, then the picture was thrown on the screen and the red light dimmed down. It was atmosphere and color combined.

Looked Far Ahead to Get a Feature

Foresight being better than hindsight, a medal should be pinned on Robert Slote, manager of Crandall's Strand Theatre, Cumberland, Md. He looked so far ahead that he could see around the turn of the road.

Managers have reported their utilization of the local representative in the annual Atlantic City beauty contest. Slote made his candidate and then used her.

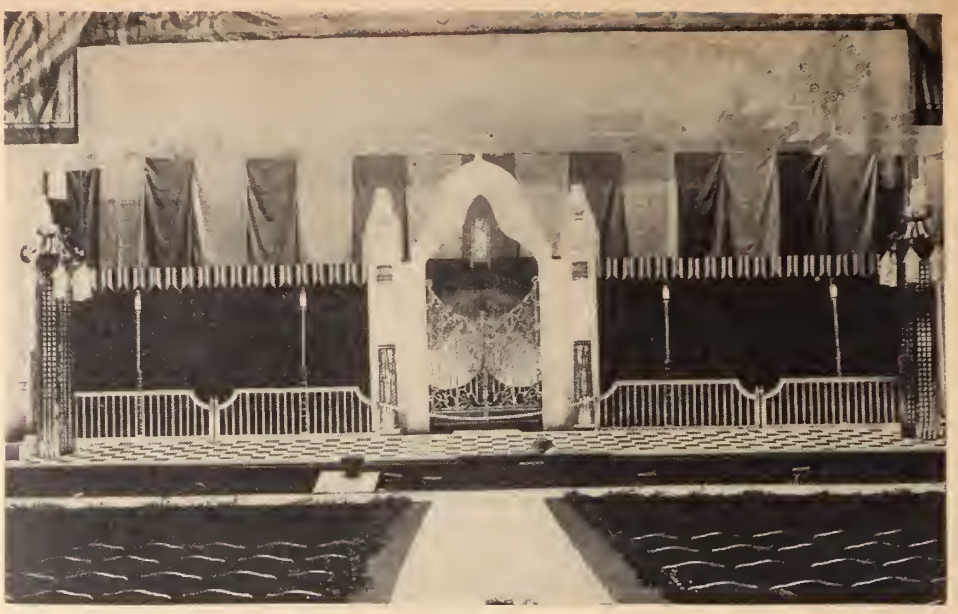
Long before the date of the contest he persuaded the local merchants that it would be a big thing if Cumberland were represented in the gathering of bathing beauties. He was willing to do all the work and stand his share of the expense, but he wanted the moral support of all the merchants and some slight financial backing. They would show the huge crowds at Atlantic City that Cumberland was there with the best of them.

The idea took hold. The merchants told Slote to go the limit, and they came in with window and newspaper advertising. Slote generously offered to loan the Strand for the selection of the town's representative from among the competing beauties. That seemed to be a good idea, so he was told to go to it.

Then it struck Slote that it might be a good idea to add a fashion show, and help advertise the merchants who were sharing the cost of the campaign. They applauded the idea and promised the models and the gowns and other details. They also cooperated in a double truck advertising the dual event and their connection with it.

Slote built a black and white setting which is reproduced on this page, and provided the essential runway. The models showed their dresses and the beauty contestants looked their prettiest and most all of Cumberland was there to see. The winner was selected and sent off to Atlantic City, and the town quieted down while the merchants counted their respective profits from extra business. They figured that "Miss Cumberland" had really brought them money and they were correspondingly grateful to Slote; a goodwill he can capitalize in window cards and co-operative pages for a long time to come.

And just note that Slote did not use all this big stuff to pull through a weak sister. He set it for the night he had what he figured would be an especially pleasing bill. He knew he would pull many persons who do not usually turn out for pictures, and he wanted them to go away with the best possible impression of pictures as a whole, so instead of working for a barely good enough picture, he held the idea for The Brass Bottle, and he made regulars out of many of the infrequents. It was the last touch of showmanship, and he was still there with the goods.



HERE'S A GOOD STAGE SETTING FOR A FASHION SHOW

Teaser Displays Sold U. S. Grill

Selling Ruggles of Red Gap by teaser is something new that was worked by Jack Hellman, a Paramounteer.

He dropped into Jamestown, N. D., where the Wilson story was booked at the Opera House, and started a series of advertised displays announcing the impending opening of the U. S. Grill, later adding that Marmaduke Ruggles would be its manager. Even then they did not tumble, but looked around to see where the grill was being made ready.

The day before the picture opened, the teasers joined the straight advertising for Ruggles by announcing that they would all enjoy the scenes in the U. S. Grill in Red Gap in the Cruze production.

Here's a New Angle for Book Hook-ups

Pass the butter to the State Theatre, Erie, Pa. It bought $293.50 worth of space with an investment of $40. Then Mike Vogel picked up the idea and put it over in Altoona and McKeesport before the tidal wave caught him. You can do it in your own home town if any newspaper has a contest on—or you can inaugurate one.

In Erie the paper was gunning for subscriptions. The State purchased 100 copies of the Grosset & Dunlap version of The Cheat and donated them for bonus prizes, and the newspaper gave all that space to the announcement of these bonuses with a few kind words for Pola Negri and The Cheat.

Of course you do not have to give out as many books in a small town, but you can get as much in proportion to your investment, and it has worked big in the three instances reported on.

Changed Chaplin

At last they have been having The Pilgrim in Laredo, Texas, and when Manager Epstein found that the ministers were running true to form and getting ready to protest against the ministerial garb, he asked them to come and see the picture, offering to make such eliminations as they might suggest.

Somewhat taken aback at this offer, the ministers made some minor changes and then endorsed what was left. The condemnation made for interest which was added to by the subsequent approval, and business at the Royal was royally good.

Army Helped

Now it's the Santa Fe Trail that is getting the recruiters. Richard Weil, publicity man for Progress pictures, sends in a photograph of an army covered wagon with the explanation that he was able to interest the commandant of an army post across the river from Cincinnati. The nub of the idea was that if you joined the army you could see The Santa Fe Trail. If you wanted a sample, you looked it up at the local theatre.

He not only got the wagon, but an ambulance as well and a cavalry escort.

Pete Smith's Capital Newspaper Campaign

Pete Smith, working to put over The Meanest Man in the World for Sol Lesser at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, built up a fine campaign in which the theatre or the fact that the title was related to a picture were carefully eliminated.

On the face of it, the Los Angeles Express was willing to pay $200 to locate the meanest man in the world. It offered $150 to the person who developed the meanest man with $50 and $20 as consolations. Meanwhile, it paid one dollar each day for the five best letters on the meanest man, these letters being reassembled for the final judging.

It streamed the question across the front page each day, repeated on 100 painted 28-sheets, bannered 500 newsstands with signs and tack cards and apparently took slide space in 100 theatres of the West Coast corporation.

As the contest drew to a close it put out the meanest man and his mother, father and son. The hero was immaculately dressed, but being the meanest man, his family was uncared for. The four of them paraded the streets in masks and helped to interest in the contest.

As a final there was a ball at the Cinderella dance hall, where motion pictures were made of the arriving guests and those who later competed for the prizes for shaking the meanest hoof.

And when all this publicity had been carefully accumulated, it was shifted in bulk over to the show at the State. It had done all it could for the Express and was ready to hand to perform a similar service for the State, and it put over Bert Lytell like the Barnum & Bailey with Duse in the center ring.

Doubled Contest

About 200 youngsters appeared at the Stacey Theatre, Trenton, N. J., for a Jackie Coogan contest on Circus Days, so Lee Haussman had to hold an elimination in the fire alley, retaining a dozen of the best for the stage appearance, the audience deciding the winners. There were three prizes, a suit or overcoat, a cap and an autographed copy of Toby Tyler.

In addition, the theatre offered a silver cup for the best impersonator at a Hallowe'en street ball conducted by a committee of citizens. This was not limited to children, and a number of men competed for the prize, adding to the general hilarity—and effectiveness—of the stunt. The cup was, of course, included in all the newspaper stories for several days in advance.

Uses Davies Film for Store Display

Because the Wanamaker store is celebrating the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the A. T. Stewart store, which was purchased by the Philadelphia merchant, a considerable portion of the store advertising dealt with the New York of a century ago, with pictures of old New York and similar material.

In this connection portions of the Cosmopolitan production of Little Old New York were shown at the performances in the store auditorium for two days. This was not the complete film, but scenes showing the very remarkable reproductions of old streets, and was more in the nature of a glorified trailer advertisement for the picture, then showing at the Capitol, while at the same time it fulfilled its purpose of showing the ancient town. It was a particularly valuable advertisement because it was apparently anything but that.

Thrifty

The last word in economy comes from the exhibitor who is saving the ashes of The Eternal Flame to advertise Ashes of Vengeance.

FOUR OF THE STUNTS WHICH HELPED PUT OVER THE MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD IN LOS ANGELES

This was all directed to a newspaper contest which piled up the publicity for the newspaper and which, at the proper time, was transferred to the film. There were 100 boards like that above and any quantity of bannered taxis. Below are shown the four perambulators used and the traveling night apparatus which was used at a motion picture ball at a dance hall

Scandinavian Stunts Follow Live Practice

Exploitation abroad has come to equal the best work done in this country, where exploitation was brought to the status of an independent profession. Australia has done splendid work, England is not far behind, and we have recently shown a number of good examples from the Continent, but among the best are these stunts worked by Raoul le Mat, of Stockholm, who is not only distributor of the Metro product for Norway, Sweden and Denmark, but the owner-manager of an important chain of theatres, the "home" house being the Roda Kvarn, or Red Mill, in Stockholm.

One of the best stunts, though it does not show up so well in the photograph, is a mechanical novelty for Tva Arbland Vilda Djuri Afrika, which is the alias for the Martin Johnson's Trailing Wild Animals in Africa.

This is the kiosk which appears in the centre of the lobby in the upper right hand of the cut. It shows Mrs. Johnson in the act of shooting and a lighting device is used to give the flash of the gun. At each flash an animal leaps from behind a screen at her right, to fall dead at her feet.

The four-in-hand drag shown at the left was used for Hearts Aflame. Anna Q. Nilsson is naturally a particular favorite with her countrymen and especial effort was made to put this release over. This was played at the Rialto Theatre, instead of the Red Mill, and brought a large business.

The lower pictures show the special drive on a comedy week, the bill being composed of Mud and Sand, the burlesque on Blood and Sand, and Rob 'em Good. An automobile parade was formed, with impersonators of Valentino and Fairbanks each in his own car, and numerous stops were made for ballyhoo purposes.

The result of the drive was to give an exceptionally big week without a dramatic feature. Evidently the demand for comedy is as world-wide as its appeal.

All of the stunts are passed along to other users of the Metro service, and Mr. Le Mat goes beyond American exchange practice in his service to clients. This includes the supplying of cloth backed stills instead of the usual light paper prints. The cost of the process is more than offset by the saving of the stills, which are in good condition long after the straight paper prints would be cracked and torn. Sometimes we get so proud of ourselves that we fail to realize that there are comers in other countries and we are glad to pay our respects to this Metro hustler.

Bad men are usually supposed to be life takers rather than savers, but the Olympic Theatre, New Haven, got hold of some mint candies and put them out with a special label reading "Two kinds of life savers, pep-o-mints and The Bad Man at the Olympic." Tod Browning says it helped business. But why not "Pep-o-mints will take your breath away. So will The Bad Man?"

Plenty of Jazz in Good Metro Puzzle

An advertising novelty is just something you get from an exchange. You can make it worth the cost or you can make it get a lot more than that. It's all a matter of putting in something more than the surface use.

Plenty of exhibitors have put out the Metro "E" puzzle on The Eternal Struggle, and have found it a useful novelty. W. G. Bishop, a Metro exploitation man, made it a newspaper stunt in two cities.

In Houston, Texas, some 300 members of the Rotary Club spent most of their time at the weekly luncheon trying to make the blamed thing come out straight. The Pirates, an advertising club in Oklahoma City, let the soup get cold in a similar endeavor.

In each instance the manager of the local theatre offered to pay the luncheon check of any member who could solve the puzzle. In neither case was the award claimed. But the newspaper made the mention of their efforts in the stories of the luncheons, and had to mention the house and attraction.

If you don't want to risk having to buy lunches, offer passes, but see if you cannot get some local organization interested. This can be worked, of course, on any similar stunt and does not merely apply to The Eternal Struggle, though the latter title worked well into the story.

Mr. Le Mat, who is the representative of Metro in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, as well as the owner of a chain of theatres in these countries, is very much awake to the value of exploitation. Below are two of the pictures of his drive on a comedy week with Mud and Sand and Rob 'Em Good the limelight with no very pronounced result. The three names are too nearly of equal value to get any prominence. Probably both Tarkington and Wilson will sell some tickets, but they will sell just as many for the Temple theatre, Toledo, though here the names are less than half the width and about half the height. Not only do the three names crowd each other, but they lie against the cut in such a fashion that whatever chance they ever had is killed off, while at the same time they also murder the cut. The cut would not be a bad one, were it set in properly, but it needs white space to show it off, and here almost every hole is chinked with talk. The picture is offered as "Nat Goodwin's most famous stage success," which serves only to emphasize the fact that this is a rather old subject, since the comedian, favorite of his generation, is a strange name to most of the present-day patrons. There is more appeal to the "See the greatest race between three river steamboats ever staged," in the panel on the left, but there is more vigor to the race suggestion of the cut in the Horator advertisement than to the type, plus the obscured race in the Baltimore appeal. Moreover, there is a sweep to the drawing from the Toledo advertisement that catches the attention more quickly and holds it better. The boats are right at the top of the space and the flow of the stream takes you down to the title, which is not obscured by any disturbing lettering above or below. You are sold Cameo Kirby, a Mississippi story, right at the jump, with the suggestion of love interest in the clutch just below, and with the authors and star over to the right. There is not as much talk in the Toledo handling, but there is greater selling force because the entire display has a breadth that the other lacks. There is the suggestion of strength and vigor which the cut with more detail can never attain. Both cuts are apparently press book material. It is merely a matter of choice, and we hold that the choice should invariably lie with the stronger cut where there is an option. The title has double the display. The Century is not a poor advertisement, but working from the same available material, we think that the Temple has framed a much better selling advertisement. This is by no means an isolated example.

THE TOLEDO EXAMPLE

It almost invariably holds true that the open drawings, not confused with too much text, will sell more tickets than the elaborate cut, especially when it is confused with too much talk. An advertisement must work quickly, if it is to work at all, and there is no place for elaborate argument.

White and Reverse Not in Confliction

For the second week of If Winter Comes the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, uses a three twelves, of which about half is a reverse ground and the rest normal. Whether or not this will work out well depends upon the handling. Here the black is an abrupt transition, but there is a similar transition from sketch to talk, and the result is decidedly good. It is better than if the white had been at the bottom, which would have made the space topheavy. The big fact here is the holding of the picture for a second week, and this is put at the top where there is nothing to fight, the sketch not being heavy enough to detract from the type. That brings you down to the title with the message of success. If a picture is held over for a second week, it must be a good picture. What picture is it? The eye runs down the space to where the title is the easiest thing to find in the distinctive circle. In case you do not already know about the picture, there is a well written sales talk on the left, but we think that in most instances this is not read. The selling has been already accomplished. It is just the final clincher, put in for the very difficult few. Almost everywhere this picture is going to double the usual run, or longer, but we think that in no instance has the extension of the run been better handled and seldom has it been put over as emphatically. Usually the emphasis is given the play and not the extension, and the second week it is the extension and not the play which is the more important argument. For that matter, if you still have the picture to play, we believe that you can make real capital out of these extended runs. Call attention to the very remarkable success of the picture elsewhere and then advance the suggestion that this favor is due to the fact that the film so closely follows the book. Frankly offer it as the one picture in which the flavor of the novel has not been destroyed to make a continuity writer's holiday. Very often the failure of a screen version is due to the impertinent changes made by the studio writers. Play up the fact that this is still the Hutchinson novel and not the story as some studio employee thought it should have been written in the first place. Most readers will welcome the novelty.

A Fox Release

ODD AND EFFECTIVE

Castellated

Making the entire marquise a castle was the way Ashes of Vengeance was put over by Manager Steffy at the Coliseum theatre, Seattle. Instead of building his castle on top of the marquise, Mr. Steffy built around the supporting columns with painted stonework and masked in the lobby front, running the turrets above the line of the canopy.

Of course, there were windows in the castle, and these were peopled by cutouts from the ones and three sheets. It all served to create the desired impression that Ashes of Vengeance was a bigger and better picture.

Helps Hook-Ups

Looking for something for the cooperating advertisers, the Odeon theatre, Savannah, gave passes to all readers who worked on their hook-up page for Why Worry. There were twelve advertisers and to get a single pass the readers had to write twelve sentences each commencing with the title and dealing with the twelve advertising concerns. There was a prize of $10 for the best set of sentences; none of which could exceed 25 words, but a single admission was given each contestant. The same idea can be applied to other titles, though it works particularly well with Why Worry, and helped to get the picture over by drawing a big opening house to go out and tell the rest of the town. It also brought in many paid admissions.

Atmosphere Sketch Is Made Attractor

Most of the advertisements for Viola Dana in The Social Code use the picture of the little star with her feet up on the table. This works well in the smaller dimensions, but the Colonial theatre, Indianapolis, wanted a larger cut and used this polo scene to suggest the general atmosphere of the picture as set forth in the catalogue at the top of the space. It works nicely, though the layout man has done well to hold all the talk about the play above the cut since this extends across the space. Putting part of the talk below the cut would have lost it. That space is reserved to the smaller features, which makes for a more intelligent handling of the announcement. The picture is chiefly sold on atmosphere, and this gives a large sample of the chief ingredient. The star's name sells the rest.

Sells Ponjola on Nilsson Haircut

Most of the kick in this Boston advertisement for Ponjola is on the haircut which enabled Miss Nilsson to look like a real boy and not a male impersonator. It is by no means new stuff, for back in 1909 the same gag was worked with Ellie Caines, of the old Lubin company, in a one reeler. We sent the cameraman down to a barber shop and made the haircut a part of the picture, but in those one-reel days there was less exploitation and Miss Nilsson is getting much more advertising out of her stunt. This is a very nicely set advertisement for Boston. There was a slump back into the old hand lettered stuff, but the agents are coming over to real type again and getting better displays. Probably the Boston papers always will look like the printing office towel after the Sunday edition has been run off, but the use of type helps somewhat and since Boston does not seem to know anything better it does well enough. Apart from the appeal of the haircut most of the talk is clipped from the Los Angeles reviews, since this showing was too early for the New York criticisms, but the haircut is the best bet for Boston. The boy-girl stuff appeals to the men and to most of the women. Probably they know the book, too, but they will want to see the picture for the sake of the masquerade, and the Gordon houses will clean up with it. There is a lot in knowing what will appeal to your patrons, and here the agent has apparently picked the best bet. It will probably work in other sections as well.

All Lit Up

Planning a change from a second to a first run policy, the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., hired an aviator to fly low over the town at night with the under side of the planes lettered in electric lights.

It helped to establish the policy and give Elinor Glyn's Six Days a two weeks' run instead of the six she was talking about. Of course they used other stunts, too, but this was the star idea.

Splitting a Title Is Cleveland Idea

Loew's Park and Mall theatres, Cleveland, which play the same attraction day and date, combine their space. For Ponjola this space is a 140 x 3, which is ample for the text and sketch appeal. A somewhat curious device is used for the title, Ponjola being made into two words to gain height. This may have been done to increase curiosity, but it is more likely that the object was to get a big display for the word. The text is ta'en from the press book and hammers on the duality of sex of the heroine. It does not carry quite the idea of the story, but it does make for selling curiosity, and this is the chief object aimed at. To this end the bottom of the space shows the male and female figures while the palm tree is typical of the locale and the star herself is shown in the foliage. It is complete without being redundant, and it makes a very presentable form. In some aspects we think that the split title will attract more attention than the single word, though it is seldom advisable to tamper with titles. The point here is that those who will be sold through the book will be attracted because the title is apparently wrong, while others will wonder what a Pon Jola is, so it will appeal to both sides.

Sure They're Crazy

Working over an old idea, Al Sobler, First National exploitation man in and around Chicago, interested the authorities of the State School for the Feeble Minded at Lincoln to show the inmates Circus Days. The idea was that the degree of insanity in the patient could be tested by his reaction to the comedy.

In other words, if you could not enjoy Jackie Coogan in this play you must be crazy. Of course, this was dressed up in scientific language for the newspapers, but that was the big idea.

Being a thrifty sort of person, the test was made while Circus Days was playing at the Lincoln Theatre, and the whole town hustled in to laugh an alibi. If you have a little insane asylum in your town, think this over.

Still Goes

When A. A. Spitz opened his new Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., he made the opening blast a series of congratulatory telegrams from the stars, and his centerpiece was one from Norma Talmadge, who had the honor of opening the house with Ashes of Vengeance.

It's old stuff, but it seems still to pack a wallop where it has not been done more than a dozen times, and the first time out—man!

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

Associated Exhibitors

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A whizzing whopper of a screen comedy, and a picture that will make you laugh until you cry. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

F. B. O.

BLOW YOUR OWN HORN. (6,315 feet). Star cast. Exceptionally well cast. Warner Baxter as the hero played his part one hundred per cent. If your patrons like Claire Windsor, they will be well pleased with Derelys Perdue. They are the same type. Ralph Lewis is well known and takes well with the average audience. You will hear as little adverse comment on this one as any moderate priced picture. Lots of truth in it. Suitable for Sunday. Had capacity attendance. Draw rural class in town of 1,000. H. Aldinger, Opera House, Primghar, Iowa.

FOURTH MUSKETEER. (5,000 feet). Star, Johnnie Walker. The producers made a fuss about this one, but I don't see anything to fuss about outside of the fact that the title is a good drawing card, but the picture is only a very ordinary comedy-drama. Usual allotment of posters brought good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

MIRACLE BABY. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. This is the best western picture I have shown for some time; if you want a good western picture get Harry Carey. Moral tone good. Draw mixed class in town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. N. Russell, Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

MY DAD. (5,600 feet). Star, Johnnie Walker. Fairly good northern picture. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. This is an awful good picture but the film I got was broken up so that it spoiled the picture and that's what kills business. Used two ones, slide, photos, bills. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. How does First National get their high valuation on "Bell Boy 13"? We can't understand unless it's on Thomas Ince's name. Very poor picture. Very short, long enough for the kind, though. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Best Coogan has done for some time. Almost made us as much money as "Oliver Twist" lost. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

CHILDREN OF DUST. (6,228 feet). Star cast. A sob story that did not go well on account of being very similar to several predecessors that were very much better. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-22. Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre (960 seats), Liberal, Kansas.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is a first class picture, well executed and very interesting, and should please all seeing it, both old and young. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. (5,192 feet). Star, Katherine McDonald. A program picture; but this star has absolutely no friends here. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had bad attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

DULCY. (6,859 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Too silly, didn't satisfy Constance's admirers. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw railroad town and family class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

DULCY. (6,859 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Fair picture, but not up to what she has been doing. Constance is liked here. Jack Mulhall, Johnny Harron do well in support. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission fifteen cents matinees, twenty-five cents evenings. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. All previous reports hold good. About as good as ever made. Used mailing list and usual advertising. Had extra good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. Good comedy drama, pleased about sixty per cent. of my customers. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. Good picture. Well liked. McLean is a clean cut American type. This picture went over great with our audience. Advertising slants, underworld comedy drama. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. Terrible. Thomas H. Ince should never have released this and don't forget First National asks real money for it. Not suitable for Sunday or any other day. Draw best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, very pleasing and entertaining. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star cast. Once in many moons will you have a chance to book a picture as good as this one. It's a hundred percent audience picture and ninety-five per cent. better than the so called super-productions. Capacity business for three days; should have held over for balance of week. Book it and boost it. H. O'Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Q., Canada.

OLIVER TWIST. (5 reels). Star, Jackie Coogan. The little star gives a superb performance but direction is rather poor as the strength of the feature is nearly all in the first four reels. Cast, photography and costuming excellent. Has O. K. moral tone and is quite gruesome for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750) seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. An excellent picture that will do good business with intelligent audience. Jackie is good in this one. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. For me it was O. K. Everybody well pleased. Paid a little too much for it. Should be bought cheaper as it's getting a little old. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. One of the best kid pictures ever made, and pleased one hundred per cent. Get behind this one and it will back you up. Suitable for special. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Many good comments. If they liked Marshal Neilan's "Penrod" they will surely like this. Ben Alexander is fine. Entire cast good. Attendance good. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Great picture but they charge too much money. Ran for three days to very good business. Book this one Sunday and Monday. Advertise this one to the limit and be sure you make money if you pay a fair price for the picture. Draw good class in Brooklyn, New York, Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. A real picture that will surprise how it will please, although it is "kid" stuff; this was the objection I heard before they had seen the picture; they appear here to be fed up on the mischievous "Kid" comedies (that goes for me too) and were afraid that this is what it was, but every act is natural; splendid direction; but they did not come and I could not get them, although in the advertising I endeavored to combat the idea that it was a "Gang" or a Baby Peggy comedy. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (7,700 feet). Star cast. A splendid picture with all the humor, drama and thrill of the greatest characters, fiction, stage or screen has ever known. With the original stars; a follies show; a style show; dazzling beauties; all the stuff that makes a splendid picture, truly wonderful. If you liked it on the stage don't miss it on the screen. It's better, bigger, greater, funnier than ever shown before. Don't fail to book it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SCRAP IRON. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. This is a good picture where they like to see a good fight but it did not go good here. Just a fair picture. Moral tone not good and is not suitable for Sunday. Had punk attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. J. Douglas, Strand Theatre, Pierce, Nebraska.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Strongheart (dog). What I would say about this one would only be a repetition of the good things the boys in this department have already said. This picture, although old, was in good condition and was liked by one hundred per cent. of the audience. Any class will like this one. Go after it big if you can get a good film, and boost prices. First National gave us good price but we failed to make money owing to weather. Moral tone, nothing objectionable. It is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedburg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A very good north woods story and star draws well here. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A Northern along the same old form, but there's comedy in it that will put it over. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SMILIN' THROUGH. (8 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. I can only echo all the fine things the other exhibitors have said about this beautifully artistic offering of Miss Talmadge. I held off in playing this until now because of the price First National had on it when it was newer. Although old, the print on this was perfect. Even the occasional roughneck told me it was good and after doing a fine business, making a little change and making new patrons for my house, I sent the picture back to the exchange wishing I could only buy a hundred more just as good for next year. I used slide, window cards, mailing list and boards. Attendance way above ordinary. Draw farmers and towns people in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Still the letters come in on the subject of rotten prints.

It looks as though the exhibitors are getting wise. They are beginning to get hep to the way to cure the exchanges of sending punk prints.

On the next page you will see the remedies they are going to put in use.

Next season looks bad for the exchanges whose salesmen promise "You'll sure get a good print on this," and whose managers don't care enough for good will and confidence to back up the promise.

It takes a lot of water dropping on a rock to make a dent in it, but when the producers wake up to the dent in their business there will be some tall doings around certain exchanges.

May the day come soon!

Fox

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,440 feet). Star, John Gilbert, will get it by. Print "bummy." Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring, Play House Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

CAMEO KIRBY. (6,931 feet). Star, John Gilbert. This is a real one, book it now. Pleased one hundred per cent. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

IF WINTER COMES. (10,000 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Should please any audience. Will stand up for whole week. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A dandy five reel program. Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring, Play House Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. This picture is not right for a small place because it gets draggy. Ten reels. Did not draw very well but pleased ninety per cent. Used bills, ones, sheets, cards, paper. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A fine Mix picture. More comedy than anything else, which made it fine for here as our audience like to laugh at as well as applaud Mix. Condition of film fine. Moral tone good and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. S. R. O. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SALOME. (6 reels). Star cast. This picture failed to draw for me. I should have cleaned up with it as an opposition house had the United Artist Nazimova Salome. Suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in big city. Admission 10 cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SECOND HAND LOVE. Star, Charles Jones. Not the star's best, but a good program picture. This finishes the Jones series of last season; the best ones are: "Skid Proof," "West of Chicago" and "Boss of Camp Four." F. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

STRENGTH OF THE PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. Punchy little five reeler. Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring, Play House Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD. (10,461 feet). Star cast. Very good. Pleased all classes ninety per cent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw neighborhood and foreign classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (320 seats), Clovis, California.

VERY TRULY YOURS. (5,000 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very good light entertainment put over in Mason style. Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring, Play House Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. Star cast. A fine picture. Good title and will please. Good cast and well acted. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw neighborhood and foreign classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (320 seats), Clovis, California.

Goldwyn

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star cast. Drew better than we expected and pleased fairly good, but one thing marred a perfect showing. Oh my! what a print. The ends of reels two, three, and seven were awful to behold. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GREEN GODDESS. (9,100 feet). Star cast. "Green Goddess" is high class, lavishly produced and staged, splendidly acted. Arliss cannot be beaten from point of artistic achievement. "Green Goddess" is one hundred per cent. screen entertainment. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw high class in city of 200,000. S. Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star, Alma Reubens. An extraordinary good picture, very pleasing and very interesting. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MADE IN HEAVEN. (4,684 feet). Star cast. An old picture, but very pleasing. Used ones, threes. Had fair attendance. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

RED LIGHTS. (6,841 feet). Star cast. Excellent picture. A mystery picture which pleased our audiences. We also played on same bill, Kleinschmidt's "Adventures In Far North" a marvellously beautiful scenic. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw best class in city of 200,000. Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star, Claude Gillingwater. Somehow there's something about this one that got them talking and ninety per cent. said it was fine. Book it and boost it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Hodkinson

CRITICAL AGE. (4,500 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. Not wonderful but we had no kicks which is more than we can say for some of the so-called specials. A good program offering. Print fair. Attendance good. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DOLLAR DEVILS. (5,600 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture and one that will get over and please your patrons. The name will get you nothing but you can get them in by getting out good advertising and let them know that the picture is better than the posters. Had good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Good feature. Pleased the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. A good picture, well played. Sub-titles are good, some of them written by Rogers. Good attendance. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

RAPIDS. (4,900 feet). Star, Mary Astor. Failed to attract much attention. Less than average business. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

YOUTHFUL CHEATERS. (5,700 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Not much to recommend in this one. Temple Theatre, Ilion Theatre, New York.

Metro

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. One fine picture that will satisfy any audience. This is a picture that has something to it. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. J. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

HEARTS AFLAME. (8,110 feet). Star, Frank Keenan. Frank Keenan and Anna Q. Nilsson are splendid in this. There is also one of the most realistic forest fires that I've seen. Then there is the comedy supplied by Russell Simpson and Martha Mattox as the couple who haven't spoken to each other for twenty-years. "Hearts Aflame" is a real good picture, as are two other Metro features that I know of. Clarence G. Badger's "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and Rex Ingram's "Prisoner of Zenda." C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

METRO PRODUCTIONS. All Clara Kimball Young's on list are "slow" go easy on 'em. Rest of list fair. Good and better, fifty-fifty. Viola Dana's all good. Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring. Playhouse Theatre (249 seats) Strong, Arkansas.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. This is certainly one fine picture. You can't go wrong with it and you can raise your prices without taking any chances of causing a complaint. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SOCIAL CODE. (5 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Fine picture, dramatic work of star and support. Best I have ever shown, but why is it the director instructs a jury in a murder trial to turn and converse with one another and show amazement over the testimony adduced. No such scenes are ever witnessed in criminal courts. A jury would be disqualified and a new jury selected if even one member tried to influence another, before the case is finally given them. Moral tone excellent and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Thomas M. Thatcher, Gem Theatre, Somerset, Kentucky.

Exchanges!—The Clouds Are Gathering

"E. L. L. Partridge is right in his idea (about handling the bum print problem): if we would all do that, I am sure we would get better service; but then there is some fellow who would not have nerve enough to cancel out the exchange that gives him rotten service.

"BUT HERE IS ONE WHO WILL!

"Yes, and there's one more exchange I must give credit to for giving us good prints—and that's UNIVERSAL." Jack Schneider, Casino Auditorium, Richmond, Iowa.

"I notice that the kicks on poor prints are many. My advice to the exhibitor suffering this goat-getting service is to cut out entirely the exchange that gives the exhibitor worn-out prints in exchange for good, hard cash. There are many producing companies on the hustle all the time, turning out good pictures, to confine one's-self to any particular company. Patronize the exchange that gives service, and do no business with the exchange that either can not or will not give or send good prints to the exhibitor, REGARDLESS OF THE AMOUNT OF THE FILM RENTAL." Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Speak out, fellows! Let the exchange know how you feel—that is, in language that can be printed, if you can keep your feelings down to that. Now that the industry is slowed up on production for a while, it is a good time for a house-cleaning.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A splendid picture, well worth seeing. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. A little old but the best Paramount picture I have run in a long time. Ran this with Universal two reel comedy, also good. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadarko, Oklahoma.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A money getter where they like the glittering, brilliant production. Drew and pleased extra well for us. This star is very popular here. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Miss Swanson at her best. Beautiful wardrobe; novel story, excellently directed and produced. Used rotos, billboards, etc., to get good (city) patronage. J. I. Sims, Reliance Theatre, Orangeburg, South Carolina.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An exceptionally good entertainment. Swanson was never better. But they want too much rental, as usual. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

CALL OF THE NORTH. (4,823 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This picture with Holt went over good for us. It was a little old for us, but if the picture is good that is all that our audience wants. Usual advertising brought average attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THE CHEAT. (6,323 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Excellent production. Pleased everybody, especially as it has a happy ending. A gripping story holding tense interest throughout. Used rotos, newspaper. Draw best class. Good attendance. J. I. Sims, Reliance Theatre, Orangeburg, South Carolina.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. (4,918 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. I would consider this just an ordinary program picture that needs a good comedy to put it over. Don't promise too much on this one. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A poor, tedious show that won't help to bring 'em back. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Fair program picture. Will please a majority. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. A good program picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOOTLIGHTS. (7,978 feet), Star, Elsie Ferguson. A good program picture that will please a fair majority. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Pleased majority. Good business. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

GHOST BREAKER. (5,130 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A good picture, but he has appeared to better advantage before. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GLIMPSES OF THE MOON. (6,502 feet). Star cast. An elaborately produced and costumed English society drama, a fashion plate review that pleases a few of the women patrons. Story, though based on a popular book, lacks any interest to the spectator. Characters walk through their parts. No punch or humor in the picture. You are better off without it. Moral tone—none. Suitable for Sunday (only day it is). Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

GO-GETTER. (7,740 feet). Star, T. Roy Barnes. A comedy drama. Light and fluffy, but entertaining. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. Excellent. Many compliments. Suitable for any day. Had fair attendance. Draw off field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Brother exhibitors, look out! If you don't want to mortgage your theatre to pay for films stay away from them. They have no hearts to ask you all you have for a picture. That's my experience. Look out. I played "Robin Hood" and had a loss that it will take me the whole month of November earnings to cover same, and the exchange will laugh at you when you explain your trouble to them and it was all due to the high rental price of the films. United Artists is absolutely through with me even if they had the only and best picture in the world. They couldn't show me where they mean good to the poor exhibitor again. I went the limit to advertise it and got a special orchestra for "Robin Hood" and that's the result. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. The title, in my opinion, is not a one hundred per cent. box office magnet, but the picture is a corker. I really believe it accomplished the impossible; that is, pleased everybody. Nowadays it takes a good one to do this, and I consider this feature such a picture. If any fault can be found, it is in the too frequent close-ups of the principal's. One reel less of footage could be desirable. Play up to the name of the author and star, and if you can get them in, everything will be all to the good. Used slide and boards. Attendance was fair. Not exactly the type of feature for Sunday showing, but there is absolutely nothing objectionable to the most refined audience. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,313 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Excellent production. Full of action. Moral tone good. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Mae Murray. A reissue that is best left alone if you value the good opinion of your patrons. This was a substitute for "Kentucky Derby." The print was good but after seeing up-to-date features with either of the two stars this is a joke. Had fair attendance. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

LEGALLY DEAD. (6,076 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A well produced and directed picture. The only trouble was its improbability, that is bringing the convict back to life after he had been hanged. However, the star does fine work, as does Claire Adams, and interest is held throughout. If they aren't too critical, it will please nearly everyone. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A fine Saturday picture. Gibson's best so far. Laura LaPlante attractive opposite him. I see where she is going to be starred. Not a bad idea. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Not much of a picture first time for star. Supposed to be a western but a mighty poor one. Lay off it, too silly. Used photos, slide and paper. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

TRIMMED IN SCARLET. (4,765 feet). Star cast. Here is what I call a fair picture ninety per cent., but not many turned out, new movie show started up and this place isn't large enough for two. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

Big Picture!

THE COVERED WAGON (Paramount). A splendid picture; in fact, the last word in pictures and the best seen since the initial showing of the "Birth of a Nation." Perfect realism, a strong love theme, tremendous dramatic action, thrills that are utterly unlike the ordinary sort, coupled with the splendid cast (virtually 3,000 men and women), indicate a picture worthy of the enthusiastic reports sweeping the country. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK (Goldwyn - Cosmopolitan). (FIRST SHOWING IN CONNECTICUT). Capacity at every performance. Positively the best production Marion Davies has ever starred in. Hundreds came back to see it a second time. Received more praise than "Robin Hood" or any of the other so-called "Big Productions." Mr. Exhibitor, get this one at any price; if your oppcsition gets it, close up when he plays it because everyone will want to see "Little Old New York." Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

LATE REPORTS ARE MIGHTY BADLY NEEDED BY THE BIGGER HOUSES AND RELISHED BY THE SMALLER THEATRES. SEND IN YOUR TIPS!

Vitagraph

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Is very good, of the type of the "Third Alarm." Arthur Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Indiana.

SMASHING BARRIERS. (6 reels). Star, William Duncan. A serial cut to six reels. Don't let this stop you from buying it. It's great. More action and thrills in this than Fox's "Eleventh Hour." Print O. K. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Warner Brothers

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Very little beautiful and a whole lot of the other thing. Selling for three times its valuation. Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Work of the star and supporting cast very good, but this is not a good feature for small towns. Too much booze is disgusting to my patrons. Fair print. Title does not draw. Used slide, boards, window cards. Had fair attendance. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A well made picture with best mine disaster yet seen. Open with a "kid prologue." Not enough religion" to hurt it with mixed crowd. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

PARTED CURTAINS. (6 reels). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A very good picture. Pleased practically everyone, although no one raved over it. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. Star, Wesley Barry. Personally I thought the picture very good. Had a good opening but flopped last two days. Cannot explain why. Wesley Barry usually a good drawing card here. Picture very good of its kind and well made and directed. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee. Oklahoma.

RAGS TO RICHES. (6 reels). Star. Wesley Barry. Fine audience picture. Will please and draw all classes. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). If you want something just a little bit better than the best, grab this one. We are sure that this picture received more comment from this city than anything we have ever played Some people back second day, that means something here. It is simply a wonderful picture. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Comedies

HOWLING SUCCESS. (Universal). A very fine comedy; the dog, Brownie, sure does some fine acting in this one. It will please the old folks as well as the children. My patrons ate it up. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers class in town of 150. Admission 10-20, specials, 10-25. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre (285 seats). Richmond. Iowa

JESSIE JAMES. Man travels in truck. Broke all house records. Packed theatre could not handle crowds. Same old picture out for ten years. Draw general class in town of 5,692. Admission 10-25. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre (300 seats), Burlington, North Carolina.

LOVE IS BLOND. (Chester Comedy). A side splitting comedy from first to last. Condition of film fine. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats). Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ONLY A HUSBAND. (C. B. C.) These boys are putting out some good comedies. Every exhibitor should play them as the prices on them are reasonable and not up in the air as with other comedy companies. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). These "kid" comedies are certainly great. Everyone is a corker. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Draw mixed class in town of 4,00. Admission 10-20-25. J. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

PEACEFUL ALLEY. (Warner Brothers). Here is one of Monty Bank's best comedies. It is an old one but the films are good and it can stand up without a blush alongside of any of his new ones. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

PLUMB CRAZY. (Educational). This one was better than the average Christie. Some operator must have gotten awful tired because he made two splices without scraping the emulsion off. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ROLL ALONG. (Educational). Roll us some more like this one. This sure is a peach. One of the best Christies we ever ran. Sure makes 'em laugh. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THREE STRIKES. (Educational). This one had a laugh in it for every minute it was on the screen. It certainly pleased the kids. Want some more like this. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WANTED A STORY. Star, Johnny Jones. Wrong title. Should be "Need a Story" and players, no good. This makes the third punk picture of his. Used photos. Had good attendance. Town of 4,600. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadarko, Oklahoma.

Serials

HER DANGEROUS PATH. (Pathe). Poor imitation of a serial run. My business off with it. Good trash-can material Had bum attendance. Draw general class in town of 5,692. Admission 10-25. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre (300 seats), Burlington, North Carolina.

HER DANGEROUS PATH. (Pathe). We run this with our all short subject program and it is getting better and is a good drawing card. Cannot be beat. Used slide, two newspapers, lobby. Had large attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre. Anadarko, Oklahoma.

OREGON TRAIL. (Universal). Star, Art Accord. Doing good business on this but don't know what is doing it, "Pathe News" or "Our Gang" comedies. Lay off this serial. Had good attendance. Town of 4,000. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadarko, Oklahoma.

STEEL TRAIL. (Universal). Alright if you buy it for seventy-five per cent. less than you are asked. Nuf Sed. Has fair moral tone. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 5,692. Admission 10-25. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre (300 seats), Burlington, North Carolina.

GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. EDUCATIONALS. Exhibitors write to General Electric Co., Schenectady, New York, and you will get good educational reels free of charge only for express charges. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. NO. 85. (Universal). International News is a pretty good news reel but we never get a current issue. Each issue that we receive is over a month old. Funny thing about news reels. Never did yet get a news reel without slow motion in it somewheres. Would say that it is too monotonous and should not be put in all reels. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE. A good subject to run if used while the disaster is still fresh in the minds of the people. Paramount is to be congratulated in securing these scenes. The picture lacked the horrible gruesome scenes many were expecting to see. Very good. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

LEATHER PUSHERS. (Universal). These are the very best serial pictures I have ever run. They are certainly crammed with action. Run these every Friday and they always go over big. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. J. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

EAST SIDE, WEST SIDE. (Principal Pictures). Star, Kenneth Harlan. (6 reels). A good program picture, that pleases. Entertaining and that's all. Good print. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw University students and better class in city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, The Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

ENVIRONMENT. (Principal Pictures), Star cast. (6 reels). A very good picture. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ENVIRONMENT. (6 reels). Star cast. Everybody pleased with this one. Sills is liked here in this town. This was a well cast production and had some good comedy injected into it at places. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LURE OF GOLD. (Independent Films). Cheap western that can only satisfy low class houses. Usual posters brought fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SHADOW OF LIGHTNING RIDGE. (Aywon). Star, Snowy Baker. Fair. Will please if they crave westerns. Baker is all right but the supporting cast is punk. Leading lady short on pep. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SPIDER AND THE ROSE. (Principal Pictures). Star, Gaston Glass. Terrible. Stay off of it. They don't like it. More kicks on this picture than on any ever shown here. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw University students and better class in city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

STILL GOING STRONG. (C. B. C.) Nice comedy that pleased. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

TEMPORARY MARRIAGE. (Principal Pictures). Star cast. (7,000 feet). A fine picture and teaches a good moral. Do not pass this one up. Used lobby and daily papers. Had poor attendance. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

THE release of Pathe's "The Way of a Man" as both a ten-episode serial and as a regular-length feature required some ingenious manipulation of promotion aids by Pathe's advertising, publicity and exploitation departments, P. A. Parsons and Vic Shapiro chiefly officiating.

Results, as the press book and supplements show, have been thoroughly satisfactory to meet the needs of both the feature and the serial versions, without either having been sacrificed to the other. This is shown in the twenty-four page press book, a two-page newspaper-page size supplement on the feature only, and a one-page supplement showing newspaper ads on the serial.

While there naturally is a duplication of aids in some cases—particularly posters—both the feature and the serial have aids individual to themselves so that the exhibitor who books either can rest assured that he will get a full line of helps on the version he shows.

AND while it is true that each version has aids distinct to itself, the exhibitor easily and legitimately can use any of the aids for either of the releases.

FOR instance, on the feature there are available one one-sheet, two threes, one six and a twenty-four. These contain the word "Pathepicture." The same posters (pictorially) are issued on the serial, but it would be a simple matter for an exhibitor booking the feature to get even a wider variety of paper than the regular line, if he chose, merely by sniping out the word "Patheserial" on the serial posters and substituting the word "Pathepicture." We understand that snipes for this purpose are available.

THERE are special lobby displays for the feature, consisting of eight colored cards and of five black-and-whites. There is also a special circus herald, printed in flaming red.

IN pictorial matter the newspaper ad. cuts are the same on both the feature and serial. The only difference in the ads. is in the type matter and in the trade mark. These can easily be changed by the exhibitor to suit his own needs.

AIDS that lend themselves particularly to use in plugging either version are the map game novelty and the photoplay edition of the novel by Emerson Hough.

ON the serial there is available the usual amount of exploitation material. There are a stock twenty-four (the same as the twenty-four on the feature), stock window card, stock rotogravure herald (distinct from the circus herald on the feature) and a cloth banner. Then there are, on each episode, a one-sheet, a three-sheet and a six-sheet.

For novelties there are the map game, mentioned before, and a very small booklet containing sixteen miniature black-and-white photographs. These latter sell for five cents each, and therefore are for use mainly in selling the serial.

On each episode of the serial eight sepia 11x14s are issued. Sixteen black and white press photos are published for the entire ten episodes.

There is also a colored broadside issued, as well as the usual teaser and announcement slides, trailer, and selection of newspaper ads., scene cuts, etc.

THE press book and its supplements, as a whole, give the exhibitor who books the picturized novel either as a serial or as a feature, a complete line of helps. The exploitation suggestions, of course, are such that they can be used on either. All in all, the campaign outlined is such as to help any exhibitor get full value for money expended in promotion.

Metro is planning some big things in the way of promotion of "Scaramouche," as shown by advance proofs of the press sheet. Herewith are a few samples of posters, a full line of which have been prepared, including two twenty-fours. Indications are that the campaign will rival in comprehensiveness anything the industry has known

Novel twenty-four sheet issued by Universal on "The Hunchback." The same idea is also being carried out in smaller size for lobby display. This should be good advertising in any town in the country, and is especially suited for posting on street-level locations

ADVANCE proofs on the press sheet of "Scaramouche" show that Metro is leaving no stone unturned in its efforts to supply the theatre man with a campaign sure to put the picture over in a manner deserving of its class. We have not seen the complete campaign as yet, but from the looks of what we have already seen it is to be deduced that the exhibitor will have plenty of aids to help him fill his theatre.

For instance, Metro has prepared at least thirty newspaper ads. on the picture. And this is but an indication of what has been done in every other line—posters, newspaper ads., lobby displays and the like.

One thing that struck us particularly was a half-page cartoon, which is so good in subject matter and execution that it can be used profitably either in advertising or to illustrate a special story. Incidentally, the stories prepared on "Scaramouche" are the kind that should be easy to place with editors.

WHILE we think of it we want to register a most emphatic kick against that type of advertising which actually offends good taste—and there is considerable of it in this business. And by that we mean we object to those so very "clever" ideas which act as a boomerang and make the recipient "sore" instead of selling him.

True, there is a legitimate form of teaser advertising which gets positive results. But we see neither humor nor selling force in any advertising which is liable to react unfavorably—and in that classification we include such things as the letter to the husband which might be the cause of suspicion on the wife's part, the "phoney" automobile summons, facsimile printing which makes the recipient believe he has been given something of value until he reads between the lines and other "clever" ideas along the same general lines.

Quite so, this form of advertising attracts attention to the picture. But does it create a desire to spend money to see the picture? Is it positive or is it negative? We are certain that its effect is negative—that it keeps more folks away from the theatre than it attracts. Think it over for yourselves, advertising men. Put yourself in the place of an unsuspecting person who has been on the receiving end of one of these "clever" ideas. How would YOU feel? Guide yourselves by your own answer.

Thanks.

"Tiger Rose"

Exceptionally Fine Entertainment Provided in Warner Brothers' Version of Belasco Stage Success

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

David Belasco's play, "Tiger Rose," one of the biggest stage successes of recent years, has been transferred to the screen by Warner Brothers, and in its film form should duplicate the success of the stage version and rank among the big box-office winners of the season.

Here is a picture that is strong in the elements that appeal to every type of patron. Foremost among these is the story in which there is tremendous suspense, which is combined with vivid and continuous drama, excellent acting and strikingly beautiful and effective surroundings.

There is action galore, and once the story gets well under way your interest is held with tremendous tenseness as you follow the ever-changing and fast-moving sequences wherein the heroine seeks to prevent the arrest of her lover by the Mounted Police who have surrounded the house. Although these sequences comprise by far the greater part of the picture, and the action all takes place during one night, there is not a superfluous foot of film used.

It is doubtful if there has ever been a production with stronger, longer sustained or better handled suspense. This is the second of the Warner-Belasco productions filmed with the active co-operation of Belasco, and the superb development of the interest and action is striking evidence of the ability of this master of stagecraft.

The picture version also has the advantage of the presence in the stellar role of Lenore Ulric, whose performance in the stage version had much to do with its success. She gives a colorful performance and an excellent one. The only thing missing is her very effective voice, but offsetting this is the fact that it is a drama of the great Northwest and advantage has been taken of the tremendously greater opportunities offered by the screen along this line. In fact the atmosphere of the production, and the beautiful and effective exterior scenes are unusually fine and are one of the striking points of the production.

"Tiger Rose" has been admirably directed by Sidney Franklin, and fine performances are given by every member of the supporting cast, which includes such well-known players as Forrest Stanley, Joseph Dowling, Andre DeBeranger, Sam DeGrasse, Claude Gillingwater and Theodore Von Eltz.

While this is a story of the Northwestern Mounted Police, and your patrons may be surfeited with pictures dealing with the "Mounted" or say they do not like them, don't let this fact sway you, for here is one that they will like.

Story

On the death of her father in the north woods, Rose leaves home. As her raft drifts toward the rapids she is saved by Devlin of the Mounted. Old Hector McCollins at the trading post adopts her. Devlin falls in love with her but she gives her love to Bruce Norton, a young engineer surveying the route of a railroad. Suddenly Dr. Glendenning, who had lured Bruce's sister away from her husband and abandoned her, comes on the scene. In a fight Bruce kills him. Seeking refuge in the trading post, he hides in the basement, where he is found by Rose and a mysterious character, Dr. Cusick. Surrounded by guards under Devlin, Rose and the doctor finally, after many hours of scheming, get Bruce away. Devlin catches them, Rose holds him at bay until Bruce can get away. Bruce, however, returns next day, as he knows Rose would have to go to jail for aiding him. He serves his sentence and then he and Rose find happiness with each other.

Max Graf Production for Metro is Good Box Office Attraction for Any Theatre

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Good audience material is afforded here in the idea of a doorstep baby being adopted by the captain of an old trading vessel. It has an appealing human note in the person of little Frank Darro. This angle will make it a decided success with women, while from almost every other standpoint it is a man's picture.

It is amusing, sympathetic and dramatic. The scenes showing the baby making his acquaintance with the captain and the chef are a good-humored exposition of bachelor inefficiency in handling infants. This part is favorable to getting many laughs. Later the comradeship between the youngster and the Captain is none the less appealing. There are a number of original twists as when the Captain tests the mettle of his young charge by calling him a "sissy boy."

William T. Carlton gives a fine performance as the Captain. He has the combination of sternness and tender feeling that is necessary for this part. The fight over the child in which, with the aid of the dog, he beats up the two villians, played by Mitchell Lewis and George MacQuarrie is one of the thrills. Suspense is well carried through a number of good incidents. Frank Darro shows considerable talent and splendid direction.

Anna Q. Nilsson gives a realistic performance and Raymond Hatton is excellent. While the sea angle is not all-important the atmosphere and types are very good, furnishing a vivid background for an appealing story.

Captain McTeague and his one-legged chef, Noodles, find a baby with a half of a dollar bill pinned to its dress. An attached note explains that the mother will claim it later with the other half of the bill. The baby, "Bill" becomes the fondest possession of the Captain who discharges one of his mates, Martin Webber because he taunts the boy. Martin determines to get even, learns that he is the father of the boy, kidnaps him and with the law on his side claims "Bill." The Captain fights him and Martin is killed by some one else, whereupon the Captain and the boy's mother join forces in taking care of "Bill."

"In the Palace of the King"

Goldwyn Offers Gorgeous, Spectacular and Interesting Version of F. Marion Crawford's Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Once again has F. Marion Crawford's popular novel, "In the Palace of the King," reached the screen. This time as a Goldwyn production which from the standpoint of beauty and magnificence, spectacular splendor and elaborateness of appointments makes it stand out even in this season of big costume productions.

All of this serves as the background for a charming romance of the brother of King Philip II. of Spain for a lady of the court who is not of royal birth, which contains a number of dramatic situations, strikes a strongly sympathetic note and which should thoroughly satisfy the majority of patrons.

With the exception of the spectacular introductory scenes showing the hero fighting the Moors, practically the entire action takes place "in the palace of the king" and Director Emmett Flynn has certainly succeeded in producing an atmosphere of regal splendor, for the sets, costumes and every detail are in keeping with the splendor expected to surround such a monarch.

There is not merely one but many unusually elaborate sets, some of which are of huge size, notably one of a side of the royal palace, with balconies and stairways that reach to the top and seem several hundred feet long. These are shown filled with people, there are also hundreds of men in the spectacular battle scenes and in the scenes shown the tumultuous welcome given the hero and his victorious troops.

Another enormous and elaborate set represents the royal ballroom, and there are many scenes which take place in the various rooms of the palace, all of which are large and beautiful with their gorgeous furnishings. The photography of the picture is superb and "In the Palace of the King" is certainly a delight to the eye.

This is enacted by a well-selected cast containing an unusually large number of well-known players. Blanche Sweet and Edmund Lowe have the leading roles and give excellent performances; Miss Sweet is particularly effective in the emotional scenes. Hobart Bosworth is splendid as the rugged old general, Pauline Starke appealing in the role of the blind girl, Sam DeGrasse effective in the unsympathetic role of the king, William V. Mong gives a good interpretation of the king's confidant and Lucian Littlefield as the jester and Aileen Pringle as the king's favorite give good performances.

"In the Palace of the King" is a picture well worth seeing, should please the thousands who have read the book, and offers good opportunities for exploitation.

Length, about 9,000 feet.

Story

King Philip of Spain, jealous of the growing power of his brother, Don John, who has been successful in many wars, sends him to fight the Moors, hoping he will be defeated. Don John is in love with Dolorez Mendoza, whose father, General Mendoza, fears for her honor and forbids the affair, as Dolorez is not of royal blood. Don John returns victorious and resumes his suit for Dolorez. In the meantime Princess Eboli, the king's favorite, is leading a plot to capitalize on Don John's popularity and place him on the throne in place of the dissolute Phillip. The king goes to see Don John and in a dispute wounds him and leaves him for dead. General Mendoza takes the palace. Dolorez, who fled from her father's wrath to Don John for protection, learns the truth and to save her father tells the court she has been dishonored. Dolorez goes to the king and threatens to tell the real truth unless her father is pardoned. Don John recovers and the king not only pardons Dolorez's father but agrees to her marriage with Don John.

"The Near Lady"

Gladys Walton Starred in Universal Adaptation of Frank R. Adams Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Universal is offering a light comedy-drama with an appeal chiefly for the Gladys Walton clientele. It is a story of the newly rich and gives the star a fine chance to cavort in finery, keeping the comedy note paramount. It is suitable for the program theatre—and more especially for the double bill.

Most of the picture is frothy but rather pleasing entertainment for some of the fans. The comedy is obvious and familiar, but the action is peppy and the general atmosphere tends to keep one fairly interested. It starts out in a barber shop where there are a few laughs and proceeds to the home of the Schultzes where an invention of a sausage machine has brought sudden wealth. Nora, manicurist, becomes a society flower. She is a decorative figure in the drawing room and on the bathing beach—particularly the latter.

The story has very little drama. It has a number of bright incidents and gains a semblance of suspense at the close when the lovers elope in an automobile, are arrested for speeding, but are given a marriage license by the judge instead of a jail sentence. It is not really exciting or deeply moving at any time. But where there is a demand for light features such as this and where Gladys Walton is popular, "The Near Lady" should have a good chance.

Story

Nora Schultz was a manicurist and Basil Van Bibber the son of a prominent family. Nora's dad, a butcher, invented a sausage machine that made the Schultz family rich. The Schultz aggregation met the Van Bibbers. The two dads discussed the matter and a marriage pact was formed. The young folks agreed to pretend an engagement for the sake of their parents. Fate took a hand and dealt out love cards to Nora and young Van. Both tried to hide their love. Van faked a drunk scene to get Nora to break the engagement. But she stuck by him when the police threatened whereupon they acknowledged their love and were married.

"Fashionable Fakers"

Johnnie Walker Is Starred in F. B. O. Release That Is Pleasingly Original

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

An antique shop furnishes the rather original setting for most of the action in this up-to-date and youthful subject which has a pleasant freedom from hokum. It has a number of new angles and a story full of interest.

Johnnie Walker plays the character of "The Worm" which was the original title of the story and in some respects more significant than the present title. His performance is exceptionally good. As Thaddeus Plummer, he is an appealing chap whose business it is to bore worm holes and other signs of age into new furnishings.

The story is humanly told without triteness. It has entertaining incidents rather than big scenes or melodramatic thrills. Yet there are moments of light suspense, many natural and amusing touches and one imaginative flash in particular, as when the magic rug, which the "worm" has been fooled into buying, takes him on a gay expedition to the Orient.

Mildred June is youthful and charming and the entire cast shows good taste in the directing. The settings are consistent and pleasing without being especially elaborate. "Fashionable Fakers" is not a big attraction in any sense but as light entertainment is suitable for high class theatres as well as the smaller houses.

Story

Thaddeus Plummer works in an "antique" shop, transforming the new into the old. An Oriental sells him a wishing rug for one hundred dollars and Thaddeus nearly loses his position because his employer says the rug is worthless. Thaddeus tries wishing on it. First he wishes to see his girl, which he does, and an old misunderstanding is cleared up. Then he wishes for one thousand dollars, which he gets. His employer has left the shop to Thaddeus and another assistant in order to escape the law, so Thaddeus gets the establishment and the girl.

"The Light That Failed"

Paramount Offers Fine Version of Kipling's Strongly Dramatic and Pathetic Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Rudyard Kipling's well-known and intensely pathetic story of an artist who gradually went blind as the result of a sabre wound has again reached the screen. This version was made by George Melford for Paramount. It is an exceedingly well-made production, and although certain changes have been made in the story, the power and force of the original has been maintained.

"The Light That Failed" is a story in which the pathetic note is always dominant and overshadows every other angle. It contains situations that are touching and intensely dramatic and tremendous sympathy is aroused for the hero in his misfortune. It is an unusually well-made and well-acted picture but naturally the atmosphere is depressing and its appeal to the patron will depend on his reaction to the intensely sympathetic and dramatic values. The spectator who seeks solely to be amused will be disappointed.

This picture has some of the best acting recently seen on the screen. Percy Marmont gives an unusually fine interpretation

How One Wide-Awake Showman Uses Our Reviews

Long before there was any other trade paper in the field, Moving Picture World was regarded as "the exhibitor's Bible" and its reviews have always been acccepted by exhibitors as a dependable guide in booking pictures. Many live-wire showmen have found it distinctly advantageous to use quotations from its reviews on programs and advertising matter.

Going these progressive exhibitors one better, Manager C. C. Howell of the Monarch Theatre, Portersville, Cal., devotes an entire page in his house program to reprinting IN FULL Moving Picture World's review of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan production, "Enemies of Women." Thanks, Mr. Howell, for the compliment. You know from experience that our reviews are dependable and give what the exhibitor AND HIS AUDIENCE want to know.

Story

Dick Heldar and Maisie Wells as children pledge their undying love. Years pass and Dick's ambition to become a great artist causes him to wander to faraway places seeking inspiration. At Port Said he meets Torpenhow a war correspondent, agrees to illustrate his articles and in a campaign in the Soudan is badly wounded with a sabre. Returning to London he finds himself popular. Accidentally meeting Maisie whom he has not seen for years, the old love returns. She urges him to paint a masterpiece. Seeing Bessie, a girl of the streets he is inspired and using her as a model stars to work. Torpenhow becomes fascinated with Bessie and Dick persuades him to go away. Bessie is infuriated at him for destroying her happiness. Dick's eyesight begins to fail and the doctor tells him he will be blind in a week. Bolstering his courage with drink he paints furiously and just finishes the picture when he goes blind. Bessie gets her revenge by slashing the picture and making it appear to Maisie that she is Dick's mistress. Dick, sits grieving all day. Bessie learns he is really blind and confesses the truth to Maisie, who comes back to Dick and tells him she loves him and is going to take him to her home to care for him always.

"The Red Warning"

Good Western Stars Jack Hoxie in Spectacular Scenes—Produced by Universal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Jack Hoxie's admirers will like him in his latest Universal Western. He is once more a spectacular hero in scenes that demand hard riding and fighting. The production is up to the standard of the best that the star has done and has the qualities that appeal in the theatres specializing in Westerns.

This is largely because of the fine backgrounds that have been provided. The desert and cattle scenes are picturesque and expansive, giving an impression of bigness that is always effective in Westerns. A large cast strengthens this effect in the climax where the hero heads a band of riders who destroy the cattle rustlers in answer to a signal fire which is "the red warning."

The star does some splendid riding and acts naturally and pleasingly. His pursuit of the villain along the canyon rocks and the fight in the water furnishes a thrilling conclusion. Elinor Field is his pretty leading woman. The picture has been well directed and belongs among the good program Westerns of the year.

Story

David Ainslee, cleaned out by rustlers, his home mortgaged, journeyed into the desert in search of a lost mine. He was found dying by Phil Haver, a young prospector, and Toby Jones, a grizzled old prospector. Ainslee gave them a poke of gold dust, asked Phil to pay off the mortgage and take care of his daughter. Haver met the girl and fell in love. Later, Old Toby located the claim. Cattle rustling activities in the territory aroused the ranchers. Led by Haver, the outlaws were captured in a great night chase.

"Slave of Desire"

Excellent Cast in Goldwyn Version of Balzac's Highly Imaginative Story "The Magic Skin"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title "Slave of Desire" Goldwyn is presenting on the screen "The Magic Skin" one of the best known stories by the celebrated French author Honore de Balzac. Highly imaginative and fantastic in the extreme it makes no pretense to probability, for the author sets forth his message by the device of a magic skin the possession of which brings the fulfillment of every wish, each wish causing the skin to shrink until an unselfish wish breaks its magic power.

Although the basic idea is in line with the fairy stories of childhood the surroundings and the manner in which the story is constructed shows that it was intended for the adult intellect. With George D. Baker as the director, it has been given an excellent production and is portrayed by a cast of well-known players. The sets are excellent and there are a number of scenes of great pictorial beauty. The story deals with the power of unselfishness as opposed to the destructive power of selfishness.

The theme is well handled, there are some effective melodramatic touches near the end especially where the Countess Fedora, a vamp, is buried under an avalanche of rock. The action is under way for some time before there is any indication of the imaginative and supernatural angle. Despite the excellent handling of the subject and good work of the players, the production only succeeds in arousing mild interest. This is probably due to the nature of the theme which is quite different from the trend of the average modern story. The moral effect of the picture is good. Its greatest appeal will be for those with an imaginative turn of mind and readers of the works of Balzac.

George Walsh was a good selection for the role of the hero. Carmel Myers is unusually alluring as the vamp, Bessie Love is winsome as the heroine, and George Connelly is effective in the weird and somewhat allegorical role of the keeper of the magic skin.

Story

Raphael Valentin, a poor poet, is discouraged because he cannot sell his poems and his rich uncle will not help him. Pauline, his landlady's daughter loves him. Rastignac his friend takes Raphael to the salon of the popular Countess Fedora who becomes interested in him and soon he is a great success. He falls in love with her but finds she is false and losing his money at gambling is about to commit suicide. An old man tells him to start anew. He goes to pawn a scarab and finds it entitled him to the possession of a magic skin with which his every wish is gratified but each time the skin will shrink and death will result with the last wish. He gets fame, wishing for wealth his uncle dies and he gets his money, he wishes the Countess may lose her sway over men and she does. Finally, as the skin shrinks, he is racked with fear and is afraid to even wish his friends good cheer. Pauline, grown wealthy, comes to him, but the Countess is present and makes her think she and Raphael are engaged. Finally in a dream, Raphael sees himself using his last wish to save Pauline who is in danger and that this —his first unselfish wish—has broken the spell. Awakening, he goes to Pauline and they plight their troth, unafraid of the menace of the magic skin or that it can any longer harm them.

"South Sea Love"

Shirley Mason Pretty and Appealing in Fox Program Picture of Fair Interest

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A light program picture with some good sea scenes and a peppy role for Shirley Mason is offered by Fox in "South Sea Love." It has no highly involved plot but has a popular amount of action and romance and the star's admirers should find it pleasing.

The half-Spanish, half-French daughter of a sea captain falls in love with a South Sea trader but scorns and deserts him when she hears that he has a wife. There is not much suspense during the interim until they meet again, but the main appeal is pictorial. The star plays a dancer in a tropical cafe where she has a fairly thrilling escape from the owner, and rushes to save her sweetheart whom the sailors are about to torture. The climax is not intensely thrilling because it seems rather stagy and J. Frank Glendon's acting is unconvincing. Shirley Mason's performance helps to make it interesting.

There is an effective storm-at-sea scene and there are many beautiful shots. The fact that the entire picture is lacking in realism will not hinder its success in most program houses as it is light, pleasing and has a pretty star.

"Sporting Youth" Is Being Edited

Byron Morgan, author of many famous racing stories, such as, "The Roaring Road," "What's Your Hurry?" and others, is now assisting in the final editing of "Sporting Youth," which he wrote as an original story for Reginald Denny, Universal star.

The story was filmed for Universal under the direction of Harry A. Pollard. It will be released as a Universal-Jewel production in seven or eight-reel length.

Denny's next picture, which will be made sometime after the first of the year, will be a film version of "Love Insurance," a novel by Earl Derr Biggers.

"Ladies to Board" New Mix Feature

Tom Mix has started work at the William Fox West Coast Studios in his latest starring feature, "Ladies to Board." The story is by William Dudley Pelley. Jack Blystone is directing the screen version. Dixon W. Lee prepared the scenario.

Gertrude Olmsted is the leading lady. The supporting cast also includes Phil McCullough, Pewee Holmes and Gertrude Claire.

Gets Raise and Diamond Ring

Vitagraph announces that Robert S. Horsley, assistant sales manager of the New York branch, has been promoted to the managership of the Philadelphia office, effective of November 27.

The staff of the New York branch gave him a farewell party at which he was presented with a diamond ring as a token of the affection and esteem in which the office force holds him.

Big Exploitation for "Mailman"

Big preparations are being made by postal workers in San Francisco to put over the engagement of Emory Johnson's production of "The Mailman" when it opens at Loew's Warfield on December 1.

Street parades, band concerts, and other practical methods of showmanship will be employed by the San Francisco people to put the picture over.

New Gilbert Film

John Gilbert's next feature picture produced by William Fox will be an original story by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, titled "Just Off Broadway." Edmund Mortimer is directing.

"Rosita" Given High Praise in Los Angeles

The popularity of Mary Pickford and her pictures never was more clearly demonstrated than at the recent Los Angeles premier showing of this cinema artiste's new production, "Rosita," at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre.

Streets near the theatre were jammed hours before the hour set for opening the theatre doors. Bowing and smiling, Miss Pickford was escorted through a narrow lane forced through the throng of her many admirers.

Inside the theatre the audience, which filled every bit of seating and standing room, the spectators all rose and cheered and applauded the guest of honor as she was ushered to her box.

"'Rosita' is outstanding in two particulars," said the reviewer for the Examiner, "the skill with which the star keeps her youthful quality and naivete throughout a role of more adventurous character, and the fact that it is the first Ernst Lubitsch production made in America."

"The picture demonstrates a new Mary Pickford," said the Express, "a Mary Pickford losing none of the charm of her youthful roguishness and impishness, but sobered into mellowness."

"'Rosita' has an exceptional background as a production," said the critic for the Times. "Its quality is indeed notable. There is a fine dignity and taste about the sets. The cast has been assembled with splendid discretion. Miss Pickford herself really has outdone anything she has previously achieved."

Critics Call New Ray Film His Best Picture

Under the heading, "Ray at Best in Pilgrim Film, Pre-eminent History Drama," the Washington Post of last Monday said:

"Since Griffith's 'The Birth of a Nation,' there had been no motion picture dealing strictly and authentically with American history on an elaborate scale until 'The Covered Wagon' appeared, to prove anew the tremendous appeal of actual human experience when it is used for screen material.

"Now, however, has come a third pre-eminent American historical drama in Charles Ray's 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' which not only vivifies the immortal characters of Longfellow's epic, but also spans the great adventure of the Pilgrim Fathers.

"The picture is not mere formal history. It is, first of all, a story and entertainment. Mr. Ray gives what is unquestionably the most serious and earnest portrayal in his long and distinguished career."

The Times said: "One leaves the President Theatre this week with a feeling of having witnessed an actual page from American history, and that Charles Ray has in 'The Courtship of Myles Standish' placed both his own name and that of his production in the very first rank of the cinema brigade."

Carl Anderson Obtains the Screen Rights to Big Stories

"Flaming Passion," an original story by Hal Evertz, popular fiction writer, has been obtained by Anderson Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement made this week by Carl Anderson, president of the organization. It will be put into production immediately. California has been selected as the locale and a unit is leaving shortly to begin work.

Anderson has also closed for the screen rights of several of the famous old stage dramas, one of which is "The Danites," which will be filmed in New York.

Foster Gilroy, of the Anderson company, has just returned from Chicago after securing two outstanding stories which are to appear in a widely read fiction magazine in February. These are "Lady Betty," by Lela Cordova, and "The Return of David Brown" by Arnold Walker. It is understood that these two productions will be made in California early in the spring.

Trimble to Direct "Sundown"

"Sundown," First National's drama of the West, will come into being under the directorial hand of Larry Trimble. "Sundown" is an original story written by Earl Hudson, production manager of First National. To date no cast has been selected for "Sundown." The story has been scenarized.

"The Extra Girl" in Great Demand

"The Extra Girl," Mabel Normand's latest starring vehicle, is in great demand for early showings by exhibitors throughout the country, according to reports coming from Associated Exhibitors. It has just completed an eight-week run at the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, opened at the California and Portola theatres in San Francisco, and will soon open in numerous key cities for extended runs.

Jack Root, manager of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, said: "I consider it Miss Normand's best work. It has pathos, art interest, comedy and thrills. One of the best pictures of the year."

Fine Tie-up for Warner Classic

Exhibitors will have a splendid exploitation tie-up with the Warner Classic, "Lucretia Lombard," the story of flaming passion adapted from the novel of the same name by Kathleen Norris, as the McClure Syndicate has made arrangements to publish this amazing love story in newspapers throughout the United States and Canada.

Such a tie-up should greatly help exhibitors, who can also take advantage of the tremendous sale that has already taken place on the book.

"The Barefoot Boy" Sold for Wisconsin

That great interest is manifest throughout the country in the special attraction, "The Barefoot Boy," the all-star production which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing for Mission Film Corporation is seen by the rapidity with which territories are being signed on it, says C. B. C.

A big sale of this production was recently made to the Celebrated Players' Film Corporation, of Milwaukee, which has contracted to distribute the production in the Wisconsin territory.

"Captain Blood" Screen Rights Bought by Smith

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has returned from London where he met Rafael Sabatini, author of "Captain Blood," world picture rights to which Mr. Smith purchased. He spent a day with the author and tramping over the scenes near Bridgewater, where the Duke of Monmouth entered England in his rebellion against James II. in 1685.

"I recognized the superior screen material in the book when I first read it. It was to help gain the real spirit of Sabatini that we made the pilgrimage by motor from London to the landing place of Monmouth," said Mr. Smith at the Brooklyn studio.

"The sea fights will be the greatest effort at filming water battles ever attempted and I am safeguarding their accuracy in detail. In London I engaged a shipwright who is an expert on ancient shipbuilding. With him I visited the British and London museums and examined the models of craft of England, France and Spain of the latter part of the seventeenth cenutry. He is now searching Europe for any such craft that may be available; and is also preparing plans which will enable us to build such ships as may be needed. When his plans are finished he will come to the United States and join the Vitagraph forces at Hollywood, where production will begin sometime early in the spring."

Mr. Smith announced that J. Stuart Blackton will go to California for his next Vitagraph super-feature, the subject of which has not yet been decided.

Mr. Smith returns to Hollywood in two weeks, accompanied by Mrs. Smith, who made the trip abroad with him. He will take active charge of production at the company's studios there, and his leisure will be spent on his three thousand acre ranch in Southern California, where he indulges in his one hobby—the raising of Hereford cattle. He said that he contemplated no let up at all in Vitagraph production.

T. O. D. C. Campaigns to Give Owners Good Lists

Coincident with the announcement from the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation that the organization's first release through Anderson Pictures Corporation would be ready in time for early January play dates, comes the report that President William A. True, of the T. O. D. C., has begun a campaign to insure to his organization the full measure of co-operation from exhibitors anticipated at the time of the formation of this independent corporation.

The first step in Mr. True's plans calls for the covering of the entire theatre owners' field with an inquiry, designed to ascertain not only how many play dates have been set aside for T. O. D. C. product, but just when these dates fall.

"With this data in hand," said Mr. True this week on his return from Washington, "no theatre owner need face the problem of keeping his program up to a high standard of entertainment value. If the country-wide discussion of the curtailment of production has had the effect of implanting a doubt in the exhibitor's mind as to the supply and quality of pictures this season, I can state in behalf of our organization that he can dismiss these fears.

"We have studied these needs carefully, based upon existing conditions among exhibitors in every section of the country, and that we shall be able to offer them the grade of product urgently desired and at an equitable rental goes without saying. It was for this purpose that our distributing corporation was formed."

Metro Film Endorsed by Well Known Society

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" now playing a record breaking New York engagement at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre has been endorsed by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau. This followed the presence recently of more than three hundred members of the Bureau at one of the "Scaramouche" performances—an event that was staged by Metro for the purpose of giving the Bureau members a chance to broadcast the merits of the production to the several thousand of other members in various parts of the country.

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau is an organization very much like, in its functions, to the Drama League which concerns itself with supporting the best things of the stage. Following the viewing of "Scaramouche" its members, highly enthusiastic, promised to do everything in their power to bring it to the attention to the greatest number of people.

C. C. Burr Producing "The Average Woman"

Having finished the first in the series of the big four specials, "Restless Wives," which he has been engaged to produce for the Burr-Rogers Producing Corporation, C. C. Burr announces that he is ready to go into production at his Glendale Studios with the second picture of the 1923-1924 series, "The Average Woman." The story is by Dorothy De Jagers.

"The Average Woman" is an up-to-date story. A cast of screen stars, headed by Harrison Ford, David Powell, Pauline Garon, De Sacia Mooers, Burr McIntosh, William Tucker and Little Russell Griffin, has been selected for the leading parts. William Christy Cabanne is directing. The remaining pictures in the big four series, "Lend Me Your Husband" and "Youth to Sell," will be filmed as rapidly as possible.

C. C. Burr will personally produce three pictures for individual theatre owners who are venturing into the producing business. The first picture of the new series is entitled "The Unloved Wife," from the play of the same name.

Wide Publicity for "The Drivin' Fool"

Milton R. Crandall, director of publicity and advertising for the Rowland and Clark theatre circuit, in Pittsburgh, waged a whale of an exploitation and publicity campaign for the showing at the Regent and Blackstone theatres during the week of Nov. 26, of the Hodkinson speed feature, "The Drivin' Fool." One of the big features of the campaign was a tieup with the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh.

The Syria Automobile club distributed hundreds of stickers among members, which urged upon all that they refrain from being "a driving fool." Members of the Co-Operative Club of Pittsburgh were informed at a meeting held at the William Penn Hotel of the engagement of the picture at the two theatres. Other tieups, and voluminous newspaper advertising helped materially in the success of the campaign.

Film from Noted Story Is Among Fox Releases

"You Can't Get Away with It," a special production made from the famous Gouverneur Morris story, and an Educational Entertainment, "Johnny's Swordfish," are on the Fox Film Corporation release schedule for the week of December 9.

In cast, story and exploitation value "You Can't Get Away with It" is one of the best of the season's releases, Fox says. Gouverneur Morris, taking the story of a girl who defied the conventions and was then condemned by the world, has developed a powerful emotional drama.

Percy Marmont, whose greatest characterization was that of Mark Sabre in "If Winter Comes," has the leading male role in this picture.

"Johnny's Swordfish" presents interesting adventures in fishing for swordfish. "The Canadian Alps," another Educational Entertainment, will be released December 23 and will be the last of these short subjects for this year.

Reports Bookings

W. F. Seymour, Eastern and Central Division sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has returned from a several weeks' trip through his territory. Mr. Seymour reports the closing, during his stay in the Middle West, of all the remaining unsold key towns out of the Chicago branch office where "Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton whaling feature, has not been shown. These include Indianapolis, Racine, Wis., South Bend, Ind., and the entire Saxe Circuit in Wisconsin.

"The Old Fool" Is Film of Family Life

When a picture is of universal interest, it is sure to mean "big money" at the box office and satisfaction for every exhibitor who books it. It was with this truth in mind that the Outlook Photoplay Corporation produced "The Old Fool" which Hodkinson has announced as its forthcoming release.

"The Old Fool" deals with the home life of a family of four generations and presents the problems which such a family has to confront, as well as the vibrant human interest, the laughter, and the pathos that is found in every home, no matter how commonplace. Those who have witnessed a pre-view of the picture agree that it will awaken a sympathetic response in an audience made up of patrons of any age.

Makes "First National Month" Mean Big Things to Motion Picture Public

The task of "selling" the public on First National Month has been undertaken so thoroughly by that company that by the time the campaign is officially opened by E. A. Eschmann on January 1, the entire picture patronage of the nation will be fully acquainted with the five First National pictures to be offered during the drive, and the stars who appear in them.

Through practically every medium of advertising picturegoers will learn that the screen stars have invited them to a great New Year's party at their local theatre for the entire month of January. Colored slides, banners in two colors and special two-colored one-sheets will carry the message of the "New Year's party" to the public. In addition to this the pictures released will have behind them a big national advertising campaign which, coupled with the First National Month advertising, will assist in bringing a big meaning to the month of January.

"If the public is sold, the exhibitor must be," is the claim of E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution of First National, under whose guidance the drive is gaining strength and power, "and in this case we may drop the hypothesis.

First National's big five will start with "Boy of Mine," created by J. K. McDonald, William Beaudine, Booth Tarkington and Ben Alexander, producer, director, author and featured player respectively. It was this same quartet which was responsible for the unusual success of "Penrod and Sam." "Boy of Mine" is not a "kid" picture, although it is the acting of Ben Alexander which brings a majority of the laughs and tears.

Another early January release is "Black Oxen," also of the First National Month five. It is a Frank Lloyd production featuring Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in a picturization of Gertrude Atherton's novel of the same name. This novel, according to authentic reports, is still foremost in demand in the leading libraries of the country.

Following these will be offered Norma Talmadge in "The Song of Love," in which the star is seen as an Arabian dancing girl, with Joseph Schildkraut in the leading masculine role.

Samuel Goldwyn's independently produced "The Eternal City" was made in Rome by George Fitzmaurice, and is headed by a cast including Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, Lionel Barrymore, Richard Bennett and Montague Love.

The last of the five productions, released late in January, is "The Swamp Angel," a heart interest drama, in which Colleen Moore has the featured role.

Firemen Lead Parade of Mailmen

Not only did the postal department of Pasadena, Cal., support Emory Johnson's mail drama, "The Mailman," during its recent engagement at the Florence Theatre in the Southern California community but the fire department as well took a hand in the campaign which broke all records in the amusement annals of the town.

The firemen's band led the big mail workers' parade which featured the opening night of the week's successful run. More than one hundred mail workers, led by Postmaster Knight, also took part.

Laemmle Offers "The Hunchback" to Exhibitors for Early Booking

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" Universal's big spectacle drama, will immediately be made available to regular motion picture theatres, Carl Laemmle announces. The production is now enjoying special presentations in legitimate theatres throughout the country. It is in its thirteenth week at the Astor Theatre, New York City.

The Universal chief stipulates two conditions to be fullfilled by exhibitors playing "The Hunchback." One is that a reasonable number of seats must be held at $1.65 top, and the other is that the picture shall be presented on a two-a-day basis. These conditions are necessary for the time being, he asserts, to maintain the prestige of the production and assure it a real run.

In a statement addressed to-day to all exhibitors, Mr. Laemmle deplored the necessity of showing "The Hunchback" in legitimate theatres, but explained the reasons therefore and outlined his plan for a special arrangement release of the picture to regular cinema houses. The statement which is headed "Are You Ready?" follows:

"Much against my own desire, I am showing "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in various legitimate theatres throughout the United States. I am making a profit on these showings and at the same time I am preparing the way for the exhibitor who will show it later on at popular prices.

"The only reason I have chosen legitimate theatres is because the picture simply must have a real run and most exhibitors up to now have been fearful of changing their policy to two-a-day and charging $1.65 top.

"Now that I am in the midst of "road-showing" the big production, I find that exhibitors of importance are changing their attitude and are showing a disposition to change their policy, thus cutting legitimate theatres out of the picture business.

"I approve of this with all my heart and soul. I have always claimed that pictures belong in picture houses, but with a picture as great and as unparalleled as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," I positively cannot sacrifice it or treat it like an ordinary picture.

"Wherever I have found a first class picture house that is willing to change its poliey by showing 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' twice a day at $1.65 top, I have given it the preference over any legitimate theatre.

"I stand ready to do this whereever it is feasible.

"I am not pretending that I expect to sacrifice this production. I am satisfied that it is the outstanding picture of the past ten years, one that will last for years to come, one on which I could afford to take my time about booking. I consider it so exceptional, such a demonstrated success wherever it has shown, that I am more than doing my part when I offer to run it in picture houses instead of legitimate houses.

"If I get a proper run in every community and at the same time strike the first blow to kill the evil of running pictures in legitimate theatres, I will feel more than satisfied.

"Of course, I don't mean that every ticket must be $1.65, I mean that a reasonable number must be sold at that price. Afterward you will want to repeat the picture at popular prices and reap a double profit from it.

"That's my story. How does it strike you? If it appeals to you, wire or write me."

"The Hunchback" had its world's premiere in the Astor Theatre, New York City. It is still playing in that house to remarkable crowds—in its fourteenth week. Its runs in Boston, Chicago and other big American cities have been similarly successful. Everywhere the big spectacle drama has met with 100 per cent. criticisims, being praised more consistently than any motion picture ever put out.

It recently opened in the Empire Theatre, London, and created as great a sensation in the British metropolis as it did in this country. British film critics predict a long run for it in the Empire.

Enthusiastic Praise Given "Pleasure Mad"

Enthusiastic reviews were given by the San Francisco press to "Pleasure Mad," Reginald Barker's new production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. The picture, which is an adaptation of Blanche Upright's novel, "The Valley of Content," and was recently presented at the Warfield.

"'Pleasure Mad' is a great picture," said the critic of the San Francisco Call and Post. "'Pleasure Mad' drew crowds for its opening and kept up the pace all along," stated the San Francisco Chronicle. "In the hands of Reginald Barker," said the San Francisco Bulletin, "'Pleasure Mad' has been made a screen achievement."

"The World Premiere of Blanche Upright's picture 'Pleasure Mad' is a much applauded success," wrote the San Francisco Examiner. "It is a good picture for everybody to see." "In 'Pleasure Mad,'" said the San Francisco News, "Norma Shearer, who plays the part of the debutante, shows talents of the first magnitude. And when it comes to playing a mother role we know of none better than Mary Alden in this picture."

"This Freedom" Called Fox's Best of Season

Critics of the motion picture trade papers and also of the New York daily newspapers enthusiastically praised the William Fox picturization of A. S. M. Hutchinson's novel, "This Freedom," which had its premiere last week at the Central Theatre. Several of the critics called this production the best picture on this year's list of Fox releases.

The New York Morning Telegraph said: "From a point of intelligence and good sense in all departments, including the photography, it is to our knowledge the best picture offered by the Fox organization."

"It is well made and well acted," said Moving Picture World. "It is out of the ordinary and gets away from the beaten path of the majority of screen productions. The thousands who have liked the book will certainly like the picture." Motion Picture News said: "Once the early scenes are over, with the attendant planting of this figure and her impulses, there is released a straightforward and logical sequence of dramatic scenes."

"Innocence" Edited and Exploitation Is Ready

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation editing staff has completed final editing of the newest feature, "Innocence," starring Anna Q. Nilsson. Slight changes were made in New York under the personal supervision of Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn.

A new type of art titling has been used on "Innocence," which places the titles of this production among the artistic. They are said to be more elaborate than any that have been used on any of the pictures on the C. B. C. series. J. M. DeAragon, portrait painter and illustrator, was engaged to supervise the special art work.

All the advertising accessories are also ready for release to franchise holders and exhibitors at the same time, so that there will be no delay involved for the several exhibitors who are reported already asking for dates on the picture.

Stays Second Week

On Saturday, December 8, "Flaming Youth," First National's picturization of the sensational best seller of the same name by Warner Fabian, closed its metropolitan premiere run at the Strand Theatre, having been held over for a second week because of the big patronage. "Flaming Youth" is one of the few pictures which has been able to earn an extended run at the Mark Strand. It was originally assigned one week at that theatre.

Miss Bradbury in "The Turmoil"

Kitty Bradbury, character actress of aristocratic type, known especially for her work in Charlie Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" and in "The Midnight Alarm" with Percy Marmont, has been engaged by the Universal Pictures Corporation to play the important role of Mrs. Vertrees in Hobart Henley's elaborate filming of "The Turmoil."

Foreign Sales Starts

The Richmount Pictures sold Fred Thomson series of six Western Pictures for Monogram Pictures Corporation to Sociedad General Cinematografica, for the following countries: Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Bolivia, Peru and Equador.

400 Washington Nuns See "The Hunchback"

One of the most unusual audiences in the history of an American theatre recently assembled in the Shubert Belasco Theatre, Washington, D. C., to witness a private and special performance of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Through the courtesy of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, and with the sanction and approval of Archbishop Michael J. Curley of Baltimore, more than 400 nuns, members of the various Catholic sisterhoods, in and around Washington, visited the Shubert-Belasco Theatre for the special showing of the picture.

Not one of the religious sisters had seen a performance or a motion picture in a theatre since taking the first vows which pledged them to a life of prayer and comparative solitude. The performance was arranged through the National Catholic Welfare Council and Washington Council, Knights of Columbus, who issued the invitations after receiving the permission of Archbishop Curley, spiritual head of the Catholics of this arch-diocese.

Closes for Fall Output

C. C. Burr, president of the Mastodon Films, Inc., reports that his company has closed with several of the leading state right exchanges in the country for the franchise on the entire series of independent pictures which his company will produce for the season 1923-1924.

This week negotiations were completed with the F. & R. Film Company of Minneapolis, Minn.; for the state rights in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. This exchange purchased seven pictures.

Extend Los Angeles Run of 'The Unknown Purple'

"The Unknown Purple," Carlos Production, directed by Roland West for Truart from his stage success of the same name, is playing an extended engagement at the California Theatre, Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Examiner says: "Roland West's remarkable drama, "The Unknown Purple," is replete with thrills, action and mystery." The Los Angeles Evening Express has this to say: "The Unknown Purple" is a sure-fire mystery drama, packed to the limit with ingenious complements of thrills, romance and cleverly devised suspense." The Illustrated Daily News critic writes: "This production, it can truthfully be said, is one of the most unusual mystery melodramas that have come to the screen in a long time."

The Times says: "The outstanding personality in the acting is Henry B. Walthall, who offers one of the best and most cryptic of his portrayals."

New Herald for Fox Picture

One of the exploitation aids prepared by the publicity department of Fox Film Corporation to supplement its press book on "You Can't Get Away with It," which was released this week, is a four page miniature newspaper which can be used as a herald. This sheet presents the story and theme of the photoplay in vivid newspaper style and is illustrated with scene photos from the production.

New York Critics Laud F. B. O's "The Mailman"

New York newspaper critics have taken more than usual pains to praise Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O. photo-thriller, "The Mailman," now playing at the B. S. Moss Cameo Theatre in its second week. The New York Daily News said: "The newest servitude picture is great. Director Emory Johnson has worked wonders with a thrilling, human, sometimes spellbinding story."

Morning Telegraph: "'The Mailman,' F. B. O.'s feature at the Cameo this week, is very good melodrama."

Sun and Globe: "People who enjoy motion pictures bristling with melodramatic thrills intermingled with pathos will get a lot of 'kicks' out of 'The Mailman.'"

Post: "'The Mailman' is full of thrills."

Telegram: "'The Mailman' is one of the few films that succeed in touching the hearts of the everyday man and woman."

New Bedford Sees Film 3 Times

"Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton whaling feature was shown for the third time in New Bedford, last week. New Bedford is not only the locale of the story, and the place where the picture was made, but the town actually sponsored the film. Many of its residents draw dividends from the picture.

The house at which the revival showing was presented was crowded during the whole of last week.

Goldwyn Picture Makes Big Hit at the Capitol

"In the Palace of the King," Goldwyn's first Emmett Flynn production, a picturization by June Mathis of F. Marion Crawford's popular novel of Spain in the reign of King Philip II., was presented at the Capitol Theatre, New York, last Sunday and scored a big hit. It is spectacular and dramatic, with some of the biggest and finest sets ever constructed for a motion picture. The cast is one of unusual importance, embracing Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Pauline Stark, Aileen Pringle, Hobart Bosworth, Sam de Grasse, William V. Mong, Lucien Littlefield and many others.

The New York newspaper reviewers were most cordial to "In the Palace of the King" in their criticisms. New York American said: "Thrills, intrigues, striking sets in 'Palace of King' at Capitol. The production, pictorially, is an artistic creation."

Evening Telegram: "Takes a well merited place among the worth-while screen offerings of the year." Evening Journal: "A gorgeous production. Settings that make one gasp." Morning Telegraph: "A picture of real worth." Journal of Commerce: "Takes well-merited rank among the worth-while screen offerings of the year."

The World: "Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Hobart Bosworth and Pauline Stark were thoroughly convincing." The Sun and the Globe: "At times you are so enchanted watching its gleaming scenes you lose sight of the fact that your hearts are being broken right under your nose." Evening World: "Seldom have we seen a picture that was easier to gaze upon."

Warner Studios to Keep Busy Making Big Films

Jack Warner, who is helping make movie history via Warner Screen Classics, came to New York for a short visit, broke records for the largest number of conferences held in the minimum of time, and departed to resume his duties as production manager of the West Coast studios. While here, he announced important production plans which will make the Warner studios one of the busiest organizations in the industry.

Two productions, "How to Educate a Wife" and "Broadway After Dark," will start on the week of December 10. The first is from the pen of Elinor Glyn. The three principals in the cast are Marie Prevost, Monte Blue and Claude Gillingwater. The direction will be by William Seiter.

"Broadway After Dark" will be produced by Harry Rapf and directed by Monta Bell. Adolphe Menjou will head a noteworthy cast.

Next on the Warner program will be the famous Sinclair Lewis novel, "Babbitt." Direction has been assigned to Harry Beaumont. Dorothy Farnum will adapt Clyde Fitch's play, "Lovers' Lane," which William Beaudine will direct, following "Babbitt" in order of production. Following it will be "Cornered," under the directorial guidance of William Seiter.

Monta Bell will have another script ready for him in "The Yoke," a novel which has attained sensational success on the Continent, and which is gaining widespread popularity here. Its author is Hubert Wales.

Harry Beaumont is lined up for "Being Respectable" and Julien Josephson will do the script of "The Tenth Woman."

"Little Old New York" Is Breaking Records

With regularity "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, continues on its record-breaking career in all parts of the country. Following in the wake of its sensational two weeks' run at the Capilol Theatre, New York, the Davies feature struck new high marks in Baltimore, Washington, New Haven and other cities.

All attendance records at the New Theatre, Baltimore, were shattered at the first showing of "Little Old New York." According to Eugene M. Daly, manager of the New Theatre, 10,000 persons saw the film on the opening day.

A. Interrante, manager of the Bijou Theatre, New Haven, Conn., wired that the film opened to the biggest business in the history of that house.

Walter J. Price of Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, sends word to the effect that "Little Old New York" did $22,385.20 on its opening week and that the picture in its two weeks would probably do about $40,000.

Manager Woody's Tour Fruitful for Ray Film

Returning a few days ago from a trip through the Central West, J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, literally told with contracts the story of his travels. Primarily the trip was made to confer with branch sales managers of Associated and renew acquaintance with exhibitor friends, but when the executive reached the home offices his bags were fairly bulging with records of first run bookings he had closed.

In Detroit Mr. Woody closed the deal for the indefinite run of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" at John H. Kunsky's Madison Theatre. This engagement got off to a splendid start last Sunday, according to reports to the home offices. Mr. Ray himself was host of the evening of the opening, having hurried on to Detroit at the close of the first week of his run in Washington.

In Omaha Mr. Woody closed arrangements for a test run, starting early in January, in Blank's Rialto Theatre. The results of this run will be watched closely, for on the outcome will depend the conditions under which "The Courtship" will be sold through the Blank circuit in Iowa and Nebraska territory. The same arrangement was made with John Hostetler for the Plaza, Sioux City, where the opening will be in the holiday period, runs in the many other Hostetler houses in Iowa coming later.

Hollywood Mailmen Help Publicize "The Mailman"

F. B. O. report that the mail workers of the West Coast are completely "sold" on Emory Johnson's drama, "The Mailman." It was amply proven by the energetic co-operation given the West Coast theatres by the mail men of Hollywood when "The Mailman" opened its engagement at the new Hollywood Theatre last week.

Letter carriers distributed from house to house cards which advertised the production and at the same time carried a line asking the citizens to do what they could to advance the cause of the mail workers.

The mail worker's co-operation also embraced other practical stunts which served to arouse interest in the picture in the fast-moving little community by the Pacific. Banners were placed across public thoroughfares and hundreds of cards were used on Hollywood boulevard admonishing pedestrians to "do their Xmas shopping early."

First National Film Is Started

December 1 saw the "shooting" of the first scene of "Lillies of the Field," a Corinne Griffith production, which John Francis Dillon is directing for First National release.

"Lillies of the Field" is an adaptation of the play of the same name by William Hurlburt, which ran for a year on Broadway. It has a rich society background.

Schmidt Joins F. B. O.

The Film Booking Offices announce this week that Artie Schmidt, formerly general sales manager of the Universal, has joined its forces and will be in charge of West Coast division.

Keaton Film Premiere on Coast Successful

Buster Keaton's second feature comedy for Metro, "Our Hospitality," was given its premiere at the Warfield Theatre in San Francisco recently and some of the comments of the San Francisco press were:

"'Our Hospitality' is in my opinion the most enjoyable of the Buster Keaton comedies," wrote the San Francisco Examiner critic. The critic of the San Francisco Call said: "Here is a comedian with a desire to really act. Keaton is a comedian, dramatic actor and acrobat par excellence." "'Our Hospitality' is Keaton's best comedy," said the reviewer of the San Francisco Bulletin. "'Our Hospitality' is even vastly superior to 'Three Ages,' Buster's first feature Metro comedy," said the critic of the Chronicle. "Keaton's new comedy is enormously funny," wrote the reviewer of the San Francisco Journal. "One scene after another precipitates hysterics. This is Keaton's best picture."

Hoffman to Go West

With the return of General Manager of Sales Alexander Aronson of Truart Film Corporation, it is expected that M. H. Hoffman, vice president, will shortly make his contemplated extended trip to the West Coast to supervise production activities which are getting under way full force. It is anticipated that soon Truart will have four or five units continually engaged in production, inasmuch as two more units are expected to start work by December 1.

Cruze Film 34 Weeks at Hollywood

"The Covered Wagon" closed its run of thirty-four weeks at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood Saturday night, breaking the week's record for the house by $1,624. According to the figures received by wire from the Coast and given out by the Paramount office in New York, the gross receipts for the final week were $25,133, as against the house's weekly dollar capacity of $25,068.

The picture opened at the Egyptian last March and its thirty-four weeks of continuous showing broke all long-run records for the Pacific Coast. The total receipts for the engagement were $712,045, or an average of $30,942 per week. The total attendance was 695,717, nearly 100,000 more than the total population of all of Greater Los Angeles.

The Egyptian will be closed for a short time for renovation preparatory to the opening of Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments."

"Gold Diggers" Make Record in Baltimore

A brand new record for the city of Baltimore, Md., has just been established by "The Gold Diggers," the Warner Brothers' screen version of David Belasco's famous stage play of the same title. This picture is being held over for the second week at the Wizard Theatre in Baltimore. When it is considered that this is the second run and that the picture was held over for a second week also on first run at the Baltimore Metropolitan Theatre, some conception of the production's wonderful drawing power can be gained.

The holding over of a picture on second run establishes a new record for the city of Baltimore, it is stated. The picture did a stand-up business all week at the Wizard.

"The Gold Diggers" is creating new box-office records all over the country, according to reports.

Pathe Films Lead List in Sherwood Selection

In his recently published volume, "The Best Moving Pictures of 1922-23," Robert E. Sherwood leads off his list of the sixteen best with two Pathe feature releases—"Nanook of the North" and "Grandma's Boy." Pathe scores again in Mr. Sherwood's list of "Honorable Mentions" in the same volume by the inclusion of "Safety Last" and "Dr. Jack."

In his chapter on "Short Subjects," Mr. Sherwood has singled out for special mention such Pathe releases as "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?", starring Ben Turpin; Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies; and the Will Rogers vehicles, "The Ropin' Fool" and "Fruits of Faith." Paul Terry's "Aesop's Film Fables," which are also released weekly by Pathe, Mr. Sherwood classes as "foremost among the animated cartoons."

Writing of "Nanook of the North," Mr. Sherwood says: "There have been many fine travel pictures, many gorgeous 'scenics,' but there has been only one that deserves to be called great. That one is 'Nanook of the North.' It stands alone, literally in a class by itself. Indeed no list of the best pictures of this year or of all the years in the brief history of the movies, could be considered complete without it."

Pathe's "Columbus" Breaks Plaza Records

"Columbus," the first of Pathe's thrilling series of historical dramas, being produced by the Yale University Press under the general title "Chronicles of America," was given its New York premiere at the Plaza Theatre recently and proved a big success, the theatre management reporting that the picture played to increasing business each succeeding day of the run and on the final day smashed all records for Saturday business in the history of the theatre.

The screen critics of the New York dailies accorded the production an enthusiastic reception, emphasizing in most instances the dramatic qualities as well as the authenticity of historical detail embodied in the picture.

The New York Times in its account of the Plaza showing said that the pictures "show those phases of our past which explain the significance of our present, and render these truthfully, inspiringly, and beautifully."

The Evening Mail commented: "'Columbus' held the interest of the spectators from start to finish. . . . The picture is beautifully mounted and moves along in an authoritative manner."

The Evening Post said: "The production does no violence to tradition and presents in a graphic and effective manner the essential points of the historical narrative."

Premieres on Two Coasts of "The Virginian," Good

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred picture, "The Virginian," had its first New York showing last week at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. C. B. MacDonald, manager of the theatre, reports that "The Virginian" gave that house the biggest opening since the Dempsey-Firpo fight pictures.

The Evening Mail wrote: "The motion picture version of Owen Wister's novel, 'The Virginian,' is a true representation of the original story, beautifully mounted and well directed." The New York American said: "'The Virginian' is a well acted, well presented and well aimed bit of entertainment." The New York Tribune commented: "'The Virginian' is about the best thing we ever saw Mr. Harlan do."

The New York Herald said: "'The Virginian' is a melodrama of the old school but a fresh point of view has been brought to bear on it and it is leadened with very antique hokum." The Evening Journal said: "The photoplay is something about which the producers can well boast."

"The Virginian" also did a record business at its western premiere, according to the management of the Granada Theatre, in San Francisco, where it has just closed a week's run. The critics there were unanimous in their praise.

"The Swamp Angel" Is Finished

Production has been finished on "The Swamp Angel," a First National picture featuring Colleen Moore and giving prominence to a supporting cast of "big names."

Written by Richard Connell and read by thousands as a magazine serial the story was directed by Clarence Badger and is scheduled for January release.

Has Closed Deal for Thompson Films

W. G. Underwood, president of the Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Texas, closed a deal with Monogram Pictures recently for the Fred Thomson series of six Westerns for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Films Widely Booked

The Robbins Circuit, which embraces Utica, Syracuse and New York, has booked all of the available seventh year Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases, including Marion Davies' picture, "Little Old New York." Mr. Robbins came to New York to close the deal.

The Rice chain of suburban theatres in Milwaukee has bought "Little Old New York" and all the seventh year Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the Fern, Riviera and State theatres. Tony Sudekum, who operates the Fifth Avenue and Knickerbocker theatres in Nashville and houses in four other towns, has closed with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan for the entire first group of releases.

Distinctive's George Arliss picture, "The Green Goddess," Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York" and Goldwyn's "The Slave of Desire" have been booked by the West Coast Theatres. "The Green Goddess" will also be shown at the Ascher Circuit in Chicago.

Goldwyn's spectacular romance of medieval Spain, "In the Palace of the King," was played at the Century Theatre in Baltimore and the Rialto Theatre in Newark last week. It is the attraction at the Capital Theatre, New York, this week.

Mollie Ring in New Meighan Film

Mollie Ring has been added to the cast of Thomas Meighan's new Paramount picture, "Pied Piper Malone," as have also the following children: Dorothy McCann, Billy Baker and Marshall Green. The last named is the young son of Alfred E. Green, Meighan's director.

Crosland Finishes "Three Weeks"

"Three Weeks," the Goldwyn studios' picturization of Elinor Glyn's novel, has been completed.

Alan Crosland, who directed "Three Weeks," and his wife and son and Lynn Shores, Crosland's assistant, have left the studios for New York, where the director will continue his work under his Cosmopolitan contract.

Chaplin Making "The Gold Rush"

Announcement is made from the Charles Chaplin studio that "The Gold Rush" will be the title of the forthcoming Chaplin comedy, work on which has been begun and for which the producer-star is now preparing his story.

The story will be a Chaplin story of the days of the "Forty-niners," Chaplin himself will again don the baggy breeches, the old shoes and the faithful derby, and from all reports from those "in the know" the story as being outlined will present the comedy genius in the funniest role he has ever attempted.

This will be Chaplin's first comedy release for United Artists Corporation.

"Unknown Purple" Praised in Boston

When "The Unknown Purple," Truart's thrilling mystery production, played extended day and date first-run engagements at the Modern and Beacon theatres, Boston, it was greeted with unusual praise by the newspaper critics of that city. In the Boston Advertiser, George C. Mackinon wrote:

"Henry Walthall, once-more happily active upon the screen, assumed at the Modern and Beacon this week the pivotal role in a filming of 'The Unknown Purple,' that notable example of melodramatic originality. As a stage play 'The Unknown Purple' went its creepy way here in Boston for several weeks, to the delight and horror of the populace.

"As treated in the films, it has probably gained interest. For the weird phenomenon of the invisible man is handled by the camera in an eerie way which even the most consummate stagecraft could not hope to duplicate. When a piece like 'The Unknown Purple' comes along, with its mysterious purple light and its invisible avenger, people like it because it's different."

Ray Film a Hit in Washington

Charles Ray's pretentious production, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," opened at the President Theatre, Washington, D. C., to a large and enthusiastic crowd, Sunday, November 25, for an indefinite run. It was the eastern premiere of the picture and some of the nation's greatest political and social leaders attended. So great was the crowd seeking admission that the box office had to be closed long before the night performance started, and many hundreds were turned away.

Mr. Ray was enthusiastically cheered at the close of his address. The newspapers were unanimous in their praise, saying that productions of this type attracted a class of patrons who had never before been prevailed on to attend a picture theatre.

Talmadge Starts Second for Truart

Under the direction of Henry Lehrman, Richard Talmadge, stunt artist extraordinary, has begun work on his second production of a series of thrill dramas for Truart Film Corporation. The picture which is entitled "On Time" is being produced by Carlos Productions. The same type of high-grade, all-star cast is being assembled by Director Lehrman to support Talmadge in this picture that was presented in the star's support in "Let's Go!"

Phil Rosen, well known for the many virile productions he has directed, has been engaged to direct the third Richard Talmadge picture and will spend two months on the preparation of the continuity and assembling of cast during the time Talmadge is engaged in making picture number two of the series.

Both the second and third productions have melodramatic stories in which Talmadge is afforded an opportunity for stunts, but stories which also are swift-moving, realistic vehicles.

Ramon Novarro Going to Egypt

Having completed his big role before the camera in Fred Niblo's new production, "Thy Name Is Woman," Ramon Novarro arrived in New York last Thursday on the first lap of his journey to Egypt, where he will join Rex Ingram, who is conducting extensive researches there. Mr. Novarro's trip across follows cable instructions received from Mr. Ingram at the Metro offices here last week.

Mr. Ingram's party in Egypt already consists of the following: Alice Terry, his wife; Curt Rehfeld, his production manager; John Daumery, well-known technician, and John F. Seitz, who headed the corps of cameramen that so successfully photographed "Scaramouche."

"Going Up" Smashes Records Everywhere

Douglas MacLean's comedy, "Going Up," continues to smash records, according to reports to Associated Exhibitors. Exhibitors are calling this feature one of the outstanding box office winners of recent years, and some, as further evidence of the picture's success and in response to public demand, are prolonging the runs originally scheduled.

L. B. Gross, manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal., wired to J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated: "Douglas MacLean in 'Going Up' smashed house record Sunday and bids fair to establish new record for week. Congratulations. In 'Going Up' you have best box-office bet in years. Same fans come back again and again. Last reel contains more real laughs than any six-reel comedy. Audience rocked building with dynamic laughter."

E. C. Prinsen, of the Fond du Lac Theatre Company, Fond du Lac, Wis., wired to Ralph Wettstein, Associated Exhibitors branch manager in Milwaukee: "'Going Up,' with Douglas MacLean, finest comedy we have played in months. Booked for three days and played five. Congratulations."

Mary Carr Signed by Johnson

Before leaving Hollywood for San Francisco in quest of location last week, Emery Johnson, the producer, announced that he had signed Mary Carr for a series of big attractions to be released through F. B. O.

His first production with Mrs. Carr will also present Johnnie Walker, the team appearing as mother and son for the first time since their memorable triumph in "Over the Hill."

Kunsky Likes Ray; Woody Tells Plans

J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, who is making a tour of the exchanges in the Middle West, stopped off in Detroit for a few days and closed a deal with John H. Kunsky for "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Charles Ray's super picture. The deal also involves the personal appearance of Mr. Ray with the showing of the picture, which is to open at the Madison Theatre, week of December 2, for an indefinite run. Mr. Woody says:

"We are going to release big pictures only. We have turned down over 100 pictures this year that were submitted to us for distribution. Some of them were mighty good program pictures, others were mediocre, but we are after only pictures that have big box-office value because we have learned it is the only kind exhibitors will pay regular money for—and it does not pay to handle the other kind. Exhibitors can look for some big announcements from Associated Exhibitors during the next few months."

J. Stuart Blackton finished "Let Not Man Put Asunder," the picturization of Basil King's story at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn last week. Pauline Frederick, Lou Tellegen and Helena D'Algy played the last important scenes in a drenching rainstorm.

Others in the cast are: Leslie Austen, Pauline Neff, Violet De Barros, Martha Petelle, Gladys Franzin, Clifton Webb and Homer Lynn.

"Anna Christie" in 35 Theatres

December 2 to 8 will be "Anna Christie" week, as far as thirty five leading first run theatres are concerned. During that week the Thomas H. Ince production will appear simultaneously in thirty-five cities of the United States, according to First National. These theatres include the Strand in New York; Chicago in Chicago; Warfield in San Francisco and the Circle in Indianapolis. This array of simultaneous first runs is among the largest the industry has ever seen.

"Anna Christie" has already won unstinted praise from trade and fan magazine critics. It was selected by the National Board of Review for a special screening at the Town Hall, New York, on November 28 in order that the entire membership and its friends might witness a picture that bore testimony to "the progress and power of the screen."

The booking of "Anna Christie" in thirty-five cities was accomplished by First National at a time when exhibitors are seeking the best pictures for pre-holiday presentation. Approximately a million people will see "Anna Christie" during the one week of December 2 to 8.

"Maytime" Debut at Newark

The screen version of Rida Johnson Young's play, "Maytime," which B. P. Schulberg has produced as a Preferred Picture, had its first public exhibition last week at the Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J. This picture, claimed to be the biggest production Gasnier has ever made, opened to big business the first day which was maintained throughout the whole week.

The film will be released generally within the next month. Its cast includes Ethel Shannon, Harrison Ford, William Norris and Clara Bow.

One Feature Company and Five Comedy Units Working for Pathe

With one feature company and five comedy units engaged on new subjects at the Hal Roach Studios in Culver City, production activities at this important producing center are moving along at a fast pace, it is learned in a statement issued this week from the Pathe home office.

Camera work on Hal Roach's new feature, "Somewhere in Missouri," is now well under way. Hal Roach is directing this subject. The cast includes Glenn Tryon, Blanche Mehaffey, Emma Tanzey, John Gavin, Leo Willis, Bob Kortman and Richard Daniels. The story is a human-interest drama built around politics in a small town of the Middle West.

Having made a brief essay into the circle of white shirt fronts and tuxedos in "Uncensored Movies," Will Rogers is back to the he-man togs of the plains in his two latest comedies for Pathe. The second of these, which was started this week, introduces Rogers as a delegate to a cattlemen's convention.

Bob McGowan and the "Our Gang" players are busy on a new two-reel comedy. The new two-reel comedy just started by Stan Laurel promises, it is said, to be one of the funniest of his series for Pathe. James Finlayson and Ena Gregory appear in support of Laurel.

The new "Spat Family" comedy, on which work has started, presents the discordant trio on a motoring trip.

Charles Chase is in a new single-reel comedy, made under the direction of James Parrott.

Finds Metro Films Are Favorites of Patrons

Metro heads the list of top-notch pictures through a greater percentage of popular hits according to Mark M. Hansen, manager of the Victory Theatre at Oxnard, California. Mr. Hansen canvassed his patrons regularly for a period of many months with the result that out of a total of nine pictures that Victory patrons liked the best three of them are Metro productions. These are "Broadway Rose," one of Mae Murray's recent Metro starring pictures; "Strangers of the Night," the Fred Niblo production of Walter Hackett's great international stage success, "Captain Applejack"; and "The Eternal Struggle" the new Reginald Barker production taken from G. B. Lancaster's widely-read novel, "The Law-Bringers."

"Broadway Rose" belongs to the season just closed but both "Strangers of the Night" and "The Eternal Struggle" are products of the 1923-1924 Metro season. The two latter pictures were produced under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices.

Incidentally Miss Murray has already completed her newest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," while "The French Doll," the first of Miss Murray's pictures of the new season is now an assured success all over the country.

Warners' Production Draws Crowded Houses

Rin-tin-tin, the trained police dog, continues to receive lavish commendation both here and in England, by reason of his work in "Where the North Begins," the Harry Rapf production for Warner Brothers, which Chester M. Franklin directed. In British trade papers, reviews praise Rin-tin-tin and the production to the skies; in this country the picture, following its Broadway premiere at the Capitol Theatre, is playing to capacity houses.

At the Warner home offices telegrams received from exhibitors testify to the manner in which box offices are reaping profits from the picture. George J. Schade, of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, writes: "Am showing 'Where the North' for three days. First two days already shattered all previous three days' runs by almost one hundred per cent."

From W. M. Smith, proprietor of the Rialto, Tulsa, Oklahoma, comes word that "'Where the North Begins,' with Rin-tin-tin, broke our Sunday record today in a period when business is very slack."

Playing in Duluth during the week of November 11, at the Lyric, the picture received high praise. The Duluth Herald said: "The Lyric was crowded yesterday and seldom have we seen such an enthusiastic audience."

Commenting on the same picture, the London Cinema has the following to say: "The dog, Rin-tin-tin, is beyond praise." The Bioscope remarks that "this film admirably fulfills its purpose in providing many opportunities for a magnificent Alsatian wolf-hound who plays the leading part with extraordinary intelligence and effect." The Kinematograph Weekly declares: "Rin-tin-tin is himself and an endearing personage."

Yale Press Progresses on Historical Series

Rapid progress is being made on the extensive production schedule of Yale University Press in its screen series of historical dramas for distribution by Pathe. The unusual success which has attended the presentation of the first two numbers of this group in prominent first-run theatres has added fresh impetus to the production activities, and several additional subjects will shortly be ready for distribution.

The next subject to be released is "Vincennes," which has been set for December 2nd. This deals with the historic campaign of George Rogers Clark against the British stronghold of Vincennes during the Revolutionary War. Following "Vincennes" on the release schedule will be "Daniel Boone," which has been set for December 30th.

Already completed are: "The Frontier Woman," directed by Webster Campbell, which is said to throw into high relief the heroic part played by women in the pioneer life of America; and "Peter Stuyvesant," directed by Frank Tuttle and dealing with the Dutch settlement on the Hudson. In preparation are "Wolf and Montcalm" and "The Gateway of the West."

San Francisco Premieres for Two Goldwyn Films

Two of Goldwyn's big productions scheduled for early releases will have their premieres in San Francisco. They are Victor Seastrom's first picture made in this country, "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," and Rupert Hughes' own original screen story, "Reno," formerly called "Law Against Law."

"Reno" has a cast headed by Helene Chadwick, Lew Cody, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Hedda Hopper, Kathleen Key, Dale Fuller, Rush Hughes, Marjorie Bonner, William Orlamond, Howard Truesdale, Lucien Littlefield, Hughie Mack, Pery Hemus.

Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Hobart Bosworth, Creighton Hale, DeWitt Jennings and Evelyn Selbie have the leading roles in "Name the Man!"

Good Publicity for Vitagraph Production

J. Louis Rome, manager of the Apollo Theatre, Baltimore, Md., created a furore in that city when he played "The Midnight Alarm," the Vitagraph super-feature with Percy Marmont in the lead.

Manager Rome obtained from the City Fire Department the oldest steam fire engine it possessed and two of the old fire horses which had long since been retired. He used this as a street ballyhoo for "The Midnight Alarm."

The newspapers of Baltimore immediately started a controversy over the city government lending its equipment for such an advertising purpose. When it was realized that "The Midnight Alarm" is one of the greatest lessons against carelessness and for fire prevention, public sentiment favored the Fire Department's action.

Officials of Syracuse, N. Y., accepted this view at a pre-release showing of the film. The Syracuse Safety Council publicly endorsed the showing of "The Midnight Alarm" in a letter addressed to Mitchell Fitzer, manager of the Rivoli Theatre.

"Rosita" Goes Well in Milwaukee

To exceptional business Mary Pickford's "Rosita" opened an engagement at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, November 10. The booking was on short notice, but Managing Director Leo A. Landau, conducted an aggressive advance campaign which included big newspaper copy in forceful style, a selected advance trailer, street car displays and window showings.

As a result of the success of "Rosita" at the Alhambra the run was extended for a second week with a shift to the Garden theatre, the companion house of the Alhambra, which is one block away and which plays at exactly the same prices as the Alhambra.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

New Grantland Rice "Sportlights" Head Pathe December 16 Program

Week of December 16 marks the release on Pathe program of the first of the new single-reel series of sport pictures based on stories written by Grantland Rice, the well known sporting authority whose articles are syndicated in seventy newspapers. The series is known as "Sportlights" and the first one, "Wild and Wooly," visualizes a Western rodeo with a full quota of thrills and spills.

This week also sees the release of "Sunday Calm," another of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies, in which the kids go on a picnic with results that can easily be imagined. About the only calm thing about this fast-moving and humorous comedy is the title, for it is filled with rip-roaring fun.

The single reel comedy "Fully Insured," presents Snub Pollard as a man who takes out an insurance policy which assures an uninterrupted salary while he is out of a job. He gets fired continually and the agent keeps getting him a new job.

The Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its tenth episode, "Circumstantial Evidence," while the current Aesop's Fable is "The Cat Came Back," in which the cat steals a teddy bear, dreams he goes to the Arctic and is chased back by a bear.

There are a variety of interesting subjects in Pathe Review No. 50, including a pictorial section showing "Three Lakes" in the Adirondacks, the manufacture of wrought iron lamps, the catching of tuna fish and a color section containing picturesque views of the Hopi Indians on their reservation in Arizona.

Two issues of Pathe News and one of Topics of the Day complete the releases for the week.

Tie-up for Rogers Two-Reelers

Pathe announces the completion of arrangements by which the two-reel comedies which Will Rogers is making for Pathe release will be tied up with Rogers' newspaper column, "Slipping the Lariat Over." This column appears weekly in over fifty prominent newspapers and contains humorous quips and illusions to persons and events in the limelight. This should be of benefit to exhibitors in publicizing the Will Rogers series, three of which have already been released by Pathe.

New Christies Carry Out Slogan "More Action and More Laughs"

The promise of more and faster laughs in the new series of 1923-24 comedies is said to be strikingly carried out in the three most recently completed pictures which will be released during this month and early January on program of Educational Film Exchanges. The action has been speeded up to a faster gait and the situations broadened somewhat, but the comedies still contain definite and coherent plots and the high quality of sets, lighting and photography as the former Christies.

"Black and Blue," released in mid-December, presents Jimmie Adams in a unique role and revolves around a situation where he is given a coat of iodine so he cannot attend his own wedding. This shows him in blackface as he was in "Roll Along," but for the greater part of the film he is a white man. The action reaches a fast pace.

"Call the Wagon," released December 30, presents Neal Burns in the type of picture that admits of as fast action as "Black and Blue." It is played amid beautiful sets and the rapid pace starts almost from the opening scene.

The first one in January will be something out of the ordinary for Christie. The action takes place out west where, as the subtitle says, "Where men are men and the women are even better than that." Bobby Vernon is the featured player, appearing as a Ford salesman. In a country where the horse is king, the flivver leads in a bandit chase and capture, accompanied by real acrobatic stunts.

Thus does Christie get off to a flying start with comedies containing "more action and more laughs" as promised.

Century Starts Two

Two new Century Comedies are now in production. Noel Smith has started on Pal the dog's latest, "Putting It Over," and Al Herman is working on "Captain Apple Sauce," starring Buddy Messinger. Two other directors are due to start work in a few days.

Sennett's Bathing Beauties Return in Pathe Two-Reelers

The forthcoming release by Pathe of the two-reel Mack Sennett comedy, "Trifling," marks the return to the screen of the famous Sennett bathing beauties after an extended absence. The producer has selected for this event fifteen of Southern California's most beautiful women, several of whom have won prizes in contests run by newspapers and magazines.

Harry Langdon will have the starring role in this comedy with Alberta Vaughan as his leading woman, and Jack Cooper, Dot Farley, Irene Lentz and Vernon Dent in the cast. Eric Kenton is directing under Sennett's supervision.

It is stated that the bathing girls will be required to do more than stand around and furnish atmosphere. No girls were accepted who were not proficient in swimming, riding, driving a car and general athletic sports. Among the beauties are Eugenie Gilbert, Cecile Evans, a five times winner, and Elsie Tarron, who was adjudged to have the most perfect figure at Santa Monica last summer.

Educational Cites Poll Showing Old-Time Songs Better Liked Than Jazz

Educational quotes the result of a questionnaire submitted by three radio broadcasting stations as unmistakably indicating a preference for songs of other days over modern jazz.

This questionnaire was sent out in connection with the annual radio show in that city and out of more than 100,000 responses over 70 per cent were in favor of the songs we used to sing. The responses came from every state in the Union, every province in Canada and even from the McMillan Arctic expedition now within eleven degrees of the North Pole.

This, says Educational, is in perfect harmony with the reception that is being bestowed on the "Sing Them Again" series of song-novelty pictures which that company is distributing and which gives the audience a chance to join in the singing of their favorite songs as the words are flashed on the screen.

It is said that audiences in cities ranging from New York to the cross roads hamlet in the West are receiving these old songs in a manner that indicates their preference for the old melodies and appreciation of the chance to sing them again.

Universal Finishes Filming Serial "Beasts of Paradise"

Work has been completed at Universal City on "Beasts of Paradise," the current Universal chapter picture, starring William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick. It was directed by William Craft, veteran maker of many film thrillers.

In addition to the two popular serial stars, the continued feature also, it is said, boasts a strong supporting cast.

Laid aboard ship and on a mysterious island in the South Seas, the picture plot admitted of romantic and suspenseful handling. The action included much jungle stuff and adventures on the part of the leading characters in which wild animals figure.

The supporting cast includes William H. Gould, well-known vaudeville player, as the chief villain. Others are Ruth Royce, Margaret Morris, Jim Welsh, Clarke Comstock, Joe Bonomo, Slim Cole and many more. As the result of her work in this serial, Margaret Morris won a place as chief supporting player in "The Ghost City," a new serial now in production on the "U" lot.

Mal St. Clair Signs with F. B. O.

Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O., arrived at the Robertson-Cole Hollywood studios recently and the first thing he did was to sign Mal St. Clair to direct a new series of H. C. Witwer two reelers.

The title of the Witwer series he will next film will be announced at an early date and production will start at once.

White Signs Burns

"Bobby" Burns, popular writer of comedies, has been added to the Jack White forces and will prepare stories and gags for Mermaid comedies. Mr. Burns has successfully written, directed and played in comedies. He made a series for Reelcraft and owns a studio near Orlando, Florida.

New Bray Picture

"The Man at the Throttle," the latest Bray production on the Hodkinson releasing schedule, is described as a technical romance with a real thrill. The picture depicts the work of a locomotive engineer and the risks and hazards he experiences.

New Semon Comedy

"Horseshoes," the third of the Larry Semon releases by Vitagraph for this season, has been finally edited and prints are being shipped to Vitagraph branches. The two previous Semon comedies were "The Gown Shop" and "Lightning Love."

"Pinto" with Century

"Pinto," whose cartoon work is syndicated in a large number of newspapers, has been engaged by Century to pass on the scripts for all completed comedies in the capacity of gagman.

Pathe Review No. 50

(One Reel)

Beautiful photography distinguishes a group called "The Three Lakes" in this number: interesting and amusing pictures showing the making of new wrought-iron lamps after old-fashioned methods: "Getting in the Tuna Fish" and color views of the Hopi Indians at their basket weaving in Arizona are included.—M. "Sunday Calm"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hal Roach's inimitable "Gang" manages to get as much fun out of Sunday as any other day in this comedy. Their adventures while on a picnic are amusing but to a less hilarious extent than sometimes. It is more like a chain of bright little incidents than a comedy of one special idea and a big punch. Moments such as the wagon breaking down, Farina making off with the lunch and incidentally getting a ride on the pig, the children chasing hop toads and trying the old swimming hole and finally the rainstorm are outstanding "chuckles."—M. K.

"A Midsummer Night's Scream"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Round Nine of the Fighting Blood series has a flurry in Chinatown and a thrilling fight between Gale and Red Mack. Gale is mysteriously summoned to Chinatown where he fights his way to Patricia in distress as he believes, but it proves to be only a big surprise birthday party in his honor. The fight which makes Gale light heavyweight champion of the world is one of the most exciting of the series. The whole number is excellent.—M. K.

"Film Foolish"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

The intimate side of a true to life dumbell man-of-all-trades about the average studio is skilfully revealed, with untouched naturalness, in "Film Foolish," directed by Norman Taurog. Slapstick stuff galore, all kinds of plausible mistakes, and lots of the lowdown on how and why some pictures are made, steep this one to the superlative in plenty of the biff and bang.—T. W.

"The Merchant of Menace"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Better and better seems to be the slogan of the Fighting Blood Series based upon H. C. Witwer's stories. Round Eight is one of the best yet released. As a novelty, it includes a pirate tea on Patricia's yacht which has many bright incidents and a bit of suspense ending in a barge fight between Gale and the heavyweight, Red Mack, which is broken up by the police. It is all sparkling entertainment.—M. K.

"The Income Tax Collector"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Lew Brice is cast as the most unpopular man in the world in this Sunshine comedy. The idea will appeal to a great majority and the action in which the income tax collector is thrown out of a train window, into explosions, through the mouth of a cannon, fed to the lions and still survives so as to make his collection is most amusing. It should be a good choice for almost any house.—M. K.

"Over the Fence"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Educational's latest Juvenile Comedy, "Over the Fence," is the kind that should cause more than the usual number of good hearty laughs. It is just an account of the daily antics of real kids. It can be easily seen that Earl Montgomery got his bunch of kids up to the pitch of fun and fight where they were oblivious to everything else; and those kids go to it, throwing mud at one another as hard as they can in the old swimmin' hole and also succeed with wholesome avidity in mashing the birthday cake of the socially aspiring aunt.—T. W.

"Snooky's Covered Wagon"

(Educational—Animal Comedy—Two Reels)

Without any doubt Educational in this comedy scores one of the greatest exhibitions of a large number of trained animals ever gathered before the camera. The uncannily realistic acting of these animals from the tiniest pig to the biggest lion, and especially that of Snooky the chimpanzee, should make a big hit with everyone. Here is a picture that will make you forget everything else as you sit back and enjoy it. Unique fails to describe the genuine cleverness of this film. Even those to whom animal films do not appeal will like this one, and those who enjoy animal antics will be so pleased that they will thank you for running this picture. The story is by Frank Beebe and it is a John Rounan production.—T. W.

"Fully Insured"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Because of the idea in this comedy being new, it should go fairly well although most of the action is familiar slapstick. Snub Pollard, egg shipping clerk takes out insurance which protects him while jobless, by assuring an uninterrupted salary. It proves easy to get fired—more than once. There are a good number of laughs for those who like rough-and-ready comedy.—M. K.

"The Cat Came Back"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

As a punishment for stealing a little girl's teddy bear, the Paul Terry cat has an exciting nightmare in which he goes on a bear hunt in the Arctic but is chased and terrified by the Mama and Papa bears of his victim. It is a thrilling and amusing number.—M. K.

"Home Again"

(Educational—Song Series—One Reel)

Educational's latest "Sing Them Again Series" under the title of "Home Again" includes "Old Black Joe," "Annie Rooney" and "Home Sweet Home." What led to the composing of each of these songs is enacted by film characters prior to the flashing of the words of each of the respective songs on the screen.—T. W.

"Thundergate"

American succeeds in uncovering and frustrating the schemes of reactionaries in that country to prevent the completion of public improvement fostered by the progressive element, and at the same time rescues a white girl whom he makes his wife.

Owen Moore does good work, especially in the scenes where he appears as an American and also as a Chinaman; his work in the masquerading sequences is not so convincing. His work and the general atmosphere of the production which emphasizes the strange customs of these people as judged from American standards are the principal points of appeal. The story interest lags at times and lacks conviction, but for those who are fascinated by stories of this type, it takes rank well up in its class.

Owen Moore is assisted by a competent cast including Tully Marshall, who does good work as an old Chinese nobleman, Robert McKim as the villain, Sylvia Breamer as his accomplice and Virginia Brown Faire in the role opposite the star.

Story

Robert Wells, an American born in China, is sent by his uncle to assist Ray Williams in building bridges in China. Williams is secretly in the pay of Chinese reactionaries to impede this work. To discredit Wells, he has him given insidious drugs which cause him to lose his grip and sink until he becomes an outcast. The son of the Lord of Thundergate, a Chinese reactionary, steals money and disappears. Meeting Wells, who is in a stupor, he changes clothes with him. The deception is not discovered because of the resemblance between the two, as they are really half-brothers. Wells recovers, discovers William's perfidy, and falls in love with a white girl and saves her from a forced wedding with the Lord of Thundergate.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Electrical Action

Ernest Hauson, Salem, Massachusetts, says:

As a student of electrical engineering I have frequently been referred to your excellent work, "Motion Picture Handbook," for information. I write now with regard to one point which is puzzling me, as follows:

Paragraph 2 on page 6 of the Third Edition, begins: "The general idea is that current seeks to escape from the wires into the ground. This is not true, except insofar as the ground may offer a path from positive to negative."

That statement certainly is sound logic. There is no doubt about that, yet from discussions I have had with men whom I know have had years of experience in practical electrical work, and from my own experience (which is small) I am unable to convince myself that the statement is entirely correct, though I would not have you think I claim you to be in the wrong, for I don't claim anything, being unable to prove anything.

The next sentence of the paragraph reads: "If you could have a generator and wire system working at 5,000 volts pressure, or any other voltage, thoroughly and completely insulated (a condition never found in actual practice) you could stand with your bare feet on wet ground and handle either wire of the circuit without any danger whatsoever, etc."

That is to say, if you had a 5,000-volt alternator or D. C. generator, running at rated speed, connected to supply line which is either open or loaded—no difference as regards the argument?—and the machine and lines have say 100,000 megohms insulation resistance between them and the ground at all points, you claim a man could safely stand on wet earth and handle either wire with bare hands.

Does this claim apply to D. C. systems alone, to A. C. systems alone, or to both? I ask because I think I can see that it would be true of D. C., but I believe conditions are different with A. C. Many electrical men, yourself included, have told me that electricity does not seek to escape into the ground under any conditions. I cannot prove them to be in error, BUT * * *

The good friend then continues for three pages, citing reasons why he feels doubt as to the correctness of the proposition that electricity does not seek the ground except as the ground offers a path from positive to negative. I select the following example, which he cites as illustrative:

Take an automobile ignition system, for example, using a battery of dry cells or storage battery for current source, and a vibrator coil to step the current up for the plugs; or take a Ford, which is a typical example. Here is the experiment:

Selecting a dry day, place the machine on dry ground and pump the tires up to usual pressure. Unscrew all spark plugs. Reconnect the wires to them and lay them all on top of engine. Close ignition switch and when the engine is cranked over by hand, sparks appear at plug points in their respective order, say 1, 2, 4, 3, or whatever the firing sequence may be. Now pick up one of the plugs (if you dare) and, holding it in your bare hand, place the other hand on some part of the engine or metal of the car. When some one then cranks the engine you of course get a jolt. Certainly! for that is the nature of things under those circumstances.

Here Is the Queer Part

Now remove your hand from the car, still holding the plug, but not touching any part of the car except the part of the plug which one side of the high tension circuit. Let some one again crank the engine by hand and YOU WILL STILL GET A WICKED JOLT.

Remember, the car stands on rubber and you on dry ground and you are NOT touching anything except ground and one side of the plug. The man cannot feel a shock except current flows through him, hence he must form part of the circuit, if reasoning is of any value. WHERE AND HOW?

An electrician told me the spark plug shock was due to frequency, but with that I cannot agree. Common sense tells me better. A vibrator could hardly give more than the equivalent of 100 cycles per second, and the shock is felt when a vibrator is used. Hope I have not caused you inconvenience in helping me out.

Nope, you certainly have not, because I can't help you out. Frequency is "out" I think, but there is something here that is too much for me.

After reading friend Hauson's letter I went out and attached a raw (uninsulated) wire to one of the spark plugs of Nancy Hanks, the Go Devil, started the engine at normal speed, and stood on solid granite (which is pretty good insulation) EIGHT FEET FROM THE PLUG and touched the end of the wire with one finger. I was able to touch it without serious discomfort, but there was an effect very much like one gets from a medical battery when the plunger is pulled, say, half way out.

After writing the above and scratching my head a while I went out and tried it over. I found the effect was the same from any part of the length of the wire, or from the plug itself, but was stronger when I touched the other plug. The plugs were still screwed in place in the engine, of course.

I'm stumped. The effect was the same when standing on wet ground and on a solid ledge of granite, which seems to dispose of the idea that current was passing through my body into the ground, and anyhow why would it when the wire itself lay on the rock I stood on?

On the whole I still stand on my original statement, as quoted by friend Hauson, BUT will some of you high tension bugs be good enough to tell Me, Us and Company where in hallelujah that shock comes from. I don't know.

LATER: This thing puzzles me. I'm wondering! My body is being charged at probably many thousands of volts (I don't know the voltage of a spark plug) and discharged to zero many times a second. Could or could not that create sensation unless there be current flow??? I think not! Oh, Shoe! Every time I think I've answered every gosh danged question any mortal man can possibly think of, some nut comes in with a bran new one that has perhaps been right there before my eyes for years, but I'd never thought of it. Get busy, you wise ones. My goat has galloped off into the tall brush and is lost! So I'll give a number of weisheimers who couldn't answer anything more complicated than how much is three and four, and wouldn't answer that if they thought it would help anyone, another chance to yelp: "Richardson's learnin' something from US again"!!!

LENS CHART

By
JOHN GRIFFITHS

Here is an accurate chart which belongs in every projection room where carbon arcs are used. It will enable you to get maximum screen results with the equipment you are using.

The news Lens Chart (size 15" x 20") is printed on heavy Ledger Stock paper, suitable for framing. It will be sent to you in a strong mailing tube, insuring proper protection.

Get this chart now and be all ready to reproduce with maximum screen results the splendid pictures which are coming this fall.

Simple

John C. Billings, Minneapolis, Minn., says:

I am studying hard to fit myself to be a motion picture projectionist. When I say that I don't mean a mere machine operator, but a motion picture projectionist in all I understand that term to mean. Have not progressed so very far yet and am puzzled by some things which may seem simple to you. For instance, the reason I am writing you is that recently a man in one of our theatres, who calls himself an "operator," and really seems, so far as I can judge, to be just that, asked me how I would find the ohmic resistance in a 110-volt fifty-ampere rheostat.

I told him I would divide 110 by 50, which would give me the number of ohms resistance in the rheostat. He said I was wrong. Is he correct?

That depends. If he merely asked you how to find the resistance in a 110-volt fifty-ampere rheostat, he is technically wrong and you are right. However, it may be presumed that you were both talking about a rheostat such as is built to be used in series with a projection arc, in which case he is right and you are wrong, because such rheostats are calculated to deliver their rated capacity when working in series with a projection arc, and since the projection arc itself has considerable resistance, that resistance must first be subtracted. This may be done in either of two ways, the simplest being to subtract the arc voltage from the line voltage and then divide the remainder by the amperage, thus: A 50-ampere arc should operate at about 56 volts. In other words, 56 volts will be consumed in forcing the current across the arc gap.

We therefore subtract 56 from 110 and have 54. We then divide 54 by 50 (voltage by amperage) and find that the rheostat must have 1.08 ohms resistance, OR we may divide 110 by 50, which gives us 2.2 ohms as the total necessary resistance. Then we divide 56 by 50, which gives us 1.12 ohms as the resistance of the arc, and 2.2—1.12 equals 1.08 as the resistance the rheostat must provide.

It is very simple, friend Billings, but is approximate only, since resistance increases with age and the rheostat rated to deliver 50 amperes will, after some use, really deliver considerably less.

Adjustable Shutter

I would like again to call the attention of projector manufacturers to the desirability of an adjustable shutter, or a shutter which may be readily adjusted to different blade and opening widths by projectionists.

The stock (and valid) objection of the past has been that such a large percentage of the men could not adjust such a shutter intelligently, hence would produce a very bad condition, for which the projector itself would be blamed by the exhibitor.

This objection still holds true, insofar as placing such a shutter out as standard equipment. It does not, however, now hold good as to putting it out in the form of special equipment, for there are now a large and increasing number of projectionists who not only would welcome such a shutter, but also would be able to apply it intelligently. I'm for the adjustable rotating shutter as special equipment.

Off Ag'in, On Ag'in

Richard Yancey, Projectionist Criterion Theatre, Poplar Buff, Mo., relates the following happening:

"A very peculiar thing happened here last night. It was drizzling very wet moisture, while lightning was playing hide and seek with itself real frequent when I began the evening show of six reels.

I was projecting the fourth reel when—bing! all the lights, including the projector arc, took a vacation—just went out, as it were. I did not pull my switches, as I should have done. When the lights came on again the projector arc—Powers Projector—lighted up, the projector started and everything was "as was." We use a mercury arc rectifier. The line voltage is 110.

The reason I relate this circumstance is that in the Bluebook you say—page 375—the carbon tips may be within one sixty-fourth of an inch of each other and the arc will not start—that is will not start until the carbons are in actual contact. Mine were more than one-eighth of an inch apart. Please explain what was the cause of the arc lighting.

Could not say positively, but in all human probability a bit of the carbon core fell out, or a bit of carbon dropped off and lodged between the positive and negative carbon tips, or else your current came on again almost immediately. The gas stream will still exist for a second or two after the arc is extinguished, and so long as it does exist the arc will re-strike itself. Just what voltage it would require to cause current to jump an air gap of 1/8 of an inch between cold carbons I don't know, but certainly it would be in excess of 1,000.

On the whole I think something between the carbon tips is the answer, because by the time your rectifier-tube would be started again after it went dead, the arc stream woud have disappeared entirely and no ordinary voltage would then restart the arc.

A. P. S. in Pittsburgh

Recently the American Projection Society inaugurated a policy long since conceived, but held in abeyance awaiting the psychological moment, by establishing a local branch of the society in Pittsburgh, Pa. This branch will be known as Chapter No. Two of the American Projection Society.

This department and its editor congratulate the members of the new branch, and wish for it a long and useful existence, because the objects of the A. P. S. are 100 per cent. good.

Pittsburgh members will, however, do well to not lose sight of these objects, because they form the very keystone of the arch of the whole structure. Without them the A. P. S. falls to the ground, becomes a dead issue and a has-been.

It will also be well to remember that the parent organization has successfully weathered the years by very carefully guarding its membership. So extreme was the A. P. S. in this particular that for at least two or three years no member was allowed to ask a man to join, and one black ball served to reject an applicant. This latter was, however, found to be too severe and was somewhat modified, though to just what extent I do not remember.

You will thus see that getting into the A. P. S. was no easy task, with result that the Society has had the best men in the profession in New York City seeking admission, instead of having to seek for members.

The accompanying photograph shows a portion of the A. P. S. New York City headquarters. To be eligible to membership one must be a competent, capable motion picture projectionist; also he MUST be a man of good character and decent reputation—a man all members will feel it a privilege to associate with.

The objects of the society are: (A)—To supply social contact between the members by furnishing club rooms where they may meet, under right conditions, and enjoy social intercourse, have access to instructive reading matter and enjoy clean, healthful recreation; (B)—To improve the knowledge of the members in the technique of the profession by holding educational meetings at which experts are secured to lecture to the members on various phases of the work of projection.

The editor has for two years been an honorary member of the Society. Prior to that I was an active member, practically ever since the inception of the Society. I am proud of my membership, because it is a recognized fact that only good men are admitted. I therefore am, through my membership, directly allied with that sort of men.

I would respectfully caution the society that, while the establishment of chapters in other cities will broaden the work of the society, still SUCH ESTABLISHMENT SHOULD ONLY TAKE PLACE WITH THE GREATEST CAUTION—after a very thorough investigation to determine whether or no (a) there are sufficient men of the grade required in the territory, and (b) whether or not those men are sufficiently in earnest to give reasonable assurance of permanency for the organization.

I would respectfully suggest that it might be well to require the deposit of a substantial sum of money with the parent organization as a forfeit, to be returned after a certain time—say two years—if the branch has by then demonstrated itself as a going organization. This may seem harsh, but we certainly want no half-hearted, wishy-washy branches of the A. P. S., and if the applicants be in real earnest they will be quite willing to make some practical demonstration of that fact.

In my judgment it will be a tremendous error in any degree to let down the bars by making it easy to obtain membership. If men do not think enough of the A. P. S to make a real effort to get in, let them stay out. WE WANT NONE BUT HIGH GRADE PROJECTIONISTS AND MEN OF STERLING WORTH IN THE AMERICAN PROJECTION SOCIETY. That has been the slogan of the organization, and the organization has succeeded under it. Let the banner remain, and LIVE UP TO IT.

Groetzinger Moves

Brother Groetzinger, formerly of Ft. Dodge, Iowa, has moved to Cambridge, Md. He orders a lens chart and invites me to drop in on him when in that section of the country. Says he will have a modern projection room when he gets things fixed up.

Without a Shutter

John Massiolan and P. L. Brochar, New York City, come in with the following:

There is a bet on and you have been selected as the one to settle it. A says that under certain circumstances it is possible to project a perfect picture, using an intermittent movement projector, without using any rotating shutter or intercepting the light beam at any time, or in any manner. B says it cannot be done. Which is right?

Call your bet off. Both are right, I think. I say this because of the wording of your proposition. There is no such thing in all the world as a perfect picture, or a perfect anything else so far as I know.

Had you said A claims that under certain conditions an acceptable picture may be projected without a shutter, then I would have said A is right.

Given a very weak illuminant, such as gas, with an ordinary cloth screen, it is quite possible to project without a shutter. I have pulled that stunt myself. There is travel ghost, of course, but it is so faint that it can scarcely be seen, and the resultant increased illumination of the screen improves the picture, which the good Lord knows needs improving.

Butler Approves

O. H. Butler, Centerville, Iowa, approves of the term "Projection Room" as against "Projector Room." He says:

I am in line with the others on the subject now being discussed, viz.: the proper term for the enclosure housing working projection equipment—the room from which motion pictures are projected.

I believe the term "Projector Room," proposed for adoption into the official nomenclature of the industry by the S. M. P. E. would better fit a room where idle projectors are stored. I would certainly say that the enclosure variously dubbed the "booth," "box," "cabinet," "coop," etc., in the past should be termed the projection room, because it is the room in which the actual act of projection takes place.

Also, after all your years of work to establish the term "Projection Room," which same was selected after consulting many projectionists and projectionist organizations, it would most emphatically not be the right or proper thing for the S. M. P. E. to try to force you to overturn all that and accept a new and highly IMPROPER name. I am for "Projection Room" because it is the right and logical term to use.

Theatre Chairs by American Seating Co. 14 E Jackson Blvd Chicago

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

When the C. O. D. Comes Back

As to Premature Publicity: The East Awakens

RECENTLY we received a communication from a manufacturer of picture theatre equipment, which reveals a rather interesting state of affairs.

His product, which is excellent, is bulky and its cost runs up into real money. He prefers to deal through supply houses and has always met them more than half way in turning over to them orders received direct and in allowing commission wherever a supply dealer had really done any constructive sales work, even though he had not actually nailed the order.

For a long while past he has dealt through a number of reliable supply houses and so far as that portion of his business is concerned, both he and these supply houses are perfectly happy and contented.

C. O. D. Shipments

But, he has discovered that every supply house is not as reliable as those with whom the bulk of his business in the past has been conducted and quite frequently it has been necessary for him to make shipments C. O. D. and, in a number of such cases, the goods have been refused and he has been obliged to take them back, paying transportation both ways.

What bothers the manufacturer is the fact that he feels sure that the concern, to whom he made C. O. D. shipments, did not order his equipment on the bare chance of being able to market it, but somewhere back of the supply house's order was an exhibitor who wanted the equipment and he is wondering just what happened when the local dealer failed to produce it.

He wonders if the exhibitor was told that the manufacturer was away behind on deliveries and advised to accept a substitute, and he wonders what the exhibitor would say if he knew that the delay in receiving the equipment was not due to the manufacturer.

If we were the manufacturer, we would make it a point in our advertising to impress upon prospective customers that, if any delay were experienced in obtaining our products, we would supply them direct.

If we were an exhibitor and wanted any particular bit of equipment that was unduly long in materializing, we would write to the manufacturer direct and give him a chance to square himself.

ONLY one whose desk is at the exhaust end of the publicity chute can appreciate how many record-beating devices are constantly being hatched. It is a poor week that we do not receive a detailed description of something in which the inventor or proprietor feels certain that our readers will be deeply interested.

The inventor or proprietor aforesaid has not yet perfected his plans, arranged his distribution, made his tools, dies or manufacturing contracts, so he is not in a position to do any advertising, as yet.

But, meanwhile, he would greatly appreciate our devoting anywhere from a few inches to a page or so to a detailed description of his device and explain how it will knock cold everything else in the same line.

The Time to Talk

Experience has taught us that when a device that possesses real merit is ready for the market, and not before, is the time to talk about it, and that the owner's confidence in such a device is, to a large extent, to be gauged by his willingness to spend his money on the cost of advertising.

Which is a very different proposition from getting some philanthropic publication to sound, at its own expense, the possible market for the product and to utilize such publicity in floating a company and interesting investors.

It is a safe way for the inventor to play the game, if the publisher will fall for it, because, if the device falls down, or is never marketed, it is the publisher who has lost the confidence of his readers.

And it is not only the publisher who loses out either. It is the legitimate manufacturer of existing devices with which the unmarketed and often the unmanufactured device endeavors to compete who loses orders while prospective trade is waiting for the publicity boosted but unobtainable article to evolve, which, in many cases, it fails to do.

DURING the past week, the Equipment Department has been in receipt of several requests, from export forwarders, for information regarding picture theatre equipment.

The calls from most of these come from the Far East, which would seem to indicate that either Oriental fans are increasing in numbers or that a lot of pre-war equipment, which has been running along on one leg and two crutches for some time past, has finally given up the ghost with an unexpected suddenness, leaving a big void to be filled by American manufacturers.

Advertisers Alert

We want to congratulate the Moving Picture World advertisers on being right on the spot when the demand occurred, because, in every case we slipped the inquirer some current and back issues of the World and told him to take his pick.

IN no other country of the world may be found anything in its line to parallel the laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, illustrated and described on the following pages.

In size, equipment and efficiency, the West Coast laboratory constitutes concrete evidence to the extent to which the achievements of the trades and sciences have been drafted to ensure perfection in the mechanical end of motion picture production.

And, in no country but America could producers find the public support that would justify the outlay which such a plant represents. So, let's be glad that we are Americans and able to enjoy at first hand the films that go from such plants to the screen.

ASSEMBLY ROOMS OF THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY WEST COAST LABORATORY
No, this is not the employees' gathering place, but where Paramount pictures are assembled for distribution all over the world

New Famous Players-Lasky Laboratory Is Efficient, Speedy and Comfortable

HANDLING a million feet of motion picture film a week and said to be the largest and most complete film plant in the world, the new laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the West Coast studio has just been put into operation.

The new plant is the result of years of planning and experimenting by Frank E. Garbutt, who designed, supervised construction and is now in full charge of this model laboratory. Harry N. Ensign, formerly head of the Realart laboratory, is his assistant. The rapid growth of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which now exhibits Paramount pictures in every civilized country, necessitated the construction of the new film plant. To care for increased production in the future, provision has been made for an additional story to the building. Edwin Bergstrom was the architect and Robert E. Millsap was general contractor.

Facilities for Efficiency, Speed and Comfort

Every possible facility has been provided for the speedy and efficient handling of film and the comfort of employes. Air is changed throughout the plant every four minutes by means of a special air conditioning assembly located in the basement of the concrete structure. The system employed is capable of washing one hundred thousand cubic feet of air in filtered water every minute.

Thomas Ingram, the chief engineer in charge, controls the mechanism which supplies the various departments of the laboratory with air of just the required temperature and degree of humidity. This is of vital importance. In the film drying room the air must be maintained at an exact temperature, day and night. It must also remain at the same degree of humidity. In departments where the film is touched by hands the air is kept very dry to prevent moisture from the fingers marking it.

Subdued daylight is utilized wherever the nature of the work being done permits. This is obtained through the medium of pleasantly tinted walls and wired prism glass windows, a combination that adds much to the comfort of the workers. Artificial lighting is provided throughout the building by means of indirect fixtures. In the switchboard which controls the power used in the building the latest type of safety switches are incorporated.

Conservation of Time and Labor

Many steps are saved and the too frequent handling of film eliminated by the installation of an endless conveyor which carries the reels of film through the varying and progressive stages throughout the plant. The film passes through the developing rooms first, then to the washing and drying rooms. In the latter it is wound on huge drums. Eight of these drums are installed in the sample copy room and six in the negative room. They were designed by Frank E. Garbutt and constructed in the studio. They are five feet in diameter and eleven feet long. Each drum holds one thousand feet of film. Mr. Garbutt also designed the cinema polishing machines and inspection projection machines, seven in number. These were built in the studio.

Eastman Waxing Machines

After the negative has been polished it goes to the printing room where space has been provided for ten Bell and Howell printing machines, said to be the largest number to be found in any film laboratory. Bell and Howell also provided the device which measures the film, automatically checking off the number of feet, and the machine which splices the film.

No perforators are used in the laboratory. The waxing machines were made by the Eastman Kodak Company.

Cutting and assembling of the printed film is carried out in large, airy, well-lighted rooms, after which it goes to the shipping department. The greatest care is exercised in the shipping department to see that the film will be well protected on its journey to all parts of the world.

racks and other paraphernalia were designed by Mr. Garbutt.

A Complete Machine Shop

The machine shop is said to be the most complete thing of its kind to be found in any laboratory. All the apparatus is the latest made by the manufacturers. Precision lathes and millers, drill presses, a Precision bench lathe, and a universal grinder are included in the equipment.

Cleanliness is strikingly apparent throughout the plant. In addition to the air washing and filtering operations, which keep the atmosphere pure, a vacuum cleaning system is installed.

There are four projection rooms with a seating capacity of seventy-five persons each. These miniature theatres have artistically decorated walls, folding chairs and a small desk equipped with a ruby shaded lamp and electric signals whereby the speed, focus and framing of the picture can be controlled during technical showings.

Indirect lighting is used for the theatres. The screens used were designed by Mr. Garbutt and were built on the lot. Each measures seven feet eleven inches by ten feet seven inches. Five of the very latest type of Power 6-B projection machines are installed.

Fire prevention has been the keynote of the construction of the new laboratory. No wood has been used in the whole plant. The small rooms built for the cutting and titling of film, fourteen in number, are absolutely fireproof. The old laboratory, which was built in 1915, is being used for storage.

THE FILM VAULTS
It will be noted that the entrance to these vaults, in which thousands of dollars worth of negatives are stored, is from the exterior of the laboratory building

"Not only is the new laboratory complete in every detail," said Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, "but its superior equipment will permit remarkable results in all the various processes of laboratory work."

Woodstock Exhibitor Makes His Own Juice

A new five hundred seat picture theatre has just been opened at Woodstock, N. B., by F. G. Spencer, with E. A. Neill as manager, C. LaFrance as projectionist, Miss M. Blake, pianist, Mrs. William Sullivan in charge of the box office and John Evans and Frank Baker to do the rest of the work.

The house is steam heated and Mr. LaFrance presides over two projection machines. Mr. Spencer's experience with other theatres is responsible for his making an installation of a General Electric generator, driven by a twenty horse power crude oil engine, which provides electricity for the house independent of the public service supply station.

The fact that a five hundred seat theatre can install such a plant to advantage is well worthy of consideration by those of our readers who have shown so much interest of late in this particular type of equipment.

November Albany Incorporations Show Increased Amount of Capitalization

AN increase in the amount of capitalization was revealed in the companies entering the motion picture industry, or some one of its branches, in New York state during the month of December.

A report just issued by the state's corporation bureau shows that the total capitalization of the month's motion picture concerns reached $2,425,000, and that twenty-five charters had been issued to companies entering the business during November.

There is but little change in the number of companies incorporating in the industry from month to month, a comparison with October showing that during that month twenty-nine companies had incorporated but that these represented a total capitalization of only $338,000.

Incorporations of Week Ending December 1

Five companies were chartered by the secretary of state during the week ending December 1 and entered the motion picture business in New York state.

These companies included the following: Park West Theatre Company, capitalized at $15,000, and having as directors F. E. Ritsos, G. J. Chryssikos, Morris Schwamm, New York City; Jerford Amusement Corporation, $10,000, J. J. Hayden, J. A. Carroll, J. C. Spallone, New York City; Collins & Feinberg, $10,000, Johnny Collins, A. I. Feinberg, Julius Kendler, New York City; Kilbourn Corporation, with E. C. Carpenter, Charles E. Clapp, New York; Noel Armstrong, Brooklyn; Martin Johnson African Expedition Corporation, with F. Trubee Davison, A. Perry Osborn, Carl E. Ackley, of New York, the amount of capitalization not being stated in the papers filed by the last two companies.

Max Felder Offers a Pre-Christmas Present

Max Felder, who sells Bio Carbons, says that considerable of the profanity addressed to projectors, screens and film is really due to the failure on the part of the projectionist to follow the advice of the carbon manufacturers in regard to the sizes and types of carbons to be used in his projector lamp.

Max makes the rash offer, to any projectionist who will write to the M. G. Felder Sales Company, 1540 Broadway, New York City, and state whether he is using A. C. or D. C.; also the voltage and amperage at his arc, of a pre-Christmas present in the shape of a sample set of carbons adapted to the conditions stated.

More Light for Less Money With the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector

Pictures equalling the best in the largest theatres can now be obtained in smaller theatres without costly apparatus.

The same steady illumination possible with a direct current arc can now be obtained with the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector on either alternating or direct current at a great saving in first cost and at one-fourth the current consumed by the arc, taking into account all inevitable losses by either method.

Maintenance cost is also low because there is no carbon dust to injure the mechanism of the projection machine; and the cost of lamp renewals does not exceed the cost of arc lamp carbons.

The G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector produces better screen results than any a.c. arc equipment and is the equal of the d.c. arc outfit up to 50 amperes.

The simplicity of the Incandescent Lamp Projector (no adjustments during operation) and its healthfulness (no fumes or dust) recommend it to projectionists everywhere.

Send for literature and price including all necessary fittings for attachment to any American made projection machine.

Jackie Coogan's First for Metro Is a Big Spectacular and Unusually Entertaining Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Jackie Coogan's initial Metro production, "Long Live the King," based on Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel of the same title, is a big spectacular picture extremely rich in pathos and human interest with delightful comedy touches which should pack any theatre, please the grown-ups and prove a delight for the kiddies.

Dealing with the story of a little prince, it has been produced on a lavish scale with big street scenes involving large mobs. There is a magnificent set of the exterior of an enormous castle, and gorgeous interiors befitting the type of story. Both from the standpoint of production and audience appeal it is one of the big pictures of the year.

Mary Roberts Rinehart's story provides an excellent vehicle for little Jackie, as the poor little orphan prince bereft of a mother's love and so surrounded by court formality and precedent that he is deprived of childish joys, the companionship of other children or even a puppy being denied him. He is a pathetic little figure and your heart goes out to him and when he eludes the palace guards and meets a typical American boy you enjoy with him his brief pleasure.

The adventures of the little prince are interesting and the melodramatic intrigue to prevent him from ascending the throne and thus bring about a revolution will hold your attention. This is enhanced by the truly fine acting of little Jackie and an excellent supporting cast. Jackie's handling of the situations, his body movements as well as his facial expression are convincingly natural and register with a bang. As an actor he again proves himself the

From

Exhibitors Trade Review

Romance, breath-taking situations and an amazingly realistic battle between a horde of frenzied natives and a handful of whites on a South Sea island mark "The Man From Brodney's" as a film well calculated to entertain an audience until the last inch of film has passed the shutter.

It will probably do more than that if the reviewer may be taken as a judge of audience response. There isn't a moment of dilly-dallying. Things start with a rush. J. Warren Kerrigan in the role of Hollingsworth Chase, irrepressible adventurer and thrill hunter, takes action by the scruff of the neck and makes it yell "Uncle" before five minutes of footage have passed.

This is where the gentle innocents bend forward in their seats and breathe hard. The fight is replete in realism. It will make the blood of the average audience leap—the senses tingle.

"The Man From Brodney's" is clean, wholesome entertainment. Full of heart interest values and spectacular adventure.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

The Film Daily

Rich in excitement and romance.

Exceptionally strong cast. J. Warren Kerrigan has a fighting time of it in the title role; does some very good work. Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley and Miss Du Pont, a first rate feminine trio, and others include Pat O'Malley, Bertram Grassby, Kathleen Key.

Includes all the situations and elements of appeal that make for a good audience picture. "The Man From Brodney's" should satisfy the box office. Director Smith has supplied the McCutcheon novel with a thoroughly painstaking and exciting picturization. He hasn't been sparing in injecting realism and thrills. The picture offers a genuinely good entertainment.

The climax is thrilling.

Plenty for you to talk about here. Play up the title and the author's name.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Moving Picture World

All of the usual romance and pomp typical of George Barr McCutcheon fiction is found in the Vitagraph picturization of his recent novel, "The Man From Brodney's."

It has color and action without stint in addition to a cast of favorites.

The spectacular angle has been greatly stressed. There are some tremendous scenes showing the storming of a castle, which serve as a big melodramatic climax. Palatial sets and stunningly gowned women have been provided.

Altogether the picture is done in a lavish, ceremonious style.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Harrison's Reports

Like most of George Barr McCutcheon's stories, "The Man From Brodney's" is replete with stirring adventure, fast action and thrills.

The Oriental atmosphere is convincing, and the many scenes showing the uprising of the natives and their storming of the Chateau, in which are housed "whites" whose lives they seek, are exciting.

Warren Kerrigan makes a good hero, and Miss Calhoun a beautiful princess. Wanda Hawley, Miss Du Pont, Pat O'Malley, Charles Wellesley, Henry Barrows, and Bertram Grassby are in the cast. Mr. Grassby is particularly good as the all-powerful native chief.

"The Man From Brodney's" is a good entertainment.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Exhibitors Herald

"The Man From Brodney's," a Vitagraph production directed by David Smith from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is a romantic story, and in sets and costumes is elaborately produced, with J. Warren Kerrigan, Alice Calhoun, Pat O'Malley and Wanda Hawley featured.

McCutcheon's novel ran into many editions. Therefore there is a ready-made public for this romance, its princesses, ladies in waiting, and the pomp and trimmings of castles and folk who inhabit them. There are plots and counter-plots and thrilling adventures in "The Man From Brodney's."

No expense was spared apparently on sets and costumes and the story moves along smoothly and rapidly to a climax where the princess foreswears her principality and marries the stalwart American, after he had called upon the American marines to save them from enraged natives.

Gentlemen:-

"Tiger Rose" is a remarkable achievement.

The camera has found the heart of the Rose.

I was fascinated, spell-bound as the story told itself on the screen.

The little French Canadian girl lived again as in the play, - a character marvelously portrayed by Lenore Ulric. She is an unforgetable figure outlined against the Canadian skies and fire. I carried the memory of her out of the theatre into Broadway, still under the spell of the poetry - the beauty, the simplicity and charm of her performance, - a vivid impersonation.

I congratulate the Warner Brothers. They have created something so unique, so moving, so human that their efforts are sure to be a source of great pleasure to the public.

Miss Ulric has made a girl into a picture; Sidney Franklin has framed it with wonderful skill.

Once more - my congratulations.

"BOY of MINE"

(First National—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ANOTHER of Booth Tarkington's very human boy stories is on view here, and the encomiums offered in favor of "Penrod and Sam" will have to be shared with "Boy of Mine," which incidentally has been adapted and directed by the same parties, with two of the previous company enlisted in the present cast. The author has no rival in the depiction of youth. He understands the youngsters perfectly. He catches accurately and surely the psychology of the childish mind—its whims and caprices, its misunderstandings and conceits. And so he draws another captivating sketch of a real boy, who is understood by his mother, but who is a problem to his father.

And how thoroughly adaptable is Ben Alexander as the youngster! Indeed, he is Penrod again—Penrod to the life. No suggestion of coaching in his work, he portrays the lad with genuine sympathy and feeling. We watch him and extend him pity in his misery because of his father's reproaches. And when he runs away and whistles to keep up his spirits we appreciate that Tarkington has a firm grasp upon his subject. And that Beaudine hasn't forgotten his own youth.

There is plenty of humorous incident to balance the picture, particularly when the children become mischievous in church. Another true touch. Indeed, this story has a full quota of true touches. It extracts sympathy for its figures because it is rich in humanities. The detached kingdom of youth is on display here. And it is worth seeing—make no mistake. Should please everywhere.

THE ETERNAL CITY—First National

THIS is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful pictures ever filmed. It is also one of the most interesting and one that no lover of the best in pictures can afford to miss. It has a charming love story, plenty of melodrama, fine comedy, sets that are exceptional in every way, some of the best acting of the year, and intelligent direction. What more can be asked? Of course, some liberties have been taken with the story. The recent war is brought in—although no war scenes are shown—and the scene of the returning soldiers is among the best in the picture. Director George Fitzmaurice enlisted the aid of Mussolini and hundreds of his black-shirted Fascisti. The scenes in the Colosseum at Rome where these men gather to give battle to the revolutionaries are most thrilling. Mussolini himself appears in several scenes and, to make the cast really all-star, the King of Italy also shows on the screen. Barbara La Marr, as Roma, has the best rôle of her career and does by far her finest acting. She is beautiful, as always, and plays with a skill and spirit that she never before has equalled. Bert Lytell as the hero, and Lionel Barrymore and Montagu Love as the villains are excellent, but the real honors go to Richard Bennett as Bruno, an Italian vagabond. His acting is a delight. He plays with a lightness and sureness of touch that mark him as one of the finest actors of the day.

Scenically, the picture is superb, and the photography is equal to the subjects. The views of Rome, taken from one of the hills; the shots in the Colosseum; the views along the beautiful roads shaded by Lombardy poplars; the exquisite interiors, all aid in making this picture the height of camera artistry. Just one bit of advice. Don't miss it.

A Real Picture

"The Eternal City." The first Fitzmaurice to be produced by Sam Goldwyn. What a box-office! A great love story splendidly told: a splendid cast, and the settings of Italy. With Mussolini, the Premier, appearing in the picture. True, it isn't the wonderful story that Hall Caine wrote—it has been modernized with the Fascisti in it and the world war and other things. But the appeal is still there—the conflict between David and Bonelli for Roma with love triumphant, and some mob effects with the Coliseum of Rome as the setting—magnificient stuff. If you can't do business with this one there's something wrong—with you.

After completing a record week's run at the beautiful EASTMAN THEATRE, Rochester, N. Y., manager William Tait, Jr., wrote the following:

" . . . The picture was well received by our audiences. We played to more than 45,000 people on the week.

"You can certainly feel gratified with your two releases this year. Such pictures are a credit to the industry as a whole."

It's big! It's tremendous! With such a story, such settings, such a director, and such a cast, "THE ETERNAL CITY" was sure to have been a knock-out!

—and it's "Hit" No. 8 of the "BIG 10" "hits." Nothing can stop us!

The Editor's Views

WE are asking the civil authorities and lay population of Los Angeles to be more fair in their attitude towards the motion picture industry. Perhaps there is room for the industry itself to be a mite more restrained in placing the blame for all evils on the studio doorstep.

We had a letter from a film salesman friend of ours the other day. "Just finished a swing through nineteen towns," he writes, "and found my company's product sold solid in fourteen of the towns. Can you figure the amount of traveling expenses, time, and energy tossed to the bow-wows when the manager routed me on a trip like that?"

Some of these days a few of our leading Los Angeles lights will get tired of being blamed for all the excessive spending in this industry and set out on an investigation of distribution efficiency.

Which will be rather hard on our tender feelings back here in New York. The chorus of criticism has been headed West for so long that it is rather fearful to face the prospect of having Wid Gunning, or some other apostle of the creators, turn it back our way.

NOT the least delightful feature of a "Flaming Youth" luncheon given by First National the other day was the spontaneous tribute to Earl Hudson paid by John McCormick and echoed by R. A. Rowland.

There are many reasons for gratification in watching the climb of Earl Hudson—and cherishing the earned praise that is coming to him. Those of us who know the "reg'lar feller" Earl Hudson feel first the personal appreciation of his progress.

But the broader reason is expressed in R. A. Rowland's remarks at the luncheon. "Mr. Hudson was sent to Los Angeles to supervise First National production," he declared, "because he fully met my belief that a trained newspaper man, possessing sound common sense and an innate appreciation of what the public will respond to, is the type of man qualified to build screen entertainment."

That tells a big story. It records concrete action carrying out a new attitude in the selection of those upon whom rests the responsibility for future picture entertainment.

And the results, particularly in the case of Earl Hudson, are justifying the trend.

IN the course of the year we exchange considerable correspondence with exhibitors who are having local troubles over Sunday shows. Often, we find that the exhibitor with the most ticklish Sunday problem gives the least attention to the obvious means of easing it.

Especially is this true in the sort of pictures selected for Sunday programs.

The thought comes to us at this moment because we have just surveyed, through newspaper clippings, some remarkable evidences of the co-operation church and school authorities throughout the country are according the "Chronicles of America" series.

At the risk of donating some valuable space to the purpose of advertising we wish to record our belief here that the theatre manager seeking to enlist the support of the best elements in his community can do no better than consider the possibilities in this Yale University undertaking.

"IS there any good organ that can be purchased by the small exhibitor at a price that will not require mortgaging his house? If so, please let me know the name, as I have never seen one advertised."

E. T. Keyser, who conducts The World's efficient Equipment Department, received that query lately and was forced to answer, "You have nothing on me. Neither have I ever seen a moderate-priced organ advertised."

Which would seem to indicate that the organ manufacturers are inoculated by the common motion picture germ, "milliondollaritis." No organ, judging by the publicity and the advertising, ever cost less than fifty thousand dollars.

While the truth is, we are reliably informed, that there ARE organs which fit the purse of the small town theatre.

Washington Congressman to Campaign Against Music Tax

A DETERMINED fight is to be waged in Congress by Representative Albert C. Johnson, of Washington, at this session against the tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers upon the users of music controlled by them in places of public amusement operated for profit. In discussing the matter with the Washington correspondent of Moving Picture World, Representative Johnson stated that he had received complaints from constituents of his, engaged in the motion picture business, who had been prosecuted for non-payment of the "tax."

"Section one of the Copyright Act," explained Mr. Johnson, "provides for the payment by the manufacturer or publisher to the composer or owner of the copyright of 2 cents on each copy printed or manufactured for use on a mechanical device designed to reproduce copyrighted music. The section then provides 'The payment of the royalty provided for by this section shall free the article or device for which such royalty has been paid from further contribution to the copyright except in cases of public performance for profit.'

"By striking out of this provision the words 'except in case of public performance for profit' the publication or mechanical device will be free from further contribution and can be used by the public generally.

"I have looked into the matter with some care and I have been informed that generally the publishers or manufacturers require authors or copyright owners to assign to them, as one of the considerations for publication or manufacture, all of their rights except the 2 cents royalty. The publishers and manufacturers have secured these assignments and have since organized the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and through this organization have demanded from every user of a copyrighted musical composition in any place of public performance for profit the payment to the society of a tax or license fee.

"The right to impose such a tax or license has been sustained by the courts. My information is that only incidental benefits at best are received by the authors and composers and that the revenues being derived pass into the coffers of the publishers and manufacturers. The copyright law was designed and intended to protect the authors and composers and not to afford a source of profit to publishers and manufacturers.

"The situation as I find it is this: Any person can purchase a musical sheet or a record. If used in other than the home or place where there is no charge for admission they are not subject to any further demand. If, however, the musical sheet or record so purchased and paid for, is used in any place where there is a charge made directly or indirectly for admission, including hotels, the owner of the place must pay this society a tax or license fee or subject himself to prosecution and heavy penalties.

"I understand that this society is now demanding the tax or license fee from every person, company or corporation using copyright music in any kind of a public place for profit, and that they have at least made demands upon the dancing teachers who use a record on a mechanical instrument while giving a dancing lesson.

"The motion picture theatre men contend that the purchase of music sheets conveys or should convey the right to use them in the only manner in which music can be used, namely, by performing it on some instrument or instruments or through vocal efforts. To republish the music and sell it might naturally be considered an infringement, but when the music becomes the property of the person by right of purchase, its use and its right thereto in the proper and logical way follows, or should follow, as a matter of course. If any incidental obligation was in any way associated with the right to perform it, surely as a matter of business policy, the demonstration and advertising value of theatre presentation would more than fully compensate for this, because of the pronounced stimulation afforded the sale of this music through its being rendered popular in the theatre."

Mr. Johnson will push the matter and endeavor to secure early action by the House of Representatives.

Established Offices

Canadian Exhibitors Locate Offices in Montreal

The executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada, which is affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A., have been established on the ninth floor of the Albee Building, 12 Mayor Street, Montreal, Quebec, where the recently appointed secretary, Maurice West, looks after the business of the institution. The appointment of A. D. Denis, a Montreal exhibitor, as Canadian president in succession to G. B. Sparrow of Montreal has been confirmed. A. Sperdakos of Montreal is treasurer.

The Ontario Division of the M. P. T. O. arranged two meetings for Ontario exhibitors for December, the first of which was held as a general meeting on December 11 at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, and the second is a club luncheon in the same hotel on Tuesday, December 18 at 12.30 with J. C. Brady, Ontario president and the Canadian vice-president, in the chair.

The Toronto office of the M. P. T. O. has been opened at 259 Spadina Avenue which is the headquarters of Ray Lewis, secretary of the Ontario Division.

Fox Official in Wreck

John Zanft Sustains Broken Arm and Cuts in Railway Collision

John Zanft, vice president of Fox Film Corporation, general manager of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, was seriously hurt in the rear-end collision of two sections of the Twentieth Century Limited near Forsythe, N. Y. early last Sunday morning. Mr. Zanft is at his home in New York City under the care of a physician and trained nurse.

Mr. Zanft, who was in the rear Pullman, which received the full force of the impact, sustained a broken arm and several ribs and lacerations of the head and back. He was taken to a hospital in Erie, Pa. in a delirious condition. Representatives of the Fox Film Corporation exchanges in Chicago and Buffalo hurried to Erie, as soon as they received word of the accident.

Mr. Zanft was taken to New York Monday afternoon.

Acquires New Theatre

West Coast Corporation Makes San Diego Deal

Immediately following the announcement of their important realty and theatrical deal in Long Beach, Cal., executives of West Coast Theatres, Inc., through their general manager, Harry C. Arthur, Jr., made known closing negotiations with Robert Hicks of San Diego, whereby the most southerly expansion of the large theatre circuit is given a solid foothold with the acquisition of the magnificent new Balboa Theatre in San Diego, ready for opening sometime during January. The Balboa Theatre has a seating capacity in excess of 2,000.

The deal includes the addition of the Cabrillo Theatre in San Diego to the West Coast chain.

Adams Joins F. B. O.

D. C. H. (Cleve) Adams, assistant general sales manager for Universal, has resigned from that position to join the Film Booking Offices in a similar capacity.

Mr. Adams has been with Universal for seven years, starting as a salesman in the Indianapolis exchange. His good sales record soon won for him the position of branch manager. Later he was made district manager and then assistant general sales manager with headquarters at Kansas City.

Associated First National Pictures, Ltd., of London, England, has added Leonard Denham to its sales representatives. Mr. Denham will represent First National in the Yorkshire and surrounding territory, with offices at Leeds. Mr. Denham is a leading English exhibitor.

Texan Exhibitors at Convention Urged to Join M. P. T. O. of A.

THREE matters of outstanding importance developed at the semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas at the Jefferson Hotel in Dallas on December 4 and 5. They are:

Tenfold increase in membership; starting seven months ago from a handful of sixteen members to a membership today of one hundred and sixty.

Laying plans for the raising of a fund of $15,000 with which to open an office in Dallas with a secretary-manager at the head to attend to all problems of the trade.

Repeal of the tax on motion picture admissions was the main theme of the convention.

It developed that ten of the twenty legislators of Texas had been interviewed and all ten were more or less favorable towards either a modification or absolute repeal of the tax on admissions. It also came to light that the Texas exhibitors believed that the progressive Republicans and, to a large extent, the Democrats, were favorable towards the amusement men.

With the raising of $15,000 and the selection of a secretary-manager, the Texas organization will fight for ethical standards in the trade to advance the idealism of the screen and inaugurate a public service department. This department will be dedicated to any form of public service in behalf of national, state or municipal government. It will enter any non-sectarian, non-political movement for the good of the public.

In connection with the tax repeal, the consensus of opinion was that letters to Congressmen and Senators had but little effect, consequently every member of the organization was urged to interview these officials in their respective districts.

Two propositions calling for group insurance at a saving of from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. were referred to the board of directors. The same action was taken with reference to a proposition presented by a New York slide company which offered compensation for the running of slides and short business reels.

A new constitution and by-laws was adopted. This will widen the scope of the organization.

One of the features of the convention was an address by E. W. Collins, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. of A. The latter organization sent Mr. Collins to Dallas to attend the present session and endeavor to induce Texans to throw in their lot with the national organization. Mr. Collins was offered every courtesy and his address on Wednesday evening at the close of the convention brought applause from the delegates. Mr. Collins said in part:

"The M. P. T. O. of A. offers an outlet for the zeal of all state bodies. I am not here to create discord but instead to create respect for the national organization. I have no apologies and no praise for Sydney S. Cohen, but I appeal to you to join this organization because it is the national body, the only national organization that we have.

"At Chicago some time ago we witnessed a replica of the Battle of Waterloo, a political session if ever there was one. Sydney Cohen picked up the remnants of a broken down organization and he built up a splendid foundation. He lost some good states, it is true, but my point is let us maintain the national body and not break it up so that it could never be solidified. I am asking Mr. Cole and the rest of you gentlemen to join this body no matter who is at the head.

"If his friends stay in the organization and his enemies stay out, there will be no chance to defeat Sydney S. Cohen until 1999. Texas is a great big state. Michigan and Minnesota are two great states. The three I have mentioned can continue to function but only as states. Let us not tear down the foundation because the roof leaks; let's repair the leaks. We cannot throw the fear of God into our natural enemies, taxation proponents, et al, if we stay outside of the national organization."

Mr. Collins argued against producers being let into exhibitor organizations. He predicted that in the years to come the M. P. T. O. of A. will be the dominant factor despite any other exhibitor organization. Reverting to the producer he said that they have disrupted exhibitor bodies. This brought prolonged applause.

Responding to the charge that the national association was "not doing anything," he replied that Texas stands charged with the same allegation. But he said that twenty years from now if motion pictures survive various assaults, it will, like Tennyson's Brook, be going "on and on." He pleaded for the support of Texas and Oklahoma. Since he knew the attitude he was up against in Texas, he asked that the Texans at least not go on record against the national association but to give it a chance. "Maybe," he said, although he paid tribute to Mr. Cohen, "we'll get another officer next May who will please all malcontents. At least let us not tear down the fruits of three and a half years of hard labor." Mr. Collins said 90 per cent. of the theatres in the country staggering under the burden of taxation were neighborhood houses, small exhibitors. For that reason he did not agree with the action selecting Will Hays as the outstanding figure in the taxation fight for the reason that Mr. Hays might run a chance of offending the Democrats due to his political alignment. Further, because the impression exists that Mr. Hays represents the big fellow in this game.

Mr. Collins then closed with a ringing appeal for the Texans not to condemn the M. P. T. O. of A.

At the conclusion of Mr. Collins' address a motion was made to neither approve nor disapprove the national body. After much discussion it was agreed to withdraw this motion insofar as a move suggesting inaction was entirely unnecessary.

The exhibitors gave Mr. Collins a rising vote of thanks and Homer Mulkey, of Clarendon, Texas, shouted out, "If they elect you, Mr. Collins, to head the M. P. T. O. of A. we'll all fight to get in."

Commenting on Mr. Collins' remarks, Mr. Cole, from the chair, said that Texas and other associations on the outside would continue to observe developments in the national association and predicted that within a few years a national organization satisfactory to all elements would be functioning.

Another prominent speaker at the convention was Judge S. A. Handy, counsel for the Kansas exhibitors. Following Judge Handy's address, an appropriation of $500 to aid motion picture theatremen in Kansas in their fight seeking to invalidate the copyrighted music tax now levied on the theatres was voted by a special committee headed by H. H. Hoke, of Taylor, Texas.

Judge Handy was retained to handle litigation in this connection in Texas.

J. S. Phillips, E. L. Byar and A. W. Lilly were named members of an arbitration board to function in connection with the Dallas film board of trade. In this connection it was noted that at the present convention all old lines were swept aside and the greatest of good feeling existed between the exchange men and exhibitors. Fighting for a common cause in taxation and other pressing problems, the antipathy that existed in months gone by was thrown aside for a newer and better understanding.

The exchange men were hosts to the exhibitors at a luncheon Tuesday and in return the exhibitors responded with a banquet on Wednesday night at the Jefferson Hotel, which was the closing feature of the biggest motion picture theatre gathering ever held in this state. Approximately two hundred persons attended the banquet.

Included in resolutions adopted were the following:

That the Dallas Film Board of Trade, functioning under a plan that is described as being fair to the exhibitors, and three exhibitors were named to serve as exhibitor representatives on the board of arbitration. These are Messrs. Phillips, Byar and Lilly.

Vigorous disapproval of bad prints from the exchanges.

Vigorous opposition of the uniform contract whereby all film buys become pay or play dates, removing opportunity to enjoy flexible booking. Opposition also in this same resolution was expressed towards the system of block selling of an exchange's entire production.

Another resolution urged that inasmuch as the requiring of play dates before contracts are approved prevents the exhibitor from protecting his play time as stated play dates frequently mature before contracts are rejected or confirmed, it was urged upon the exchanges that a clause be inserted to protect the exhibitor in this respect.

Padding of films into so-called super-specials of seven or more reels was condemned.

Another resolution had to do with film contracts and it was urged that the deposit clause be eliminated from the contracts by the film distributors and exhibitors.

Another resolution expressed approval of the new trade relations between the exchange men and the exhibitors.

Schnitzer Goes to Coast

Will Enlarge F. B. O.'s Production Program

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the Film Booking Offices, left last week for the R-C studios in Hollywood on distributing matters.

As soon as Mr. Schnitzer reaches the Coast he will speed up the productions now under way and lay plans to greatly enlarge F. B. O.'s production program for next year.

Mr. Schnitzer will confer with A. A. Schmidt, former general sales manager of Universal, who has recently joined F. B. O. as western division manager on distributing problems.

First National Co-operates in Attack on Admission Tax

THE Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has announced its willingness to co-operate in the plan suggested by William Brandt, of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York City, to assist in the effort to remove the troublesome admission tax from the shoulders of the industry.

E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution of First National, has instructed his sales force to drive home to exhibitors the importance of taking an active part in the fight. The use of salesmen as a propaganda medium to exhibitors was suggested recently by Mr. Brandt and was endorsed by H. M. Richey, special contact man between the Hays organization and the exhibitors of the country on tax matters.

First National is blazing the trail which other distributing organizations are likely to follow for the benefit of the entire industry. Editorial writers of the trade press have long been decrying the lack of interest on the part of exhibitors in general in the admission tax repeal and urging that every exhibitor in the country place himself in touch with his Congressional representative, either by letter or personally, and emphasize the importance of the repeal to the industry. First National salesmen, according to Mr. Eschmann's plan, will re-echo this editorial plea to exhibitors on every possible occasion.

"Inasmuch as salesmen are meeting exhibitors every day," said Mr. Eschmann, "it seems logical that they should supplement the campaign of the trade press to stir each and every theatre owner to action. They are the medium through which such propaganda, emanating from the heart of the industry, may reach the farthermost members.

"First National salesmen are fully acquainted with the importance of the tax repeal question. They understand clearly the odius feature of the 'ten per cent. on every dollar or fraction thereof' which threatens to retard the growth of the motion picture. This knowledge, together with the information as to how the problem may best be solved, when passed along by salesmen in personal contact with exhibitors will assist in crystalizing into action the good intentions of many. And action, immediate and insistent, is necessary for the repeal of the theatre admission tax."

Iowa Theatre Owners Organize at an Enthusiastic Meeting

FORTY theatre owners of Iowa attended the initial organization meeting at Des Moines recently and there organized the Iowa Theatre Owners Association.

Two important committees were appointed, one on legislation to watch the revision of the code at the next session of the Legislature, noting especially closely what revisions are made, if any, in the matter of censorship, and state tax; the other a committee to carry out an active fight for the repeal of the seat, music and admittance tax provisions.

J. C. Collins, of Perry, Ia., was elected president; E. P. Smith, of Chariton, Ia., was made secretary-treasurer, and the following were elected a board of directors: Will Mart, Grinnell; E. Metzgar, Creston; Leo Moore, Centerville; J. Smith, Fort Dodge, and Harry Herstainer, Des Moines.

Besides the forty present, about as many more owners from all parts of the state sent enthusiastic letters and telegrams. A sum of $1,000 was subscribed at the initial meeting to finance the work of organizing the state solidly. A banquet was held in the evening at which 100 were present.

To Head Sales Force

Mullin Accepts Position With Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation

J. M. Mullin, recently arrived from London, where he was the manager of the R. C. Pictures Corporation, has been chosen by Samuel V. Grand, president of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, to head his sales force.

Mr. Mullin has for twenty years been intimately connected with practically every branch of the motion picture industry. Starting twenty years ago with the ownership of a small motion picture theatre, his business increased until he was the owner and operator of thirty houses throughout the states of New York, Pennsylvania, some in Kansas and one in Minneapolis. He finally deserted the exhibiting end of the business to enter distribution, but, at the time, the field was so monopolized that he was forced to leave it. From this, Mr. Mullin associated himself with R. C. Pictures and went to England to manage the London office. And now, at Mr. Grand's often repeated request, Mr. Mullin has been persuaded to join Grand-Asher.

Join Copyright Union

Introduce Bill Providing for Our Entry Into International Body

A bill providing for the entry of the United States into the International Copyright Union has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative Sol Bloom, of New York. In discussing his proposal, Mr. Bloom declared that the United States is the only first class power that does not belong to the union, although for years prominent motion picture producers and authors have been working for its passage.

"It is of utmost importance to the manufacturers of copyright material that the United States become members of the Berne Copyright Convention," he said.

"Millions of dollars are lost annually by the pirating of plays, books, motion pictures and popular American songs because we are not members of this union. Not only can we benefit by this protection but we will also get an opportunity of negotiating for the purchase of material in foreign lands to be used as plays and motion picture scenarios in this country."

A similar bill has also been presented to the Senate by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

An Important Message To Theatre Owners

Many of you have heard the expression "Lens Chart." But how many of you really know just what it means and just what its importance is to you?

Briefly, the new Lens Chart is a chart which will enable your projectionist to give you the very best screen result possible with the lens and carbon arc equipment you are using.

You know, it isn't always the equipment that's the fault. Very often it's just improper adjustment of the lens, carbon crater, working distance and other important factors involved.

This new Lens Chart is the product of John Griffiths, projection optical expert. In it he has concentrated the results of years of experiment, the "know how" which is so important—yet which so few men can supply.

If you are using carbon arc equipment, by all means spend one dollar and get this invaluable chart. For with it YOU CAN CHECK UP AND SATISFY YOURSELF THAT YOU ARE GETTING MAXIMUM SCREEN RESULTS WITH THE EQUIPMENT YOU ARE USING.

ISN'T THAT WORTH A DOLLAR?

J. D. Williams Says Whole World Wants Only Better Class Films

RETURNING from Europe after a seven weeks' stay, J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Pictures, issued the following statement:

"Motion pictures and the business of motion pictures are in the process of evolution in Europe in much the same way that they are in the United States.

"The European public is just as tired of inferior or even ordinary pictures as is the American public. The demand as demonstrated in the cinema theatres is for really worth while entertainment, big theme plays, diverting and well acted subjects so that the public really gets something when it goes to motion pictures.

"These conditions convince me more and more that the pictures of the immediate future must be created by our greater artists and that inspiration must precede the production. The trouble has been that we have had too much perspiration and not enough inspiration. I should call Mr. Griffith's 'Birth of a Nation,' Mr. Chaplin's 'The Kid,' Miss Pickford's 'Daddy-Long-Legs' and Mr. Lubitsch's 'DuBarry,' presented here under the title 'Passion,' examples of what I conceive to be pictures of inspiration. In each instance there was care, thought and competent effort in preparation and in production.

"The recent weeks in Europe have convinced me that we must and will internationalize the motion picture. We will actually draw on all the world for our backgrounds, we will do away entirely with the great costs of the elaborate outdoor sets.

"Instead of building a Vatican or a Buckingham Palace or a Niagara Falls set at enormous waste in the back lots of Hollywood, we will use the actual thing, greatly to the advantage of the picture and the pocketbook.

"Regarding the high costs of which so much is being said, I am satisfied that internationalizing picture production will cut costs to a normal point. The old law of supply and demand has everything to do with this question. In production, if all of it is done in one place with a limited supply of artists and artisans to draw from, the costs naturally rise. This is so in any line of work. We propose to save money where money should be saved and spend it where it should be spent to insure our best possible approach to perfection.

"Rudolph Valentino joined me in London the day after my arrival and we spent a week together before his departure for the United States, during which time I succeeded in signing him up for five pictures instead of the two originally contracted for. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that Valentino is as popular in England as in America. I was besieged by Continental film buyers all anxious to assure themselves of obtaining Valentino pictures for their respective countries.

"It is my opinion that the star is a worth while addition to any picture, no matter how good the picture may be without him, and that the expense of his salary is negligible to what he draws extra at the box office.

"I found exhibiting conditions very similar in England to those in America. Exhibitors are not breaking even on ordinary pictures, but when they have a big picture they do capacity business. I think the public are bargain hunting for pictures nowadays. They are spending it to see fewer and better pictures. It is going to be a difficult problem for the exhibitor to get enough of the big worth while pictures in future and I think it is necessary to create big, independent stars, directors and producers who can deliver the goods, otherwise our business will suffer.

"There are many excellent opportunities in Europe for producing big pictures with the proper atmosphere, and it is my opinion that the American public would rather see pictures produced in the right settings, provided the leading people are well known to them, and the pictures produced by American organizations who know the taste of the American public.

"Regarding the status of Mr. Valentino's contract and Famous Players, I can say positively that absolutely nothing in the way of an agreement has been signed. If such an agreement is reached it will be announced doubtless by Famous Players and Ritz Pictures. I shall have more to say on this subject at an early date."

Post-Office "Don'ts" for Exhibitors

AS a result of agitation by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade for more efficient handling of film shipments, Peter F. Piasecki, Milwaukee postmaster, has promised to do his utmost to eliminate existing evils and at the same time has appealed to exhibitors and exchange men to aid him by observing certain rules. These rules he has listed in a series of "don'ts," one set being for exhibitors and the other for exchange men. They follow:

FOR EXHIBITORS

Don't hold your film any longer than necessary. Mail as soon as your post-office is open in the morning after your show, so as to catch the first possible train.

Don't forget to insure the parcel and see to it that your postmaster affixes a clear and dated postmark. This will absolve you from any suspicion or blame in case the film is delayed on the return trip.

Don't mail films until all old address labels have been removed from the can. Often films are delayed for days by seesawing back and forth due to two or more labels on the can. Usually such a delay means a dark house for the next exhibitor.

Don't use the old label under which the exchange mailed the film to you and merely add the words "to" and "from." Remove all old labels and paste on the new label which the exchange enclosed for the return of the shipment.

Don't forget to place a card with the proper address inside of the can, so that the parcel may be identified in case the outside label drops off.

Don't neglect to accept C. O. D. parcels when offered to you for delivery. Inform your box office clerk or cashier of any expected C. O. D.'s so that parcels will not be taken back to the post-office probably without your knowledge.

Don't forget to ascertain on what train (date and number) delayed parcels of film or posters actually arrive. Then notify the exchange at once, giving full details, so an investigation may be made while the facts are still fresh.

Don't forget to boost early Christmas mailing. Congestion in the mails during the holiday rush means delayed films to exhibitors.

FOR THE FILM EXCHANGES

Don't forget that parcel post shipments travel without waybills and that a clear, prominent and correct address is therefore necessary. Never use labels in which the name of the sender is more prominent than the name of the addressee, or occupies the position of the space usually accorded the addressee. Postal employes are accustomed to looking for a certain thing in a certain place and any deviation from this means risking delay.

Don't write the address so that it is hard to read. Print names, if possible.

Don't use the term "Advertising Matter" on poster packages. Use, instead, "Motion Picture Film Display," or words of a similar character. Advertising matter to a postal employe means circular matter, something in no particular hurry.

Don't forget to enclose a properly addressed—printed if possible—return label with your can, so the exhibitor has no excuse for not addressing the return shipment correctly.

Don't forget to provide proper credentials for messengers calling at the post-office for film.

Don't forget to boost early Christmas mailing.

Don't forget that you are welcome to bring your troubles to the post-office.

Exhibitors and exchange men are being urged by their respective organizations to observe these rules in order to expedite handling of their mail and also to curb bicycling of film.

Elaborate Ball Plans

Veterans' Benefit to Be Among Big Screen Events

What is expected to be one of the biggest theatrical and motion picture events of the year is the Cosmopolitan Ball and "Midnight Frolic" that will be held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Plaza Friday evening, December 14. The affair, which is for the benefit of the Marion Davies Christmas Fund for disabled veterans of the World War, is being planned on a lavish and extensive scale and has attracted the attention of those outside the motion picture and theatrical worlds.

Foremost figures in production activities on Broadway, as well as all leading players, are behind the affair and giving it their whole-hearted support.

In addition to Miss Davies, star of "Little Old New York" and numerous other Cosmopolitan features, scores of other stars will attend. An elaborate entertainment has been arranged, called the "Midnight Frolic."

"Flaming Youth" Luncheon

Tendered to Colleen Moore, Star of "Flaming Youth," at the Ritz

Seventy-five representatives of the press and members of the industry gathered around a festive luncheon board at the Ritz Carlton on Tuesday, December 11, to meet and do honor to Colleen Moore, the star of "Flaming Youth." It was a "Flaming Youth Luncheon" from the start, when two bobbed-haired beauties, pajama clad a la Pat Fentriss in the picture, served monogramed cigarettes, to the end of Miss Moore's little speech to the gathering.

Harry Reichenbach acted as toastmaster and Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National toasted the toastmaster. H. O. Schwalbe gave the theatre men's opinion of Colleen Moore and stated that the screen would always be waiting for such pictures as "Flaming Youth."

John McCormick, the husband of the star, and Western Representative of First National, told how, as a publicity man, he was told to deliver the goods and he delivered—Miss Moore, Reichenbach then called upon a dozen guests to read their favorite line from the book—autographed copies of "Flaming Youth" were placed at each plate—and it was discovered that the novel had many exceedingly interesting passages.

When Warner Fabian, the mysterious anonymous author was called upon, there was a thrill of expectancy. But Mr. (or Mrs.) disappointed the gathering without as much as sending regrets. Joseph Dannenberg told how "Flaming Youth" was far beyond many more expensive pictures in box office values, and Miss Moore ended the luncheon by a short speech and a Merry Christmas.

Mr. and Mrs. McCormick left New York later in the week and will arrive in their new home in California in time for Christmas. Later Miss Moore will star in a new picture. She has already completed one since "Flaming Youth"—"Painted People," from the story "The Swamp Angel" by Richard Connell. Clarence Badger directed.

Declines Nomination

Ralph J. Pugh, Associated First National's general manager in the United Kingdom, recently rejected a nomination by the Lloyd George wing of the Liberal Party to stand for election to Parliament as a representative of one of the Home Counties, at the present election.

Mr. Pugh is a prominent figure in British social circles and has spent much of his time working in the interest of English charitable institutions. At the close of the world war Mr. Pugh entered into the film industry as manager of the David P. Howells exchange in London, which position he left to accept the general management of the First National main office in the English capital.

Repeal Tax Measure

A number of bills of importance to the exhibitors and film producers of the country have been introduced in Congress during the past few days. Another measure to repeal the admission tax has been introduced by Representative Dallinger, of Massachusetts, whose bill also provides for the repeal of the tax on telegraph and long distance telephone messages.

Dividend Declared

At a recent meeting the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the preferred stock, payable February 1, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business on January 15, 1924. The books will not close.

Wants Censors Out

Governor Smith to Urge Freedom for Movies

An effort will be made in the coming session of the New York Legislature to free that state from the present shackles of motion picture censorship. On January 1 Governor Alfred E. Smith, in his annual message, will again come out in a strong statement opposing censorship on the grounds that it is un-American. James J. Walker, of New York City, majority leader of the Senate, will again carry the fight against censorship in the upper house. In case the campaign cannot be carried along nonpartisan lines in the Assembly, Maurice Bloch of New York, probable minority leader, will introduce a bill for the repeal of the law.

Big Stock Issue

New Block to Pay Original Franchise Holders on Exchange Investments

Acting upon a course adopted at a meeting held recently in Atlantic City, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has amended its original certificate of incorporation, on file in Dover, Del. This amendment provides for the issuance of additional stock. A statement just released by the company is explanatory, and reads:

"The amendment to the certificate of incorporation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was made so that it might be possible to issue Second Preferred Stock to our Original Franchise Holders in order to fund their advances to First National into a stock account. Sixteen thousand shares of Second Preferred (par value $100) Class A Stock and ten thousand shares Second Preferred (par value $100) Class B Stock have been authorized. A total issue of about two million five hundred thousand dollars of Second Preferred A and Second Preferred B Stock will be issued at an early date direct to our Original Franchise Holders.

"This Second Preferred Stock is being issued for the purpose of funding the advances made by the Original Franchise Holders through the exchange corporations to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which advances have been, up to date, carried on our books in the form of a current liability owed by this company to its exchange corporations and Original Franchise Holders. Thus this two million five hundred thousand dollars will be transferred from a quick liability into a Second Preferred Stock account.

"The willingness of our Original Franchise Holders so to fund in the form of Second Preferred Stock the advances they made to First National, is an indication of their confidence in the future of First National and places this company in a still sounder financial position.

"This matter was decided upon by the Directors of First National some months ago but the legal details involved have just been completed. The stock was divided into Second Preferred A and Second Preferred B Stock merely to take care of certain inequalities in the amount of the assessments paid to First National by our various franchise holders.

"An issue of three million dollars of First National Stock has been authorized at this time because in view of the issuance of the Second Preferred Stock to fund the advances made by the Original Franchise Holders, provision legally had to be made at the same time for the authorization of a prior First Preferred Stock. In other words, the arrangement for this issuance of First Preferred Stock has been made because of the willingness of the Original Franchise Holders to take second Preferred Stock, thereby strengthening the financial structure of this company by having available three million dollars of First Preferred Stock ready to be issued in the future if the expansion of the company should create a need for additional capital. However, there is no intention whatsoever of issuing such First Preferred Stock for the present or for the immediate future; and this authorization has been made solely with the desire to use full financial caution in setting up the new financial structure of the company."

To Hold Meeting

Various Film Boards of Trade to Be Represented

The Indianapolis Film Board of Trade has arranged for a get-together meeting and banquet to be held at the Severin Hotel, Indianapolis, Friday evening, December 14. C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Film Board of Trade, will be speaker of the evening. Among the guests will be L. Ert Slack and George Rinier, attorneys for the local board.

Delegations from the various Film Boards of Trade, headed by W. A. Kaiser, president of the Cincinnati Film Board of Trade; E. Silverman, president of the Chicago Film Board of Trade; Frank Harris, president of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, and Lee Goldberg of Louisville, Ky., will attend the meeting. The entire sales staff, assistant managers, and bookers of the local exchanges will also attend.

Adds to Sales Force

Al Lichtman, newly appointed general manager of sales for the Universal Pictures Corporation, and supervisor of the distribution and presentation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has announced a number of additions to his staff.

Ned Marin, formerly sales manager of Distinctive Pictures, has been engaged as assistant to the Universal sales head. The following have been appointed special representatives for "The Hunchback"; William L. Sherry, formerly with Distinctive Pictures and before that manager of the first Famous Players Exchange in New York City; Charles U. Martin, formerly manager of the United Artists exchange in Philadelphia; Gerald Acres, formerly district representative for Famous Players; William J. Drummond, formerly district manager for Selznick; Charles Schwerin, formerly of Associated Producers and First National in Pittsburgh and Richard C. Fox, formerly manager of Famous Players Lasky exchange in Buffalo.

It also is announced by Universal that Cleve Adams, assistant general sales manager, stationed in Indianapolis, has resigned. Joe Friedman, now in the New York office, has gone to Indianapolis to assume charge temporarily.

To Take Up New Work

S. Barret McCormick, who was sent to Boston by H. B. Franklin to open the Fenway Theatre with a policy of playing the better grade of pictures for an indefinite period, has accomplished his work and will leave the Boston theatre to undertake new work for the theatre department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Charles Raymond, formerly connected with McVickers Theatre, Chicago, has been assigned as permanent manager.

Booming T. O. C. C. Ball

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Greater New York will give its annual dinner-dance at the Hotel Astor on January 24th, as it was impossible to procure the big ballroom of the White Way hostelry for a satisfactory date in December.

Sam Moross, chamber secretary, and his able assistant, Miss I. Marshon, are hard at work, even at this early time, perfecting plans for the event, which they promise will exceed in brilliance and entertainment any ever given in the history of the organization.

Cotton Made Manager

Robert Cotton has been appointed manager of the Educational Film Exchange of Texas, the Dallas office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., succeeding Mr. A. H. Tomes, resigned.

WHILE it may be too late for you to use this year, here is an idea worth pasting in your hat. The ad. reproduced, which was sent us by Manager Langdon W. Kumler, of the Pantheon, Cleveland, is self-explanatory. We might mention that this idea has been advocated for some years by our own Epes Winthrop Sargent. Its efficiency is attested to strongly by Manager Kumler's success. File this page where you can find it—it's great stuff for the gift-giving season.

BELOW on the right is reproduced the back of the Christmas gift ticket. Let us hope that by next year the necessity for even mentioning admission taxes will have ceased.

Below to the left is a cut showing the inside of Manager Kumler's gift ticket. The under portion of the illustration in the newspaper ad. gives an idea of what the outside of the card looks like. Captioned with an appropriate Christmas message and design, it has room for the names of the donor and recipient.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

San Francisco on Qui Vive for New Year's Movie Ball

The annual Movies' Ball, given by the Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco, will be held this year on New Year's eve at the Exposition Auditorium. A feature of the event will be the crowning of a queen and employes of local theatres have entered the contest for the honor of ruling the ball. The committee having arrangements for the ball in charge includes Anthony L. Noriega, of the Golden Gate Theatre, general chairman; James M. Triplett, of the Royal Theatre; J. A. Bainbridge, Capitol Theatre; G. W. Ullrich, Pantages Theatre; J. M. Barnett and H. F. Ericsson. Proceeds of the affair go to the sick and death fund of the organization.

Charles M. Pincus, manager of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, has been kept busy since assuming charge of this house in arranging world premieres. Four were held recently on successive weeks, which is believed to have established a record, and others are being arranged. Much interest is being shown in the forthcoming presentation of "Black Oxen." It will follow "Flaming Youth" at the Warfield, a production that has hung up new attendance records for the house.

The sight of a blind man being led into one of San Francisco's leading downtown picture theatres recently led to an investigation which developed the fact the blind are frequent patrons of theatres. They are usually accompanied by some one who explains the picture to them, and they take great enjoyment in following the plot. They appreciate the musical features more fully than most people in possession of their sight and frequently compliment the management on the offerings of this kind.

Adam C. Baker, owner of the Gaiety Theatre, Hillo, T. H., who has been in California for six months, accompanied by Mrs. Baker and their son Kamakele, has arranged to sail for the Islands in time to be home for the Christmas holidays.

R. B. Boomer, formerly in charge of the Spokane, Wash., office of the Universal Exchange, has been made manager of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, succeeding Jack Howard, who has resigned. The Cameo is steadily gaining in popularity, with its singing orchestra a feature that finds special favor.

Ed Baron, who recently joined the executive staff of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, San Francisco, has returned from a business trip to New York.

The deal for the purchase of the theatre of Mrs. F. E. Smith at Marysville, Cal., has lapsed, owing to the death of Thomas O'Day, but it is anticipated that another buyer will be found shortly.

Frank Parker, who recently disposed of the Lyric Theatre at Stockton, Cal., plans the erection of a 2,000-seat house in that city.

Frank Atkins, of Marysville, Cal., has been investigating the proposition of erecting a picture house at Berkeley, Cal., for some time and this step has practically been decided upon.

Rube Goldwater of Stockton, Cal., has arranged to remodel the Lyric Theatre at Sacramento at an estimated cost of $30,000.

George Mann, who conducts theatres at Ureka and Ukiah, Cal., recently had a narrow escape from death when the automobile in which he was riding went off the grade near Requa and turned over three times before it came to a stop. While he sustained painful injuries he escaped broken bones.

The G. & S. Theatre at Santa Rosa, Cal., a beautiful new house seating 2,400, was formally opened on December 3. This theatre will be managed by the King-Reavis Amusement Co., which has operated the Cline Theatre for the past seven years. High-class pictures, with occasional stage attractions, will be featured.

St. Louis

The Amuse Theatre, Neelyville, Mo., owned by Alex Eastwood, was destroyed by fire on December 6. The fire resulted from an explosion of gasoline in the rear of a store conducted by Eastwood. The loss is $16,000.

The Grand Theatre, Keokuk, Ia., was destroyed by fire on the night of December 6. The Grand, the oldest movie house in Keokuk, was owned by the Baker-Dodge organization.

Don Davis, local manager for Associated Exhibitors, has closed a contract with the Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill., whereby that house will play "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for one week, to be followed by another week's run on "The Extra Girl." "Going Up" is the current attraction, while Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry" was on the Belasco's screen all of last week.

Business in Louisiana, Mo., is improving but as yet the town and its amusement palaces have not been placed on the regular calling list of the "red hots" who specialize in carrying off fat bankrolls and movie receipts. A few nights ago a St. Louis movie salesman dropped around to W. A. Boyd's movie palace in Louisiana and found the proprietor out in front looking up and down the street. The clock read 8:15 p. m. "What's wrong, Boyd?" the salesman asked. "Oh, I am just looking for another quarter for my film rental," he answered. A few minutes later the quarter came.

The King Bee, 1710 North Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, owned by Mike Nash, is undergoing extensive improvement. The plans include a one-story concrete addition 18 by 52. Harry W. Wagner is the contractor doing the work.

Robbers held up Fred Hatfield, messenger for the Majestic Theatre, Peoria, Ill., almost in front of the Peoria Police Headquarters on Thanksgiving Night and took the day's receipts from him, totaling about $3,000.

Five hundred patients of the St. Louis Sanitorium's occupational therapy department were guests of J. B. Lueken, owner-manager of the Macklind Theatre, 5413 Arsenal street, St. Louis, at a movie party the afternoon of December 5.

Associated Exhibitors has closed a fat contract with the Reed, Yenn & Hayes Circuit whereby they take all the Lloyd features, "Counterfeit Love," "Tea With a Kick," "Going Up," "Call of the Wild," etc. The deal is said to have involved $6,000.

Seattle

The long continued labor difficulties of John Danz, exhibitor, and the union musicians and operators is like a serial or "chapter play." The latest chapter occurred during the past week, in police court, when a charge of disorderly conduct against George Dillman, manager of the Colonial Theatre, owned by Danz, was continued until December 20. A request from the chief of police that the case be dismissed was protested by the attorney for the unions, and the date set for trial. When the unions' attorney went into Chief Severyn's office to protest against the chief's action in requesting dismissal, he insinuated that the chief was not doing his duty and was "being influenced." Chief Severyns responded by giving his visitor a wholesome and thorough shaking. The chief's requested dismissal of the case against Dillman, charged with having torn an "unfair banner" off a union picket in front of the Class A Theatre, was based on the grounds that a warrant should have issued, charging disorderly conduct, and also because he did not desire patrolmen to constitute themselves as special guards for the theatres. Dillman was released after his arrest in $20 bail.

"Little Old New York," now in its second week at Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, broke every standing record of the house during its first week's run. The presentation given the picture was extremely attractive and atmospheric. Charming living miniatures, lighted by soft lights, formed a setting for the prologue solo. Ushers were costumed in period gowns, so attractive as to warrant a press notice.

F. E. Wesp, formerly with the Seattle Blue Mouse, is now assistant to Dr. Howard S. Clemmer at the Spokane Clemmer Theatre.

Mrs. J. J. Parker, wife of the manager of Portland's Majestic Theatre, died last Monday. Interment was in San Francisco.

Manager Robert W. Bender of the Columbia treated his patrons to some fast work when he tacked out a sign three hours after the Saturday football game that pictures of the game were about to be shown inside. Many appreciative comments were overheard.

Manager Charles McKee of the Heilig Theatre "spotted" Irene Castle and her new husband as the couple entered the lobby to attend the evening performance of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" while in Seattle. The famous dancer admitted that Mr. McKee was correct when he recognized her. The picture is doing big business in its second week.

E. K. Taylor of the Spokane Hippodrome puts out a nifty little four-page house organ called the Hippodrome Evening Post, in facsimile of the famous Saturday Evening Post, containing chatty bits of gossip and news under lettered paragraphs similar to Orpheum vaudeville announcement headlines. The comparisons are not intended to show that Mr. Taylor gets results through imitation, but merely to illustrate the makeup of the sheet. The captions are eye-catchers for the paragraphs that follow. Mr. Taylor announces the installation of a big "thousand throated" pipe organ as his latest achievement for the pleasure and comfort of patrons.

The "Four Horsemen of Virginia" created a lot of attention in Seattle for the Strand's presentation of "The Virginian," which did excellent business

"Sabbath Blues" No Longer the Rage in Frankfort, Ind.

The "Sabbath Blues" are now a thing of the past in Frankfort, Ind. While they were in force, Mayor Keene motored to Kokomo and took in every "movie" that was in operation. The opponents of the Sunday shows soon found out what had happened and told the mayor what they thought about it. The merchants and the theatre men, realizing the opportunity, opened up for business as usual on the following Sunday and were pinched. John Miller, garage man, was chosen to be tried, the decision to govern the fate of the others.

After listening to the evidence, a jury of three women and nine men voted him innocent of the crime of selling gasoline on Sunday, whereupon the prosecuting attorney announced that the rest of the cases would be dismissed. So ended the "Sabbath Blues" in Frankfort.

Contracts for the erection of a new $500,000 theatre building at Elkhart will be awarded sometime this month and construction work will start not later than April 1. Harry Lerner, formerly of South Bend, is at the head of the project. Mr. Lerner is the present lessee and manager of the Bucklen Theatre in Elkhart. The new theatre will be devoted to pictures and stage productions.

Capacity crowds attended the second anniversary celebration of the Liberty Theatre at Peru on November 29. In addition to a special twenty-piece orchestra and several acts of vaudeville, "Little Old New York" was shown. Earl Loomis is manager.

William Heasman, formerly proprietor of the Arc Theatre at Crawfordsville, is now operating a theatre in Danville, Ill. Heasman recently sold the Arc to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jackson, of Crawfordsville.

Fred E. LeComte, manager of the Liberty at Terre Haute, had as his guests last Friday night the members of the Wiley and Garfield high school football teams.

Petitions asking the repeal of a city ordinance prohibiting the operation of picture theatres on Sunday are in circulation at Auburn and are expected to be presented to the city council at its next regular meeting.

The Cadick Theatre structure at Evansville has been sold for $175,000 and will be used as the site for a new $650,000 Medical Arts building. Work was started on the Cadick about three years ago but was not completed because the company was unable to sell sufficient stock to finance the building.

Ernistino Foley, concert pianist, is the new pianist at the Strand Theatre in Frankfort, it was announced this week by Sam Carlton, manager.

Gustav G. Schmidt, owner of the Crystal Theatre in Indianapolis, is being considered by Mayor Shank for appointment as a member of the city planning commission.

To Try Out Reserved Seats at Philadelphia Film House

The Stanley Company of America is trying out a policy of reserved seats at the Aldine Theatre, located in the heart of the socially exclusive residential section. It is one of the most attractive houses in the Stanley Circuit and it will be the first picture theatre in this city ever to be conducted along this plan. Tickets will be sold at 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, including the tax, for matinees, and 75 cents, $1 and $1.65, including tax, for the evening performance. In preparation for this new policy the Aldine is closed for a few days, to be reopened on Christmas Day, in order to make the changes necessary for the new plan. The first attraction under the new plan will be two performances daily of "Scaramouche."

William J. Laportes has acquired an interest in the new Lansdale Theatre of Lansdale, Pa., and will make improvements to the theatre, which in the future will be under the direction of the Main Line Amusement Co., the controlling organization of the Ardmore Theatre of which Mr. Laportes is proprietor. The executive office of the Lansdale Theatre Co. will be removed to the Ardmore Theatre Building at Ardmore, just outside of Philadelphia.

After undergoing extensive alterations and renovations, the Strand Theatre of Gloucester, N. J., has been reopened under the proprietorship of Alex Koleman and with Jack Jaslow as manager. A new screen, projection equipment and seats were added. The music is furnished by a five-piece orchestra. The Strand formerly was conducted as the Academy and as the Broadway, while its owner was L. Pizor. It is the only house in Gloucester not connected with the Stiefel Amusement Co., which controls the Leader, Palace and Apollo.

Change of title has been made in the Morris Theatre at Richmond and Summer streets, under the new ownership of Sam Hyman, who took over the theatre at a purchase price of $75,000. Under Mr. Hyman's management the Morris will be changed back to its original title, the Arcadia, following a building program which will include improvements in the seating, projection room and building.

An adjoining property to the Victoria Theatre at 219 Market street, Harrisburg, Pa., has been acquired by the Wilmer & Vincent circuit, proprietors of the Victoria, at a price estimated to be $40,000. It adjoins also the building at 221 Market street upon which part of the Victoria Theatre is built. It is proposed to enlarge the Victoria at a later date.

The plan of midnight shows has just been put into effect at the Broad Street Theatre for the entertainment of the farmers who carry their produce to market in Harrisburg on Wednesday and Saturday mornings. Manager O. B. Feldser is trying this scheme.

Harmer's Theatre has been leased by George G. Greiner and will be operated as a picture house in New Holland, Pa. The Harmer Theatre is one of the most attractive theatres in the Lancaster Valley and will be conducted by Mr. Greiner, a former legitimate stage man, who has moved his family from New York to the Pennsylvania town.

Possession of the Fulton Opera House of Lancaster was taken by Ralph W. Koho at a purchase price of $51,000.

Award of a contract for the erection of a hotel and theatre at Tamaqua has been made to the Shamokin Construction and Lumber Co. by the Higgins Amusement Co. of Shamokin and will involve an expenditure of over $500,000.

Renovation and redecoration of the interior of the Victoria Theatre, Tamaqua., Pa., has been completed by the Chamberlain Amusement Co. of Shamokin. The entire interior walls have been decorated, new carpets laid and new curtains hung on the screen stage.

Baltimore

Through a co-operative arrangement between the Baltimore News and the Exhibitor's League of Maryland, 40 picture theatres, all members of the M. P. T. O. A., each get a ten-line ad. daily in that newspaper for which each pays a nominal sum each week. Every few weeks the money paid the News for the ads. is refunded to the League to go into the treasury of the Maryland body. In return, each theatre runs a slide after each performance during each day, telling the public to read their advertisement daily in the News. The committee representing the league includes Frank H. Durkee, president; Frank A. Hornig, Louis Schlichter, Louis Garman, J. Garman, J. Louis Rome and Charles E. Whitehurst.

A picture theatre measuring 30 by 135 feet, to cost $50,000, is planned for construction at Gastonia, N. C., population 12,871, by Simpson and Eskridge. It will be of two stories.

The Dunbar Theatre (colored) 619-23 North Central Avenue, owned by Josiah Siggs, 2040 Druid Hill Avenue, which seats 300, is being enlarged to seat over 700. The improvement will cost $12,000.

To help the sale of red cross seals for use on Christmas packages, Arthur B. Price, manager of the Wizard Theatre, showed a film for several days of the work done for children at the preventorium, Claiborne, Md., with the money that is gained through the sale of the stamps.

Benjamin Cluster, proprietor of the Cluster Theatre, 303 South Broadway, who was recently beaten and robbed at night when he was taking the day's receipts from the box office to his garage with his wife and two daughters, has recovered and is going about his work again. The bandits succeeded in getting $355.45. One man has been arrested and is held under suspicion. Mr. Cluster was cut on the head and after the robbery had to be taken to St. Joseph's hospital and was later taken to his home. He showed remarkable fortitude and was able to go about his work in a few days.

Howard S. Jefferson, manager of the Parkway Theatre, is directing the organ recitals given during this season at the Maryland Casualty Club House by the Maryland Casualty Company.

A cameo version of Gounod's "Faust" was presented at the Century with the regular picture performances by Thomas D. Soriero, general manager. Five singers of the Ritt Opera Company, New York, rendered the five roles, during the week beginning December 10.

Charles Boyer, Hagerstown, Md., has leased the McCrory Stores Corporation Theatre, Winchester, Va. It will probably be reopened to the public during the holidays.

Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh has had no real winter yet. In fact, during the first week of December an excess in normal temperature of 53 degrees was recorded. The weather being mild and reasonably dry, business at the picture theatres has been above average. The two biggest successes of the month so far have been Buster Keaton's "Our Hospitality" and Universal's "The Acquittal." The Keaton comedy at Loew's Aldine and Cameraphone, week of December 3, scored heavily with the S. R. O. audiences, and received much flattering praise from the newspapers. "The Acquittal" is in its third week at the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh, week of December 10, and still going big.

On December 1, A. J. Beuler took over the Keystone Theatre in Turtle Creek, the Littlestone Brothers having purchased his Colonial Theatre in the same town. Tex Arthur, house manager for Mr. Beuler at the Colonial, officiates in a similar capacity now at the Keystone.

Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago, Plans for Summer Showings

Lubliner & Trinz has signed a contract with the Orchestra Association of Chicago, who control the Orchestra Theatre building on Michigan Boulevard, by which the circuit will have the house for pictures during the summer season when the orchestra association is not using the house. The contract is for a period of years and the success of Mrs. Henoch with the long run of Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" shows that a Michigan avenue movie house can be made a success if the right kind of films are shown. Lubliner & Trinz will put on first runs with suitable presentations and plenty of music.

Word was received here a few days ago that the Grand Theatre at Keokuk, Iowa, under the management of Dodge and Baker, was destroyed by fire. The loss will exceed $150,000 and marks the end of one of the oldest theatres in that part of the country. No doubt a fine new structure will be built on the site, as Dodge and Baker have had plans for a new movie house for some time past.

The Roosevelt Amusement Company has been formed with a capital of a half million dollars by P. Podols, C. Sommer and G. Fried, to operate picture theatres, and it is predicted that this will be the operating company of the Roosevelt Theatre, taken over by Balaban and Katz last week.

George Greenough, owner of the Grand Theatre at Sterling, Ill., plans a new picture theatre to seat about 1,000 and cost $200,000. A site has been selected and the work will start at an early date.

Bob Cluster, well known exhibitor of Johnson City, Ill., will add the Washington Theatre of Belleville, Ill., to his chain of houses. R. E. Gump is expected to continue as manager.

"Why Worry," with Harold Lloyd, opened at the Roosevelt Theatre for an extended run, succeeding "Little Old New York."

George Dorman has sold his interest in the Colonial Theatre at LaSalle, Ill., to J. W. Gress and E. E. Bronneman.

Sullivan and Gray, owners of the Rex Theatre at Pittsburg, Ill., have closed their house temporarily because of the shutting down of the coal mines in that vicinity and will open the Roland Theatre at Marion, Ill.

Milward Adams, formerly manager of the Auditorium Theatre here, who died recently, left an estate of $100,000, one-third of which was willed to charities in this city.

John C. Sturzel, Arthur P. Feigen and George B. Frelison have organized the Washington Amusement Company with a capital of $1,000,000 to operate theatres. The offices are at 10 North Clark Street.

Harry Spanuth, owner of the Peerless Theatre at 3955 Grand Boulevard, has added the Rosewood Theatre to his circuit.

More than 160,000 people have seen "Rosita" at the New Orpheum Theatre during the 200 performances, according to Ralph Kettering of Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

Powell, Gerard and Company here are selling $250,000 worth of bonds secured by a mortgage on the new Washington Square Theatre at Quincy, Ill.

Elmer Clayton and James Gillett have leased the Avon Theatre at Avon, Ill.

The Castle Theatre at Rushville was opened recently to capacity business and Manager G. C. Stong says that the house will feature pictures with good musical programs by a competent orchestra. The house is owned by the Castle Theatre Company.

Ted Bryant, well known to Film Row here, has remodeled the Gem Theatre at Oelwein and put in new seats, new stage and other equipment. He spent $8,000 in fixing the house up.

The Movie Theatre at 47th and Calumet Avenue has been sold by Martin Roche to Robert R. Levey for $100,500. Improvements will be made.

Frank Delander of Geneseo, Ill., will build a new movie house for the town. Work will start next month.

J. L. McCurdy, manager of the Randolph Theatre, is also looking after the management of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now running at the Harris Theatre. Dan Roche is handling the publicity of the attraction and business has been good for this super picture.

Howard L. Snyder of Fulton, Ill., manager of the Lincoln Theatre there, plans to build a 1,000-seat theatre there and work will begin at an early date.

H. B. Frank has bought the Liberty Theatre at Atlanta, Ill., from E. L. Bennett.

The Star Theatre at Quincy, Ill., has been fixed up for the winter and Manager Herman Nelson has added an orchestra.

The many friends of Harry Trinz, well known exhibitor, are extending congratulations to him on the marriage of his daughter, Miss Lucy Trinz, to Joseph Roderick, well known film man, formerly with Paramount.

Dave Frisino, chain movie theatre owner of southern Illinois, is planning to build a new movie house at Taylorville, Ill., which is in the heart of the coal fields.

Harold Anderson and Lindsey McPail, formerly with the Roseland State Theatre, are now associated with the Woodlawn Theatre.

The rumor that the new Temple office building and theatre would not be built on Randolph street has been denied and Will Hollander, publicity manager for Balaban and Katz, says that the company will go ahead with its plans.

The Randolph Theatre is to have a new organ soon. During the intermission Manager McCurdy is having a five-piece orchestra provide the patrons with music.

Dekay Vose has sold the Pershing Theatre at London Mills, Ill., to Ellis Jackson, manager of the Cozy Theatre at Bushnell, Ill.

Tongate and Haynes, owners of the Carlisle Theatre at Carlisle, Ill., have opened another movie house at Francisville, Ill., and will book houses from their Carlisle office. They may add other houses to the circuit in the near future.

Omaha Showman Found Shot; Had Brooded Over Troubles

J. W. Monaghan, who lost his job as manager for the Palm Theatre at Omaha when it changed hands recently, was found dead in an automobile north of Omaha early in the morning, with a bullet hole back of his right ear and a revolver clutched in his right hand. His wife said he had been looking for a job and had been worrying over financial difficulties. His friends said he was of such a cheerful and sunny disposition that they could not imagine him worrying. He leaves his wife and three children.

The Victoria Theatre in Omaha has been purchased by Henry Hower.

The new Victor Theatre at Sheffield, Ia., was opened recently.

William Fraser of Mitchell, S. D., has bought some new equipment for the Gale and Metropolitan theatres there.

A new sedan car is being driven by C. E. Byers, who operates the Opera House at Valley, Neb.

J. L. Bonney of Des Moines has again opened the Lincoln Theatre at Des Moines.

The fine new theatre at Red Oak, The Iowan, has just been opened by Calahan & Samuelson.

Cliff Larson of the Lyric Theatre at Creighton, Neb., was in Omaha ordering some films and equipment recently.

C. H. Smith of the Rainbow Theatre at Wilsonville has sold that theatre.

Fred R. Baker of Homer, Neb., who operates the Star there, intends soon to build a fine new theatre to replace the Star.

Blaine Cook has reopened the Rialto Theatre at Beatrice, Neb. The place has been inactive since damaged by fire some weeks ago.

At Auburn, Neb., the Court Square Theatre closed last week.

The Crystal Theatre at Arapahoe, Neb., has been sold to R. A. Kirkman by Mr. De Allmand, former owner.

Among the exhibitors in Omaha the past week were Oscar Peterson, Minden, Neb.; J. Q. Grotenhuis, Cottage Theatre, Orange City, Iowa; H. Simons, Empress, Shenandoah, Iowa; Morris Smith, Hippodrome Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa; Cliff Larson, Lyric Theatre, Creighton, Neb.; C. E. Byers, Opera House, Valley, Neb.; C. W. Shafer, Opera House, Petersburg, Neb.

Canada

Oral Cloakey, peppy manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has been admitted to the active roll of the Rotary Club in the Capital City of Canada and has become an enthusiastic member. He conducted a special morning matinee at the theatre on Saturday, December 15, under the auspices of the Rotary Club, for the children of all orphanages in Ottawa and Hull, Quebec, the house being thrown open to the many inmates.

For some few weeks, Manager Ben Stapleton of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, tried the Saturday opening arrangement, following up the plan which was adopted last summer for the Ottawa Regent, but after a short trial the engagements were once more drawn to open on Mondays. Programs continue to open at the Regent on Saturdays.

But for the substantial brick construction of the building, the Palace Theatre at Cornwall, Ontario, would undoubtedly have been destroyed by fire which swept a business block of the St. Lawrence River town on December 4. The flames came to a dead stop when they reached the side wall of the Palace and the theatre was practically untouched.

Joe Franklin of the Franklin Theatre, Ottawa, conducted a Puzzle and Rhyme Contest for his successful house during the week of December 10 by publishing a jumbled assortment of sections of the art name of the theatre which were to be cut out and pasted together. Prizes of $10, $5, $2 and 22 passes were offered to contestants who pasted the bits together neatly and who also offered a poem or short essay on the theatre.

Local Conditions an Aid to Amsterdam, N. Y., Exhibitors

Although the carpet mills of Amsterdam, N. Y., are running but three days a week, the picture theatres of the city are really being benefited rather than otherwise. This is rather strange for there are about 10,000 men and women employed in the mills. But in Amsterdam, there is a vaudeville house which charges a 60 cent admission. With the mills running on half time, the mill hands are seeking their amusement at the picture theatres, which charge anywhere from 10 cents to 25 cents, figuring that they can secure from three to six times the amusement for their money than if they had attended the vaudeville. Exhibitors from Amsterdam along Albany's Film Row during the past week, especially those who run the 10-cent houses, assert that their business has picked up since the mills partially closed down.

Alec Papayanakos, owner of the American in Canton, was in New York the past week, where he met Mrs. Papayanakos who arrived on the Aquitania from a visit of several months in Greece.

Here's the recipe which Oscar Perrin is following these days in bringing success to the Leland in Albany. Feature, "Where the Pavement Ends," Fox News Reel, Fox Educational Reel, Mermaid Comedy, "This Way Out." Along with this, for 28 cents, goes some excellent organ music. And the best part of it all is that the same good program is followed week in and out, and the house is packed afternoon and night.

Harry Berinstein, manager of the Majestic in Elmira, and George Roberts, of Albany, general manager of the Berinstein circuit, motored to Buffalo last Monday in Mr. Berinstein's car, which later on disappeared after it had been parked in front of the Hotel Statler.

A canvass of the picture theatres in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, reveals that there has been absolutely no let-up in business thus far even though the Christmas holidays are but a few days away. Some of the managers admitted that they were looking for a slump which thus far, however, has failed to show up.

James J. Kelly, associate manager of the State Theatre in Corning, has been named as manager of the Elwood and Sampson theatres in Penn Yan, which are controlled by Associate Theatres, Inc., owners of the State. Mr. Kelly has already assumed his new duties. E. G. Dodds, formerly of Syracuse, will act as local manager for the State Theatre.

The Arlington in Troy, operated by "Cal" Miller, a former booker in the F. B. O. exchange here, has closed but may reopen after the holidays.

Samuel Wood, former owner of the Strand in Amsterdam, has acquired the Strand in Canajoharie and will open the house on Christmas Day.

Bill Smalley, of Coopertown, made one of his periodical visits to Film Row during the past week, and is reported to have done considerable booking. He reported business as excellent in all of his houses.

Things are breaking a bit better these days for George King, of the Rialto in Binghampton, than on Election Day, when Mr. King, running for alderman, went down to defeat.

"Speejacks" has been added to next week's bill at the Leland, in Albany, the picture splitting over two weeks.

If censorship is abolished in New York State, exhibitors and others favoring the repeal of the present measure will find themselves indebted to Fred Elliott, of Albany, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre now under lease. Mr. Elliott is devoting three or four days each week in traveling over this part of the state, calling upon the owners and managers and asking them to come out and strongly oppose censorship, both in slides, by word of mouth, but especially in seeking out their respective assemblymen and lay the foundation of the campaign which will later on be carried into the legislative corridors of the State Capitol. During the past week, Mr. Elliott was in Utica, Amsterdam, Old Forge, Norfolk, Poland and other places in northern New York.

There is nothing like getting one's advertising where it will do the most good. Bill Smalley, of Cooperstown, showed good judgment in placing each week's program of his house in Sidney in the lobby of the hotel there. There is no question but that the advertisement brings anywhere from a dozen to twenty traveling men, stopping over night in Sidney, to Smalley's attractive theatre a few doors down the street.

The way winter is holding off in northern New York means hundreds of dollars to the exhibitors of that section who lose trade when the country roads become more or less impassable. Up to the present time there is no snow to speak of in any of the northern counties. Exhibitors from this section of the state, in town for film, declare that farmers are still flocking to town for the movies each night, and that business is nearly as good now as during the summer months.

Stock will open on Christmas Day at the Avon in Watertown, according to Nathan Robbins, owner of this and other theatres in central and northern New York. Motion pictures will not be shown at the Avon during the indefinite run of the stock company, but the program at the Olympic, also in Watertown, and owned by Mr. Robbins, is to be augmented by the latest pictures in conjunction with vaudeville.

Edward Windbiel, who with Thomas Shelley runs the Orpheum in Amsterdam, was in town booking pictures last Friday.

Buffalo

Nothing doing on midnight movies in Buffalo. The council, on recommendation of the mayor, has amended the ordinances prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures after midnight. The council has also put the ban on immoral and indecent films. A fine of $250 is provided for a violation.

John J. Maxwell, Jr., formerly manager of the Star and Loco theatres, has been appointed assistant general manager of the Border Amusement Company. Mr. Maxwell was formerly assistant manager at the New Olympic before going with Border, who control the Star, Loco, Ellen Terry and Marlowe.

James Kelly, who has been managing the State Theatre in Corning, N. Y., has arrived in Penn Yan to relieve Harry Morse at the Elmwood and Sampson theatres while the latter is enjoying a much needed vacation.

Charlie Bird, who has resigned as general manager of the Fox western studios, has returned to Hornell, where he intends to make his home. Mr. Bird was formerly manager of a Hornell theatre.

R. C. Fox, former manager of the Paramount exchange, is returning to Buffalo to handle "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for Universal. "Dick" has been absent from Buffalo for several years. Harry Scott, feature sales manager for Pathe, was in town last week end. So was Harry Buxbaum, First National district manager.

M. Shea is in Chicago conferring with architects on the mammoth new picture theatre which he will soon build in Buffalo.

Rochester, N. Y.

The week on Rochester screens: Eastman, "Anna Christie." Victoria, "Soft Boiled." Piccadilly, "Little Old New York." Regent, "Our Hospitality." Fay's, "The Empty Cradle."

Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" will be shown in Rochester at the Regent Theatre soon.

Without going into the question of whether or not the Eastman Theatre is properly excluded from taxation, Justice John B. M. Stephens has dismissed the order granted previously on the application of Julius Hoesterey, Jr., for a review of the action of the city assessors in including the property in the list of untaxed holdings.

Enid Knapp Botsford, director of the Eastman Theatre ballet, made her first public Rochester appearance this week in connection with the ballet number, "The Fountain," which was on the program with the presentation of "Anna Christie."

So successful was the first week's showing of "Little Old New York" at the Piccadilly that the Marion Davies production was held over for the second week, something very unusual in this town.

Kansas

A storm of protest has broken over the action of the State Motion Picture Censor Board in authorizing the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Kansas. Governor Davis, when he returns from the trip to Great Bend, where he went to cast his hat into the Presidential ring, will find an assortment of protests that will occupy his attention for several days if he attempts to answer them.

The protests are pouring not only into the Governor's office, but also into the office of the attorney general, Charles B. Griffith. Petitions are coming into Griffith's office begging him to take legal steps to stop the showing of the film.

It is probable Griffith will go to Kansas City, Kas., to urge the censor board to repeal its action in admitting the picture. The supreme court has decided the action of the board was final. Only Governor Davis could stop the picture, and the Governor has said that he saw nothing wrong with it.

A petition of 500 citizens of Salina, business men, city and county officials and school teachers was presented the Governor begging him to stop exhibition of the film. A petition of 103 Fort Scott negroes was sent to Griffith, who transmitted it to Governor Davis. The ministers at Wichita, Fort Scott, Saina and Kansas City, Kas., have filed protests and many personal letters are coming in. Delegations of negroes from Topeka and Coffeyville called on Griffith and protested.

The Beyer Theatre at Excelsior Springs, Mo., was opened last week under the management of H. M. Loop. The theatre is beautifully decorated and the estimated cost is $125,000. The seating capacity is 1,200.

C. R. Acuff & Co. have purchased the Isis Theatre at Bruswich, Mo.

J. D. Wineland, who owns theatres in Picher, Okla., and Webb City, Mo., was a visitor at the Kansas City exchanges recently.

Clarence ("Bones") Smith, an exhibitor of Kansas City, Kas., and secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, is the proud father of a baby girl, who has been named Harriet Ann.

H. L. ("Doc.") Gees, exhibitor of Mulberry, Kas,. was a visitor in Kansas City recently.

Mr. Ware of the Varsity Theatre at Lawrence, Kas., was another visitor last week.

Milwaukee Theatre Company Describes Ambitious Plans

Organization of a company to operate a chain of theatres in and near Milwaukee, with George Fischer of the New Milwaukee Theatre at the helm, has been completed. As its first step in its expansion program, the company has virtually completed a deal whereby it will acquire the Greenfield Theatre, an 800-seat house nearing completion in West Allis, suburb adjoining Milwaukee.

The deal for the Greenfield involves a ten-year lease, according to Mr. Fischer. Just as soon as all the papers are signed, steps will be taken by the new company to contruct at least two more houses on sites already purchased, Mr. Fischer declared. Just where these sites are located, he refused to make known, but asserted other houses would follow those already contemplated.

With the announcement of the formation of the new company, which according to Mr. Fischer consists of business men of the north side, some of whom are behind his New Milwaukee Theatre, it is expected that Mr. Fischer will virtually turn the direct management of the New Milwaukee over to Louis Shimon, his assistant, while he will devote his time to executive duties connected with all the houses. Who will be named to manage the Greenfield he has not revealed.

As a climax to the spirit of harmony which has marked the dealings between exhibitors and exchange men in Milwaukee during the last year, a joint ball is being planned by the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade and the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, according to Ben Koenig, secretary of the exchange outfit. This is intended to replace the annual event held by the exhibitor organization. According to Mr. Koenig, Fred Seegert, president of the exhibitors, has expressed approval of the plan. The ball will be held in the municipal auditorium, it is believed.

At the end of twelve days, "Little Old New York" has shown to approximately 53,000 patrons of Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, a new record for the house, according to Roy C. MacMullen, manager. Not only is that figure a new high mark for the theatre since its opening, but with the exception of one picture it is a record for Milwaukee, Mr. MacMullen claims.

With 53,000 movie fans already accommodated, interest in the film apparently is still at a high pitch and as a result, Mr. MacMullen is laying plans which are expected to result in the picture being kept in Milwaukee for a third week. Ever since it opened, extra shows have been necessary to accommodate the crowds, the house being kept open throughout this period from 9:30 a. m. to midnight.

Using odor bombs as their weapons, enemies of Charles Wasicheck, Milwaukee theatre owner, routed patrons simultaneously at two of his five houses, the New Crystal, downtown theatre, and the Pearl, on the South side, he reported to the police several nights ago. Information Wasicheck gave the authorities leads them to believe that the "bombs" were placed as a result of trouble he has had with the labor unions over his hiring of non-union musicians at the New Crystal almost a year ago. Since then his theatre has constantly been picketed.

Indications are that unusually good business will continue with the Merrill for at least several weeks following the close of "Little Old New York." For the week of Dec. 15, that week so usually dreaded by exhibitors, Mr. MacMullen has hooked up with the Knights of Columbus for the showing of Yale's "Landing of Columbus." Twenty thousand tickets have been turned over to the Knights for sale. The picture is to be shown on a program also featuring "The Drivin' Fool," for which the Merrill has tied up with the safety division of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce in an advertising scheme.

Baby Peggy's "Darling of New York" is to be the Merrill's Christmas picture and "Reno" the New Year attraction.

Girl ushers are going to be taboo at the Wisconsin Theatre, 3,500-seat movie house being erected in the heart of Milwaukee's down town district, according to Eddie J. Weisfeldt who, with the title of manager of production, will be in charge of the theatre for the Saxe Amusement Enterprises. Instead of girls, Mr. Weisfeldt declares he will have a staff of twenty-five boy ushers who will work under an officer and merit system. The head usher will be stationed at the entrance of the inner lobby. Several of the twenty-five assistants will carry the rank of lieutenant and will be in charge of the boys in their section.

Mr. Weisfeldt, as manager of the Strand in Milwaukee, employs girls as ushers, but he declares that he is convinced that boys are more suited to work in a house of such large size as the Wisconsin.

Roy C. MacMullen, manager of Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, observed Thanksgiving day by acting as host at a banquet for his thirty-five employes in the basement of his showhouse.

George W. Dilley who for some time has combined the show business with the newspaper business, has decided to quit the former and as a result Highland, Wis., is without an exhibitor. Dr. Dilley ran his shows at the Municipal building.

According to word from Platteville, Wis., negotiations are under way to convert a portion of the city hall into a picture theatre. The Gem is the only showhouse this city boasts at present.

Frankel to Play Santa Claus to 1,200 Cincinnati Orphans

Through the courtesy of I. Frankel, manager of Gifts Theatre, at least 1,200 children from the various Cincinnati orphanages will have their Christmas made happier by attending a performance at Libson's house during Christmas week. Mrs. Leah Weiss, Cincinnati novelist, whose new book, "Object!" is just off the press, will arrange transportation for the youngsters.

Isaac Libson who controls practically all of the first-run houses here, has volunteered his support to the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York in the campaign which they are waging against the government admission tax.

The Play-Reviewing committee of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Council has publicly endorsed "Anna Christie," "Stephen Steps Out," "The Printer's Devil" and "The Wanters," all of which pictures were shown here recently.

The Grand Theatre, Marion, Ohio, which has been closed for several months while in the hands of a receiver, has been reopened under management of the Marion Photoplay Co. and will continue pictures.

John Murray, prominently known throughout the central west, has disposed of his theatres at Warren, Ohio, and gone south on account of his health. Smith controls two houses in Warren, as well as two in Alliance, Ohio.

Eugene Quigley, manager of the Kearse Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., and formerly in charge of the Capitol, Cincinnati, has gone to Chicago to undergo medical treatment. Quigley has been ill for several weeks, during which time he has twice been a patient in a Charleston hospital, but failed to respond to the treatment.

The Jewel Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, one of the houses in the Jewel Photoplay chain, which has been open only on Saturday and Sunday of each week, has been taken over by Wm. Shoemaker, who will operate the house daily, showing second-run pictures at popular prices.

In order to feel the pulse of the movie-going public, John Schwalm, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, is giving each of his patrons a questionnaire asking them to designate their choice as to pictures, stars, music, etc., and soliciting comments and suggestion on the manner of conducting the house, and improving the service.

Phil Chakers has assumed management of the Grand Theatre at Middletown, Ohio.

If anyone entertains doubt as to fate playing funny pranks, he has but to refer to Gordon Hake, Piqua, Ohio, for verification. Hake has been assistant manager of the Piqua Amusement Co. for five years, and recently accepted the position of manager for the Capitol Theatre, Charleston, W. Va. He was on his way to the depot to take a train for Charleston to assume his new duties a few weeks ago, but when reaching the station was handed a telegram that the theatre had been destroyed by fire. Hake says that's what he calls "rubbing it in."

Henry A. Staab Is Wisconsin's Secretary

HENRY A. STAAB, newspaper publisher and a member of the Milwaukee Motion Picture Commission, the censoring organization of the city, has been named executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin. He will take office January 1, according to Fred Seegert, president of the exhibitor unit, who announced the appointment. Mr. Staab succeeds Walter F. Baumann, who resigned several months ago after holding the position for three years.

Although never directly connected with theatrical management, Mr. Staab for years has been in a position to study exhibitor problems and therefore comes to the organization highly qualified for the position. As a member of the Motion Picture Commission, he has met various Milwaukee showmen and has considered with them the problems arising from censorship. In addition, he has been in charge of numerous theatricals staged by the Knights of Pythias lodge, of which he is a former grand chancellor for the state of Wisconsin.

Mr. Seegert announced that hereafter the executive secretary would make frequent trips throughout the state, thus getting into closer touch with exhibitor members, getting first-hand information of their needs and problems, and spreading the doctrine of the movies before various organizations not connected with the business, such as the Rotary clubs and Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Staab, who is 45 years old, at one time was connected with the Milwaukee Herald and more recently with the North Avenue Progress, a community newspaper. Mr. Baumann, whom he succeeds, has entered the film and slide advertising business in Milwaukee.

Milt Crandall Experiments in Drawing to Get Results in Pittsburgh Papers

MILTON D. CRANDALL, now of the publicity staff of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, makes interesting comment germane to the use of half tones in poorly printed papers, though his letter was written before he saw the article of two weeks ago in this department.

As old readers know, the R. & C. advertising has come in for a deal of comment in this department in the past six or eight years, starting with the efforts of Samuel Sivitz to persuade the local compositors to give him type display in the small sizes. Just before he retired from the field, Mr. Sivitz had achieved a good combination effect, though he was still having trouble with his artist.

Ill health compelled his retirement and the battle began all over again. Following his transcontinental trip for Down to the Sea in Ships, Mr. Crandall came onto the R. & C. lot this fall, and his efforts have been directed to a general campaign, which has resulted in the establishment of a photoplya department in the Tuesday issue of the Chronicle-Telegraph, with the other papers taking more interest than they previously displayed. This helps the other houses as well as the numerous theatres under the

THE FERRIS STYLE AD.

Rowland and Clark management, but so long as Milt gets what he wants, he is perfectly willing to share with others. Before he is through, he will probably land all of the papers with photoplay pages, for the papers will soon discover that these departments fill a subscriber want.

About Newspaper Work

But more interesting is his effort to get real display without half tones in newspapers where poor press work makes it practically impossible to get even halfway decent results.

Very wisely he has not sought to reform the press rooms. He is not trying to get better printing, but has directed his efforts toward getting a style of drawing that will give good results with poor printing. His experiments should interest not only theatre managers who cannot use half tones and can command the service of illustrators, but the publicity departments of the various production companies should find suggestion here from the results of practical experiment.

From a number of samples submitted, we have selected some individual results as being especially worthy of comment, but it should be understood that four houses are advertised as a unit in a forty-inch space. Two of these ads—and they are the most successful—follow the style used by Ben Ferris, of the Finkelstein and Ruben houses in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Ferris Style Best

In this the four spaces are set inside of a border and white space is used to hold them apart and give each a distinction of its own. This style seems to have been perfected by Ferris from the four-in-a-row used

A DESIGN WHICH PRINTS WELL EVEN IN PITTSBURGH

Milt Crandall's artist has taken the technique of the old woodcut engravers to get results with presswork a hundred years behind the times. This style of cut with its black mass and open line work will be attractive where a 50 screen halftone would be sickening.

four announcements with the three title space space in which the entire space is utilized for type. The spaces are exactly the same size, yet the individual announcements have more than triple the display value of the other, though the solid display gives the titles in letters four times the size. Moreover, the display has a more characteristic form and the R. & C. display can be picked off the page at first glance.

Replacing Half Tones

In the matter of text it will be noted that Mr. Crandall uses type wherever possible and he gets it into spaces where five years ago a Pittsburgh printer would have declared that type could not be placed. Take the Ponjola advertisement, for example.

A United Artists Release

HOLDING MARY OVER

The actual size of this display is 3 3-16 deep by 4 inches wide. Only the title and the signature are lettered. The names are set in 8 point bold, the heading of the panel in 8 point light bold italic and the matter in 6 point italic. There are the portraits of star and lead, a sketch of the Eiffel tower, for Paris, and the diamond mines of Africa. Not much drawing; merely enough to give character to the space without detracting from the type.

On the other hand the second week of Mary Pickford in Rosita suggests a hand letter, though it seems to be a "rugged" type letter. This was a holdover, so merely the announcement was needed. This is 2 11-16 wide and 3¼ deep. It tells all that is necessary, and tells it plainly.

But the star effort is the opening for Enemies of Women, which is reproduced in large size that it may be seen that even in Pittsburgh you can use line cuts if you make them properly. This seems to have been planned along the lines of the old-fashioned wood cuts, made when printing was in its infancy and general results were no better than Pittsburgh can get today.

In all of the cuts used by the theatres the open line and the solid mass replace the intricate, delicately shaded efforts that are so popular in the press book, where they are printed on nice white paper, with good ink. This is worked on cheap paper and with poor ink, and to guard against a blotch every precaution is taken. Even the lines in the background are carefully held apart. A hairline closer and they would puddle up.

This space is 7¼ by 5¼, about one-half larger than the reproduction. It stands up like a 24-sheet. We believe that if the press books carried one or two designs along similar lines, with open drawing for line and black mass instead of shading, many newspapers would find them far more useful than the present line cuts and infinitely to be preferred to the half tones.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

MUSICAL presentation with "Ponjola," the First National Picture, and Will Rogers in "Uncensored Movies," the Pathe pre-release, was built around the chorus of fourteen voices, the ballet of six and a girls' harp quintette. This ensemble filled the stage and filled the eye, and was one of the most warmly received stage pictures in some time. Running time of this incident was nine minutes, divided into three parts. Other musical incidents took eleven minutes, the Topical Review eight minutes, the Rogers comedy twenty and the feature one hour and fourteen minutes, making a show of two hours and two minutes.

"My Sweetie Went Away" and "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise," especially orchestrated, served as symphonized jazz overture, six minutes, giving various instruments a chance to step out. Two 150 ampere Mestrum booth floods of deep blue covered the entire stage. Two dome Mestrums of same amperage flooded the orchestra with orange. Six color blend spots and three box lamps of color blend shot up from beneath the small stage through the glass traps onto the silver draw curtains. Two arch spots of color blend hit the curtains from the side. Transparent columns at proscenium with two color blends in each.

The Pilgrims Chorus from "Tannhauser" was sung by the feminine chorus before a white patent leather back-drop. Singers were in evening gowns, and were arrayed in formal concert style across the stage. The back drop was lighted from the sides by four vari-colored spots to the side, colors running to blue, green and magenta. Two dome spots throwing color blends flooded the singers, bringing out in unique hue the various color of the gowns. Two booth spots of deep blue focused on side drapes and orchestra. The large stage foots were green. Five minutes.

Divertissements Distinctive, the big number, opened with a stage picture. The fourteen women singers were pyramided against the deep blue plush back cyclorama by means of two stairways on opposite sides of a platform, six girls being on each stairway and two on the platform. They were in white robes and wigs, with gold cross bands across the bust, Grecian style, and held garlands of flowers. To the right, upstage, were the five harpists in semi-circle formation, and to the left upstage were the six ballet dancers in various poses. Ensemble in Grecian costume throughout. After the tableau the singers took up Handel's "Largo" accompanied by the harps. Then came "Humoresque" by the harps while the dancers did their stuff. The third and final number of this incident was "Chansonette," with singers, harps and dancers working up to a strong finish. Lighting for this centered mainly on overhead spots of orange covering the whole number, augmented by x-rays. Arch spots from the sides were rainbow colored, and the box lamps and spots through the glass traps were color blends. Two booth Mestrums flooded the side drapes and orchestra deep violet, while the transparent columns were color blends top and bottom. The cove lights were yellow.

THIS AND A SIMILAR BANNER CAUGHT 100,000 PERSONS

They were carried around the field at three big football games in Boston to tell of the coming of Ponjola to the Gordon Theatre. Three crowds saw these thirty-footers, and at least half of them lived in Boston. Maps were given the visitors.

Two Banners Were Shown to 100,000

Two banners 30 feet long were painted for Ponjola at Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, Boston. These were shown to more than 100,000 persons.

One of the banners was carried around the Braves Field between the halves of the Brown-Dartmouth football game. A similar banner was used at the same time at the other ball park at another game, and one of them was brought into play at the Weymouth-Marquette game the following day. As football draws huge crowds, this was the most concentrated form of advertising, and the moving sign was not only made visible to all of the crowd, but it had a greater display value because of this motion.

Realizing that probably half of the crowd came from out of town, traffic maps showing the most direct route to the theatre from the field were handed out overprinted with "All roads lead to Ponjola," and the name of the house. With a heavy order of paper and some extensive newspaper work, Ponjola got a running start.

An effective ballyhoo was a wrecked car paraded through the streets with a sign to the effect that the Pleasure Mad owner had taken a six cylinder joy ride. An ambulance with a bandaged victim on the tailboard preceded the car. There was a special night at the cabaret supplying the chorus girls and an extensive set of teaser posters used before the title was established.

It was a pretty campaign and pulled them to the Warfield.

San Francisco Mayor Starred in Ballyhoo

Kingsmore has no corner on mayors for ballyhoos. Louis B. Mayer and his staff of trained press agents invaded San Francisco and not only landed the Mayor but the Chief of Police and the Chamber of Commerce. The reason was that a San Francisco woman had written The Valley of Content from which Pleasure Mad was taken, and so the city on the bay was selected for the premiere.

Mr. Mayer, with his family and some of the cast, went up to San Francisco where the party was met by the city officials and taken to City Hall where Mayor Rolph turned over the key of the city. They were also met by an Army Band (with a recruiting angle), and the jazz orchestra and chorus girls, in costume, from one of the cabarets.

It made a big spectacle and the chorus girls were hugely enjoyed by the large crowd.

Then they started the picture at the Warfield.

Mark This Well

George E. Brown, now conducting the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., but best known through his connection with Memphis theatres, has developed one of the best stunts yet on comedy selling.

Mr. Brown had Harold Lloyd in Why Worry and he felt that if he could demonstrate the audience approval, he could get even more business, so he went to see a concern handling radio sets. They were glad to work the stunt for him in return for the advertisement, and they ran an installation from the theatre to the heart of the business district a short distance away.

A loud speaker transmitted the laughter and a sign below told that they were laughing at Why Worry and that the work had been done by the cooperating company.

It's a wonderful stunt, but play it on the level and do not try to ring in the phonograph record. It will not be convincing. You want the laughter and the intervals.

THE FRONT AND BACK OF THE UNIVERSAL FOOTBALL CARD

Cloakey's New Gags for Merry Go Round

Getting a street stunt that required the services of twelve policemen to preserve some semblance of order was a stunt and encore worked by Oral D. Cloakey., of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on The Merry Go Round. He had this Universal rather late, but it was new in Ottawa and he stood them on their heads.

The stunt was staged with the cooperation of a department store. They wanted to introduce their Santa Claus impersonator with more impressiveness than merely letting him hitch on his whiskers and take his place in the store, so they arranged with the Regent to let him start from there.

Friday evening, Nov. 23, the impersonator climbed out of a special chimney built on the roof of the Regent so as to be in plain view on two streets. He climbed up inside the chimney and came down the outside. The chimney was plastered with a huge sign for The Merry Go Round, which was to open the following Monday. Twelve policemen were on the job to try and keep traffic open, but they succeeded only in preventing the children from hurting themselves or each other. Traffic was tied up for more than a quarter of an hour and it was much longer than that before the street became normal again. The cops almost fell down on the job when Santa came out of the chimney for he let 200 air balloons float down into the sea of juvenile humanity and—you can guess the rest.

Saturday he was host to the children at a special performance at the Regent. He was escorted to the theatre from the store by a military band. Each child able to gain admission was given a balloon and a bag of candy. Santa gave the children a talk and after the show the band took him back to the store, where he held a reception. Provision was made for 1,600 children, but there were so many more that a repeat entertainment had to be given the following week. That was the second traffic stoppage.

The store not only supplied the balloons and candy, paid for the band and the chimney and the services of the Santa, but two of the windows were given to the stunt and the feature, and liberal space in the daily advertising was given the event. More than this, the Rotary Club was enlisted to bring children to the showing, and the bannered automobiles ballyhooed the entire city while the Fire Department put eight men on duty inside the house and staged a small parade with children riding on the apparatus. And above all this, the newspapers, which give no special theatre notices, simply had to cover the events as news.

Mr. Cloakey built the elaborate Merry Go Round shown in the cut on this page, the dolls and other trimmings being supplied by a toy concern, which supplied a number of mechanical figures as well as the doll patrons of the carousel and the ferris wheel in return for a credit card and then gave their own window display to a hook-in. The same thing was done by the electrical concern which did the elaborate wiring.

The display was shown for two weeks in advance of the showing at four stores, playing three days in each.

Direction signs were used on the roads leading into town and in the business section there were cloth signs used to edge awnings also carrying direction arrows. This is something new, and Cloakey used enough of them to make comment.

There was also a mirrored merry-go-round on the marquise with spots playing on the mirror surfaces which reflected the light to the street. You have to see this to appreciate the effect.

There were other stunts, but these were the high lights of a campaign that was good even for Mr. Cloakey.

THIS WINDOW DISPLAY PLAYS FOUR ENGAGEMENTS

Got Pure Reading at Twenty Cents

Maybe you know about it, but anyhow, recently we had "apple week" and you were supposed to eat an apple a day and have apple pie for lunch and all that sort of thing.

They had it in St. Louis, along with the rest of the country, and Herschel Stuart sold the Fruit and Produce Association on the idea that a free distribution through the Missouri Theatre would mean more than merely handing out samples.

He paid $10 for some doorknobs and telephone hangers and not only got several hundred cases of apples but he won fifty-four inches of pure reading matter in connection with a live story. It was not just one story but a lot of small mentions through the week in the course of the general news story. That is better yet.

Hersch has a big house in the Missouri, and he has a large advertising allowance, but he doesn't see any use in buying what he can get for nothing. That's one of the reasons he has charge of a big house instead of a dinky 300 seater. He knows, too, that what he gets for nothing is often better than the best he can buy. You can't buy a tie in on a big local movement. You have to horn in, and Hersch and Bill Saal are a fine pair of horns.

Showed the Ages

Using the press book material on Three Ages, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Kraupa, of the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., got a very effective front on Buster Keaton.

A compo board fame was divided into three panels, each backed by dark cloth and in each section was a scene from one of the ages, the cave man and his woman, Buster as a Roman manicuring the lion's nails and the modern Buster amid the ruins of his Ford.

It gave the prospects some idea of what the title meant, and materially helped the sale of tickets.

A Successful Fight Against Competition

Frank H. Burns, exploitation man for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., had a real fight on his hands when they came to play Jackie Coogan in Circus Days. There was a real circus booked in, for the tent shows are still able to play away down south, and the Shriners were going to hold a Ceremonial Session and a Shrine session is a two or three day circus, as a rule, in that section.

Between the two it looked as though it would take a lot of fighting to get them in. It did, but they came, and held the business up. Without competition the chances are that all records would have been left so far behind they never could catch up.

Manager of Theatres H. B. Vincent started in for press stories several weeks in advance and the week before the opening the two of them took off their vests and started in to fight.

Three clowns were hired and cruised around town for ten days on a bannered truck. The banner was so loud that the horn could be dispensed with. One thousand small bags were printed up with circus talk, and these were thrown out around the schools and on the business streets. The bags were too small to hold many peanuts, but at that they were not much smaller than the circus variety.

A candy store was landed on the idea that candy was needed to make circus days complete, and a toy store gave up a window large enough to contain a 24-sheet as a background for toys. They took extra large newspaper spaces to announce that all toy purchases of fifty cents or more would carry a ticket to the attraction. Christmas shopping was never before done so early in Orlando. The tickets were singles and most of them brought in one or more paid admissions.

For ten days the toy department was crowded all day while others gaped at the window, the largest display ever gained in Orlando.

The clowns of course worked the streets during the Shrine parade and a couple of days later they went up and down along the line of the circus parade, tossing out peanuts to the waiting crowds and then tailed the actual circus parade.

Business was close to the top, but did not hit the highest mark. Mr. Burns says that if any exhibitor will use the same energy without too great a competition he can hang up a mark that will show the capacity of the house to its limit.

This is the cheapest big stunt that has been recorded on this picture.

A REGULAR DOG SHOW IN AN ALTOONA LOBBY

An effective design planned by the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., for Where the North Begins, in which Rin-tin-tin, the police dog is featured. The combination of cutouts with real foliage for a banner is the chief point of interest in this display.

Now It's Gang Club

Utilizing the novelty hats supplied by Pathe on Our Gang comedies, the James Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, staged a parade of length and explosiveness to put over the showing of their first release of this series.

Children attending the theatre the week before were given the hats and a card stating that if they would meet at a certain corner the following Saturday morning they would be conducted to the theatre to witness the first showing. The de Molay Boys' Band was hired to supply the music, and you could hear them some of the time, though for the greater part the whoops of the excited youngsters drowned out the band. The wearing of the hat was essential, but a man was stationed at the rendezvous to supply those who had come unprepared.

Poor Half Tones Are Not Entirely Fatal

The halftones in this 90 x 3 on Scaramouche in Chicago are not very well reproduced. You can make out the features, but that is about all. However, these half tones merely illustrate the cut. Type argument and good reproduction is not essential, though better work would have made a better appeal. The selling is done almost wholly on the talk, and this is cleverly written on the theatrical page, and because it does, it gets the attention of every person who passes that page. It would have been possible to have used a scene cut, and this would have wasted about seven eighths of the cost of the display, a 75 x 2, but this simple sketch sells the reader on reading and then sells him on seeing the production. The copy is enthusiastic but temperate, and it will convince many more ticket buyers than would a slaver of superlatives. The Hunchback will draw its best trade from the better class of persons, and these would not be appealed to through a splash of ——est words. They would regard an attraction so advertised with reasonable suspicion where they will be drawn up to the box office with this appreciative but sober announcement. But the best idea is the use of the cut for attention getting. It is so different from the average that it gets first call on the reader and sells him before he can look over the rest of the page. Where space must be economized because of its large cost, skillful appeal must replace a space spread, and this cut is worth a couple of columns of the usual stuff. To be seen at its best it should be reproduced in a portion of the page, but this is not possible here, so you will have to visualize its surroundings to appreciate just how much personality it displays in its company.

ten to get and hold the interest. The top lines get attention and as you read down the impression is formed that the play must be worth while. This is not the initial display which was much larger and made a wasteful use of cut material. Use of the star names would have helped considerably, but it is a good advertisement just as it stands.

Merry Go Round Is Tied to Two Pages

Although we have used little advertising on The Merry Go Round lately, this big Universal still seems to be cleaning up, though mostly it has dropped to the second and later run houses, but they show it up now and then. This double truck comes in rather belatedly from St. Louis, where it played the Missouri Theatre last September. Generally Herschel Stuart is more prompt in sending his results out. There is not a very close tie-up to the title in the various advertising displays, but they manage to get enough to make up a page and they get a better effort than can be had with the usual trade style because of the drawn design. Just how much the theatre had to pay toward this special space is not developed, but we think that very little was charged to the house. That drawn design works for all of the cooperating advertisers and it is probable that the extra space was pro rated to them. They profit from the drawn design as much as does the house and there is no reason why they should not help the cost by paying more than for the space they actually occupy. We think that the best hook-up chance was overlooked. The dancing school says nothing about the merry go rounds they teach.

Full Page Value with Less Space

Ralph Ruffner, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., does not believe in wasting his money on full page spaces if he can make less do, and he gets all the value of the full, plus next-to-pure-reading by taking 205 lines across the page for If Winter Comes. Ruff puts it all in a brief slogan in the upper right hand corner and he does not spell hell with dashes, either. He comes right out with it, and it does not look half as bad. He plays up the fact that it was filmed in England because he is appealing to a clientele largely British, and he modestly announces that "there is not another

He gains two objectives with one gesture, and saves money at the same time, which is characteristic of Ruff.

Sells Ponjola on Record of the Book

Most of the selling of Ponjola at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, is done on the book. The first paragraph tells that this is taken from the Stockley story of the girl who became a man on the African veldt and then goes on to say: "If you've read the book—no need to tell you the story. If you haven't, it would spoil your enjoyment to tell you more. That seems to cover the ground very thoroughly. If you've read the book, you know, and if you haven't, there is the suggestion that you should at least not miss the picture. And all this is carried by a single cut of Miss Nilsson, most of the cut going to a touring organist, which explains the left hand cut, with the organ pipes working very nicely into the drapery design. Keeping the figure to the other side of the space and using a black shadow gives it equal distinction and still holds it from the general design. This is not as showy as some of the recent Circle sketches, but we think that it is better craftmanship. There is more dignity to the design than the fluffy style of drawing, and at the same time it gives greater strength to the figure to isolate it from the more ornamental section.

Flaming Youth Girl Is Generally Useful

Here is another good display on Flaming Youth based on the same figure the Circle, Indianapolis, used on the same title. This seems to be the full plan book cut, which was fixed over by the Circle to get an effect more along its usual lines. By and large this form is more generally useful, since working with dark grounds is a more or less ticklish experiment. This line work is less apt to mud up and looks as though it would go through cheap work in good shape while still looking well on better paper better printed. If you will turn back to the issue for December 8 you will be able to compare this with the Circle display and note how the Circle artist built up around the press book suggestion. The artist figured that he could do no better, perhaps not as well, and he wisely took the press book figure. This display is from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore. It entails no art work and yet it gives a fine effect. We fancy that figure will be more generally used on this title than all of the other cuts combined.

Encouraging Crime in Evansville, Ind.

Just think of offering $10 in prizes for the best singing of Yes, We Have no Bananas! It would be better to offer ten dollars not to sing it, but the Victory Theatre, Evansville, Ind., in a P. S. to its display for The Age of Desire offers $4, $3, $2 and $1 prizes to the birds who give the best rendition of this overdone selection. Perhaps the idea is to lure the unsuspecting victims onto the stage where the enraged audience can shoot at them, or perhaps the banana song was still new in Evansville when the advertisement was printed. Perhaps, but we don't think that the darned thing stayed new for as long as a week anywhere. Anyhow the idea of a song contest in which all contestants sing the same song is a variant to the usual amateur night and is passed along for the benefit of others who have to use special nights. The advertisement itself packs a terrific lot of talk for its space. It is three nines, and it carries four or five conversations without seeming to be crowded. Most of it is six point, unleaded. Someone must have dropped the slugs on the floor because the lines do not match up well. The main bank, for instance runs:

"Whatever my son is I him as a babe for the made him. I deserted luxury and riches. I

Of course the second and third lines are transposed. There is a similar drop in the paragraph for the vaudeville act. The trouble may have come from setting in corrected machine lines, but an advertiser is justified in not paying for the space, and if he holds up the bill a couple of times, this sort of thing will stop. Of course mistakes will happen now and then, and should be passed over, but no advertiser should be asked to pay for such hash, and if it is a chronic condition a hold-up will effect a cure. The chief point of interest in the display is the manner in which the cut dominates the space without detracting from the type. This is because the type lines are held to small sizes and are not permitted to fight with the attractor. A space like that with light type is worth four times the space with large letters killing off the display value of the cut. It probably will look a bit too light in the reduction, but it is a well handled display.

Got a Bonus

Four mounted men to advertise Rupert of Hentzau at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, cost Oral D. Cloakey nothing. He worked a local riding school into the Papyrus-Zev race pictures and the proprietor was so well pleased with his share of the advertisement that he gave the horses and riders free for Rupert.

That is the real secret of good exploitation. Leave them pleased and you can come back.

Coal Gold

Painting a couple of sacks of coal with gilt paint and adding a small ad for The Gold Diggers was the idea of J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas.

These fa e nuggets were planted in doorways and other good places, and pretty soon each lump of coal was going around in the pocket of its personal press agent, who told the rest of the town. It was a tedious job, but well worth the investment of time and gold paint.

"Six Cylinder Love"

Delightful Entertainment in Fox Production of Successful Stage Comedy Dealing with Newlyweds

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

When "Six-Cylinder Love" proved such a big success on the stage there were many who saw in it great possibilities as a screen production. Among these was the Fox Film Corporation, and as a result this picture bids fair to fully live up to expectations, for it has all the ear-marks of a winner.

In the first place it is a delightful little comedy, with witty lines, the best of which have been preserved in the subtitles, a charming story rich in human interest, an excellent cast including the star, Ernest Truex, and several others who contributed to the stage success, all in a well-rounded, well-made production.

The play has been transferred bodily to the screen with only slight elaboration in the use of the greater possibilities of the screen for atmospheric effect, and with the necessary curtailment of some of the lines. However, all of the clever touches which kept the play on the New York stage for two years and made it a success on the road have been retained.

"Six-Cylinder Love" is a straight comedy through which there is an undercurrent of seriousness. It has a story which gets away from the beaten track for the most part. Never does it introduce farce or burlesque but depends on comedy situations naturally developed by the story. You will find yourself laughing aloud many times in watching this picture and smiling almost continually.

Notwithstanding the preponderance of the comedy element there is no dearth of drama, which is brought out in effective relief against the comedy background, making it more intense. The theme of the picture, which deals with newlyweds, is intensely human and will strike a responsive chord in a majority of spectators, not only in the way good-natured fun is poked at them but in the sympathy aroused for the diminutive husband who, after buying a car for his wife, finds himself getting deeper and deeper into extravagance and finally misappropriating money which belongs to another. You feel nothing but pity for the poor chap and will be delighted at the way he gets back on his feet despite obstacles.

Altogether, it is an unusually satisfying picture, tremendously true to life, that gets under the skin, for the action is extremely plausible and might happen to any of us. At the same time while it is amusing you it is putting over a good lesson, especially for the "newlyweds," of the folly of extravagance and trying to live beyond your means to make a show. It is a picture that will appeal strongly to the men and just as strongly to the women and should prove a box-office success in neighborhood as well as first-run houses. In addition to other factors, it offers excellent angles for exploitation.

Ernest Truex is ideal in the role of the young husband. His excellent work and his diminutive stature add greatly to the comedy and the arousing of sympathy and it is doubtful if anyone else could have made this part so effective. Florence Eldridge is well cast as his wife; Ralph Sipperly as the auto salesman, Berton Churchill as the husband's employer and Donald Meek as an older husband who has gone through the same experiences give the same kind of excellent performances as they did on the stage, and the remainder of the cast is entirely adequate.

Your patrons will like "Six-Cylinder Love."

Story

Richard Burton, fairly well-to-do, finds that after he has bought an auto he has acquired such expensive and sponging friends and his wife and daughter have become so socially ambitious, that he finally has to sell his home and the car. He calls in a clever auto salesman who by means of a ruse sells the car to the Sterlings, newlyweds, living next door. Gilbert Sterling inherits Burton's sponging friends, and his wife starts on a career of extravagance that ends in Gilbert "borrowing" money from his employer. Gilbert sees the light then, kicks out his worthless friends and with his wife moves into a small flat after selling his home. Finally the janitor buys the car and Gilbert is able to pay back the last of the money. His employer then gives him back his job. Gilbert's wife says that he can then buy a car for her—but not an auto, something more old-fashioned—in anticipation of a coming event.

"A Lady of Quality"

Universal Picturization of Burnett Novel With Virginia Valli Is a Beautiful Production

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Hobart Henley's screen version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's story and play is a production of great beauty. As it is one of Universal's Super-Jewels, one naturally expects a superior attraction. It assuredly is this. Pictorially it is very nearly perfect and dramatically it has the elements that appeal widely.

Virginia Valli has never had a more flattering opportunity to exploit her beauty, charm and ability. Her role is one of many moods. The early scenes show her the daughter of an English nobleman, banished by her father and raised in a stable where she learns to "outswear and outride" all the men. When her father takes her back again and she has her first love affair, a new character unfolds itself. "A Lady of Quality" emerges. The star has many effective and affecting scenes. She is beautifully gowned and always exceptionally pleasing to the eye—one of the production's strong points of appeal.

The production has a fine, commendable quality of being beautiful and rich without suggesting anything excessively showy. The castle grounds and interiors are beautiful in the extreme. But there is a marked dignity and good taste about it all.

Some may find the transformation in the heroine rather too sudden and complete to be convincing. There is such a decided break in the spirit of the picture that it is almost like two different stories. The girl's real sweetheart is introduced late in the picture and then is only lightly described. The love interest would have been stronger if more admiration and sympathy had been urged for Milton Sills, who proves to be the worth-while suitor.

But this does not mar the picture's attractiveness for average tastes. It should bring exceptionally good box-office returns because it is an exceptional picture. Hobart Henley's directing, the material beauty of the production, Virginia Valli and a fine supporting cast should mean great satisfaction anywhere.

Story

A girl, raised as a boy because her father had no son, absolutely unconventional, suddenly determines to become a lady of quality. In her new character, Clorinda Wildairs falls impulsively in love with Sir John Ozen, a brilliant Beau Brummel, lady-killer of the most unscrupulous type. In an inadvised moment she permits him to clip a lock of her hair. He gives her the cold shoulder. Later, she falls desperately in love with the Earl's kinsman, the Duke of Osmonde. Sir John Ozen, inspired by pique, holds over her head the telltale lock of hair. In a tempest of passion on both sides, an act is committed which changes the whole course of the Countess' plan of life for a happy one.

"Her Temporary Husband"

First National Farce Comedy with Sidney Chaplin Is a Regular Riot of Laughs and Fast Action

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

First National has a regular whale of a comedy in "Her Temporary Husband." Here is a picture that looks as if it were built around the slogan: "Get the laughs," and it certainly does. No matter how hard-boiled you are, even if you belong to the class who sit back and mentally dare a picture to make you laugh, this one will get you, pretty soon you will be smiling and before you know it you will laughing aloud.

An out-and-out farce, making no pretense to being taken seriously, it starts in with the first subtitle to let you know it is all in good fun. This attitude is maintained throughout; while the action is getting under way there are snappy subtitles and humorous incidents and by-play on the part of Sidney Chaplin which keeps you in good humor. Then once the main idea begins to unfold, the action gets faster and faster, the humor more and more boisterous up to the climax which is a regular whirlwind, both from the standpoint of action and laughs.

Belonging to the type of farces based on complications due to one person being mistaken for another, this picture introduces a girl who to live up to the provisions of a will must be married within a certain time. Nothing new in this, but she goes to a home for incurables and gets an old bearded man for the job. A chap who has fallen in love with her at sight contrives to take his place after donning a beard, and in the general mix-up his valet has also to disguise as the old man. Then the fun gets fast and furious until all three of these bearded gents are darting through the house, each pursued by a chap who from motives of his own wants the genuine old man out of the way.

Finally a whole gang of thugs is brought into place and this is countered when the valet broadcasts a radio call for help from the army, navy, police, firemen, boy scouts, messenger boys, Elks, Eagles, Moose, etc., etc. Here is a situation possible of portrayal only on the screen with hundreds of soldiers, sailors, and the other groups and apparently thousands of civilians are shown converging on the house. This climax is a riot from every angle. Then on top of that, with no let-down in interest, the manner in which the conspirators are spirited away by the valet and given what's coming to them, brings another round of laughs.

The majority of the responsibility for laughs falls on Sidney Chaplin as a booze-loving valet who is the goat all through the picture, and he is excellent, and especially fine is a scene in which he tries to tell the hero in pantomime what the gang is going to do to him. Owen Moore is well cast as the hero and Tully Marshall as the real old man, with Sylvia Breamer as the girl and Chuck Reisner as a tough.

Everybody enjoys a good laugh. "Her Temporary Husband" is crammed full of them and should prove a great big box-office winner, so don't overlook it.

Story

Blanche, according to her aunt's will, must get married in twenty-four hours to a wealthy man in order to inherit the property. She arranges with a home for incurables to furnish an old man with whiskers who should not live very long. Thomas Burton, a wealthy chap, sees Blanche and it is love at first sight. Learning of the plan, he disguises himself with whiskers and takes the old man's place and marries Blanche. Then a general mixup begins in Blanche's home in which a chap who wishes to marry her, and the old man's secretary, who wants to get his money, plan to kill the old gent and enlist the aid of a tough guy. During the action Burton's valet, Judd, disguises as the old man, while Burton appears as his nephew. The real old man appears and finally great confusion is caused by there being three old men on the scene. Finally when the tough calls for his gang, Judd sends a radio to the army, navy, police, firemen, Elks and many others, and the whole mob descends on the scene. The gang is captured, Burton explains his deception and Blanche agrees to accept her temporary husband as a permanent one.

"The Dangerous Maid"

New Constance Talmadge Feature for First National Has Unusual Amount of Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Seventeenth century intrigue in England furnishes a thrilling and picturesque background in Constance Talmadge's new picture. It is excellent audience entertainment. In book form, the story was entitled "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," and concerns the political adventures of a fiery and romantic maid which will appeal strongly to the average fan.

While light comedy touches are generously scattered, the general style is more serious than the usual Constance Talmadge feature. The dramatic character of the period means considerable suspense. To the conflict between the rebels and King James' forces, the heroine's defiant attitude adds great zest.

The personal note is always paramount. Entertainment is the first consideration, as the historical quality is negligible and the box-office angle is never forgotten.

At the same time the customs and costumes of the day give the drama a colorful background. Curled wigs and gay doublets suggest the luxurious fashions. The star is charmingly gowned and her scenes in the disguise of a boy are among the most interesting and exciting of all. The photography is excellent and the settings, particularly the village exteriors, are notable.

Director Victor Heerman has succeeded in keeping the action bright and absorbing. Conway Tearle is attractively cast as Captain of the King's forces and Marjorie Daw is pretty in a minor role. A number of other characterization bits help to make the picture interesting.

Story

Barbara Winslow aids her brother, a rebel, in escaping from the King's forces. Captain Prothero, attracted to Barbara, lets her go when she is captured disguised as her brother, and both are arrested and thrown in prison. A secret door is discovered and all the prisoners escape. Barbara gets pardons for herself and the Captain by bartering some valuable papers which expose a plot against the King. The Captain is forced to leave the country but Barbara goes with him.

"Reno"

Goldwyn Comedy Drama Pokes Fun at the Variety of Divorce Laws and Has Splendid Melodramatic Climax

Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett.

They have lots of fun laughing at the wide variety between the divorce laws of the various states in the Goldwyn picture "Reno." It ridicules the ease with which a divorce may be obtained in some states and the impossibility of getting one in others. It depicts the comedy complications which follow the man and woman divorced in one state, not divorced in another, and how a man by crossing a state line may suddenly find himself a bigamist.

It also pokes fun at the way in which some of the present generation of husbands acquire and shed wives, and how wives change their husbands at the slightest whim. But all the while you are laughing at the complications caused by the divorces issued in Reno and considered differently in other states, you feel that underneath there is a strain of real purpose to show how the laws which have been made to correct an evil are really adding to the immorality of the nation, and a suggestion for a law which will apply equally to every state.

Starting out as a lively comedy drama, the picture has an unusually melodramatic ending, which answers the call for something decidedly new in pictures. Amid picturesque shots of the natural wonders of Yellowstone Park are introduced dramatically thrilling scenes of a fight between the two husbands of the same woman, ending in the one being thrown into the boiling pool of a geyser, and then the body tossed high into the air by the force of the spouting geyser and crushed upon the rocks below.

Most of the action is just good fun but in an effort for contrast there has been introduced scenes with a dash of the risque which may shock some patrons, as for instance the passionate love scene between Emily Tappan and Walter Heath; also the idea of the no-divorce law in South Carolina could have been more pleasantly shown than by having the husband crush his wife's fingers in the clothes wringer and otherwise abuse her.

It is an exceptionally good box office attraction. The title will attract in the first place, there are plenty of opportunities for laughter, a strong and unusual climax and the whole enacted by a cast which contains any number of names which are good for publicity purposes.

Leah Baird's Latest Production for Associated Exhibitors Has Novelty and Suspense

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In her latest production, "The Miracle Makers," Leah Baird offers another dependable box-office attraction. It is a well planned picture, calculated to give the public a popular blending of melodrama, romance and serious drama. The star's performance in a womanly role is sincere and moving.

A new situation is pictured—the smuggling of Chinese boys who have been turned down by the immigration department. This successfully introduces a moment of suspense when the girl saves the human cargo from being thrown overboard because a seaplane is patroling overhead.

A forced marriage to a loathsome seaman is the tragic note. While Miss Baird's dramatic work and Richard Headrick, one of the screen's most adorable children, will bring a sympathetic response, this will not hinder some from criticizing the situation as unrealistic. It is hard to believe that any girl would prefer to face the humiliation of bringing up her son without a name rather than to tell the truth—that her husband is a convict. But few could handle this situation more effectively than the star. She is well acquainted with screen values and gives the public enough that is worth while in this picture to atone for some implausibility.

Mitchell Lewis as the heavy, George Walsh as the lead and George Nichols as the girl's father are finely cast. The big fight between Lewis and Nichols arouses unusual human interest because of the difference in the ages of the characters. The villain's death might have been managed in a less melodramatic way. The disposal of him by having him fall down the well approaches burlesque.

"Lucretia Lombard"

Excellent Box-Office Appeal in Warner Brothers' Production Offered with Choice of Two Titles

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Here is a picture that comes to the exhibitor with a choice of titles as Warner Brothers are releasing it under the title of the book on which it is based, "Lucretia Lombard," and also under the alternate box-office title of "Flaming Passion." A full line of paper and accessories have been prepared for each title.

Adapted from a widely-read up-to-date novel by the popular author, Kathleen Norris, this picture should prove a big box-office attraction and a money maker in the majority of theatres. It has a story that is interesting throughout with many dramatic situations and a lot of human interest. The production is well-made, capably acted and finely photographed, and in addition to all this there is an unusually thrilling and effective climax, combining drama and melodrama, with a big forest fire, and a flood which sweeps the heroine and her rival from a high trestle into a raging torrent.

The story is based on the intense love of a woman who is married to a dissolute old roue and a man who against his will finds himself engaged to a woman he does not love. It is a pure love, however, and while the depth of their love is brought out there is nothing risque, or of questionable propriety in the film. The story is finely developed and right at the start arouses your interest and sympathy, and is dramatic enough to make it a worth-while attraction even without the thrilling climax.

The leading roles of Lucretia Lombard and Stephen Winship are finely portrayed by two favorites who have been seen in several other Warner Brothers' sucesses, Irene Rich and Monte Blue. Irene Rich is particularly well cast in a type of role that she has shown she can handle expertly, one in which the dramatic appeal is enhanced by restrained emotion, a woman who sees no chance for the fulfillment of an almost overpowering love. Monte Blue is also well suited to his role which calls for restrained emotion. In fact it is this element of intense love facing a situation with apparently no happy solution that gives the picture its great strength and appeal.

The excellent acting in this picture is not confined to the feature players, for Alec B. Francis comes in for his share as Stephen's father, a minister, while Marc McDermott gives a fine portrayal of Lucretia's husband, and Norma Shearer is well cast as the other woman. She is vivacious and peppy in the lighter moments and effective and realistic in the more serious ones.

Length, 7,500 feet.

Story

Blinded by the glamour of his wealth and title, Lucretia marries Sir Allen Lombard, but her love is killed as she finds he is dissolute and dissipated. Sir Allen soon pays the price for his riotous living and, confined to a wheel chair, craves drugs. Through a ruse he gets Lucretia to give him an opiate that causes death. Lucretia is accused but Stephen Winship, the district attorney, absolves her of blame. It is a case of love at first sight between Stephen and Lucretia and despite the fact that against his will Stephen is engaged to his father's ward, Mimi, they are attracted to each other. Stephen's father, the Reverend Winship, is shot and at his request Stephen marries Mimi, believing Lucretia does not love him. Lucretia, however, has gone away with his brother Fred to help him out of a difficulty. A forest fire occurs and Lucretia in trying to save Mimi takes refuge on a bridge which is washed away by a bursting dam. Stephen saves the two but Mimi is so injured she dies, leaving Stephen to Lucretia.

"The Shepherd King"

Fox Screen Version of the Biblical Story of David Is a Dramatic and Spectacular Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Fox Film Corporation is offering "The Shepherd King," an adaptation of the stage play of the same title, by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, based on the well known Biblical story of David. It has been handled in a reverent manner throughout and while furnishing entertainment for the masses should appeal particularly to the vast majority of patrons who are familiar with the story.

It is a big production and one that is more forceful from an entertainment standpoint than the majority of pictures of this type. In filming it, Director J. Gordon Edwards and his staff spent more than a year in Palestine, Egypt and Jerusalem. As a result not only were interesting scenic effects secured, such as those showing the Jews leaving Egypt, with the pyramids and sphinx in the background, but striking shots silhouetted against beautiful cloud effects. Due to the atmospheric conditions, some of the photography is remarkably beautiful. But overshadowing this is the fact that the action all takes place in what is said to be the identical surroundings called for in the Bible.

The picture also takes rank as one of the big spectacles of the screen, for in addition to the effective use of the natural surroundings there are tremendous and exceptionally realistic sets representing the palace and court-yard of the Hebrew King, through which surge hundreds of men in the big scenes. There are also many big battle scenes in which large bodies of men, hundreds of them on horseback and all effectively costumed, are employed to advantage.

In such surroundings is enacted the stirring story of David's rise from shepherd boy to king, which has been handled in an effective manner, the strongly dramatic character of the story has been brought out forcefully and it holds your attention. We follow David through his career, including the slaying of the giant Goliath and his battles with the Philistines until he becomes the king, while all through the story is woven his romance with the Princess Michal.

It is a well made production that commands attention. With the exception of Violet Mersereau, in the role of the young princess, the entire cast is composed of foreign players. Edy Darclae in the vamping role of the other princess has been seen in foreign productions; the others are unfamiliar to American audiences and are practically all Italians. Especially good is the work of the actor portraying David, who has a strong note of sincerity in his work; the actor portraying the king also gives a commendable performance and the others in the cast are adequate.

Story

Saul, first king of Judea, does not wait as commanded by the Lord for the arrival of the Prophet Samuel before preparing to battle the Philistines. Samuel tells him he is accursed of the Lord and will lose his throne. Samuel selects David to become King. Saul's son Jonathan meets David and brings him to the court. David goes out and with his sling slays Goliath. Saul, believing him to be the man of the prophecy, sends him into a trap against the Philistines, but he returns victorious and Saul tries to kill him. David leaves the court and goes into a cave. Hundreds of his men follow him and when the Philistines attack Saul, David comes to the rescue and conquers the Philistines. Saul and Jonathan are killed in the battle. David is acclaimed King and he takes as his wife Saul's daughter Michal, with whom he has fallen in love.

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

BABY PEGGY'S choice of Universal as the sponsors of her first feature production was fortunate. For Universal has put behind "The Darling of New York" a campaign of showmanship that should help mightily in carving a new niche in the motion picture hall of fame for the diminutive star.

The campaign book on Baby Peggy's first big picture, which has just been issued, outlines a seat-selling effort just as comprehensive and effective as that published on any other Universal-Jewel—which is saying considerable, as you men who have come in contact with Universal showmanship probably know.

FEATURED in the press book is the "Baby Peggy Resemblance Contest," a stunt which already has proved itself a big business-getter. The press book explains in detail the manner in which you can put this over, either working alone or cooperating with your newspaper. This is one of those sure-fire ideas that can be worked equally successfully by a small house as well as a large one, inasmuch as it entails little expense and only the degree of effort you care to give it.

THE keynote of the campaign is the personal touch of Baby Peggy "talking" to prospective patrons—that is, almost every aid has a message from Baby Peggy. Dealing with such a cute and attractive kiddie as Baby Peggy, that's a darned effective promotional angle.

Two songs can be used in connection with the showing of the picture, orchestrations of both of which are furnished without charge.

A GOOD stunt is the circulation tie-up with newspapers, in which the Baby Peggy doll figures as the prize, and in which the Baby Peggy buttons can be used for club members.

ALL in all, it looks to us that the exhibitor who can't find something to suit his needs in the "Darling of New York" campaign—he just can't ever find anything.

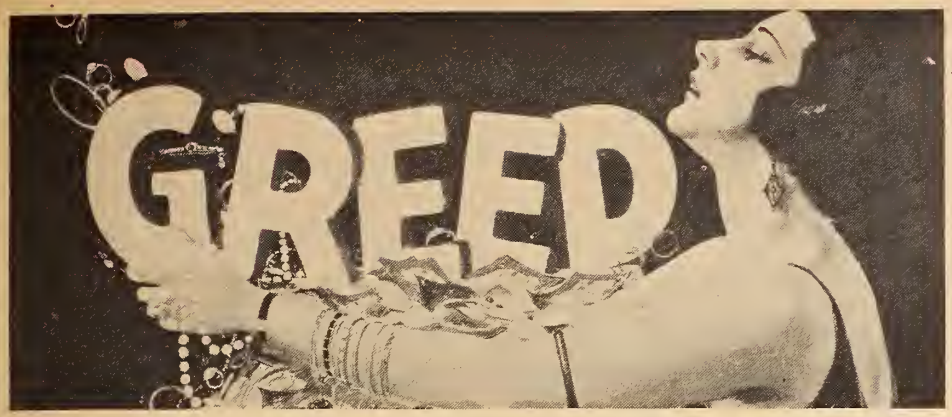
The Darling of New York

The herald illustrated above is printed in two colors on paper 11x16. It folds in the center, giving four pages of type and picture matter, with ample space for imprint on back



Advance sketch of a striking poster on Von Stroheim's "Greed," a forthcoming Goldwyn release. If all of the posters live up to the mark set by this twenty-four they will leave nothing to be desired

One cause of complaint among the exhibitors who write to us is that often they cannot obtain the ideas for their own use that producers use for the covers of their press books. One typical letter states:

"Why is it that producers always seem to use the best illustrations and cuts in advertising their picture to the exhibitor, and he is unable to get that cut at his exchange? It seems to me that if an idea is good enough for a producer to use on the cover of his press sheet it certainly should be good enough to make into a newspaper ad. cut. I wouldn't kick if it were always possible to reproduce the cover, but these colored covers, as you know, usually are either too difficult or too expensive to reproduce to make it practical.

"Another thing I noticed is that when producers are running their big pictures in legitimate theatres in big cities they use different cuts in their ads. than they put in the press sheets. Why is this? It seems to me that if a press-book cut is good enough for the average exhibitor it ought to be good enough for the producer; vice versa, if the producer thinks his big-city advertising is good, he ought to put it in his press books for the exhibitor.

"What do you think about this?"

WE think the exhibitor in this case is right, but we qualify our opinion with the statement that most producers do put their New York ads. in the press books whenever practicable. Very often the press books are entirely in work before the big-city run, and it is too late to make any changes. Our only explanation of the fact that producers do not as a rule use press book ads. for big-city showings is that the ads. are too large to be used where newspaper space is so expensive.

WHICH opens the way for some advertising man to incorporate some smaller ads. in the press sheet—and by that we are not forgetting the "slugs" that appear in most every press sheet.

AS to why the press-sheet cover illustrations are not available, even in smaller sizes than the cover itself, we leave the answer to the advertising men themselves.

"An unusual effect is achieved by the use of delicate colors in the posters for 'The Old Fool,'" says the Hodkinson publicity department. "Orchid, faint pinks and yellows make a really artistic display."

Cover of the "White Tiger" publicity clip sheet. An unusually striking display, which is also available as a newspaper advertisement. It gives an idea of the quality of the newspaper ads. throughout

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

Associated Exhibitors

CRASHING THRU. (6 reels). Star Harry Carey. Ordinary program picture that went over very well. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DESTROYING ANGEL. (6,000 feet). Star, Leah Baird. One of the best Leah Baird pictures I ever played, and that is saying some, as it is almost impossible to improve on any of her pictures. Exhibitors cannot go wrong no matter which picture they pick. I have played them all, and cleaned up on every one; and the pictures will please them all. Good any time. Capacity attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very funny comedy with plenty of thrills. Another "Hottentot," only airplanes were used instead of horses. Similar stories. Good business for a week. Fine moral tone. Suitable for Sunday. Draw all types in city of 68,000. Admission 15-20-30. R. V. Erk, Barcli Theatre (1,200 seats), Schenectady, New York.

F. B. O

CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE? (6,000 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Good program picture, but nothing to brag about. Used usual allotment of posters. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

DIVORCE. (5,900 feet). Star, Jane Novak. Every one enjoyed this one, remarking on the big story and the splendid acting. We had no kicks; many comments. Fully as good as many of the so-called specials. F. B. O. sell it right. Pretty nice folks, these people. Some of the best bets I have ever played were their pictures. Very, very good moral tone. Suitable for Sunday. Oh, yes! Good attendance. Town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HUMAN WRECKAGE. (7,215 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. Whatever you may think of the picture it brought them in and kept them interested from the start to the finish. Where the box office is happy the exhibitor generally is also. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

First National

BRASS BOTTLE. (5,290 feet). Star cast. Paid a good price for this one. Advertising matter looked good. Advanced my admissions and disappeared when the crowd came out. Had good attendance. Not suitable for any day. Draw college students in town of 2,100. R. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

CHILDREN OF DUST. (6,228 feet). Star cast. Good picture. First part a trifle long. Pauline Garon, Johnnie Walker, Lloyd Hughes and Bert Woodruff are good. Has good moral tone, and is suitable for Sunday. Attendance was fair. Town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Very good attendance. Some thought it Jackie's best picture. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Splendid picture. Our patrons will not patronize a child star. Moral tone fine, and is perfect for Sunday. Had fair attendance. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Jackie Coogan keeps his big audiences roaring with laughter or on the verge of tears throughout the seven reels, and the bigger per cent. of the patrons wished that there were at least three reels more of this truly wonderful picture. "Daddy" will rival in popularity any film now being screened, and Jackie Coogan's popularity in Oklahoma City has been increased greatly by reason of his latest and best picture being shown here. A picture unrivaled, and sure to please both old and young. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DULCY. (6,859 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. It looks to us as if friend Connie was growing old and getting fat. Did not give as good satisfaction as most of her pictures here. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Good picture, and was a pleasant surprise to me, as some of the critics knocked this. Direction good; cast very good. Pleased about ninety per cent. Bought this right, and made some money on it; regular advertising to good attendance. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Bought this for a special, and got asked top price as usual. Nothing more than a fair western program picture. Had fair attendance. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw rural and town class in town of 1,700. Charles Wolfe, Isis Theatre, Winamac, Indiana.

HOTTENTOT. (5,953 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good. Fair business. Has good moral tone, and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

PECK'S BAD BOY. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Broke house record. Played it two nights. Good house both nights. If you have not played it get it, and go after it strong. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. J. Douglas, Strand Theatre, Pierce, Nebraska.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Good comedy-drama. Douglas is liked here. Picture is clean, and drew many laughs. Edith Roberts and rest of cast were good. Has good moral tone, and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission fifteen cents matinees, twenty-five cents evenings. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Best audience picture this year. Acting one hundred per cent. Wonderful story, and plenty of action and thrills. Has good moral tone, and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. Draw neighborhood and foreign classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kenneaster, Mystic Theatre (320 seats), Clovis, California.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. Fair attendance. Poor picture. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Draw family and railroad class in town of 7,750. Admission 10-25, specials 10-35, supers 10-50. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. This picture will please. Good for all classes. The title is good for hook-ups, advertising and exploitation. The paper is extra good. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

Fox

ARABIA. (4,448 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A very good program picture. Pleased here about eighty-five per cent. Mix is a good drawing card with us. Fair moral tone; suitablt for Sunday. Good attendance oi farmer class, town of 150. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. Jack Schneider, Casino Theatre (285 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR. (5,787 feet). Star, Henry B. Walthall. Walthall's acting very good and picture pleased all who like that type. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Attendance, 72 at 35, 11 at 15 cents. Draw town and country class, town of 700 (supposed to be live). J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

MAN'S SIZE. (4,316 feet). Star, William Russell. A little better than the average Russell picture. It seemed to please, but failed to draw. Russell not much of a drawing card here. Fair moral tone. Not considered suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance, drawing neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SILENT COMMAND. Star, Edmund Lowe. A hip, hip, hooray! flag-waving picture that is all right and just about a shade better than program stuff. It won't stand dissection by any critical audience, and you want to go light on your promises, for it won't make good on too strong exploitation. First day, fine; second day, sad. The local critics claimed it "didn't ring true" and the fight on the ship at sea got more laughs than any other part of the film, and it was not intended to be a comedy scrap. You have great material here to work with from an advertising angle; hence my caution to go slow and see it for yourself ere booking, that may have a lot to do with your purchase price if you're not handicapped by local conditions. Heralds and mailing list gave, for the two days, poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STRENGTH OF PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. Any exchange should be ashamed to take good money for such a print; and we are paying almost double for Fox stuff. This was a very good picture when it was a five-reler, but now (from this print) it's not a four-reeler. Some of my people went out asking me, "What's the matter with that picture?" Well—this one is sure "cut" and dried. If you can't get a good print lay off of this one; don't use it, it will do you harm. We wired for another picture for the second day showing. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Goldwyn

CHRISTIAN. (8,000 feet). Featured cast. Did not go over very good for us. For the price we paid should have received a better print. Cracked sprocket holes, six misframes and parts cut out. Nuff said! Attendance fair. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star, Claude Gillingwater. A good home life picture but the patrons have been fed up on this stuff so long that they are growing weary of it and as a result the S. R. O. sign was not taken down and dusted off. It is still in the attic where it was placed several months ago. Nothing wrong with the picture as no one kicked. Pa gets the credit in this one. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Featured cast. A very fine picture. Pleased one hundred per cent. Be sure and book this one. Had good attendance. Admission 10-35. Town of 5,000. N. Russell, Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

SPOILERS. (8,028 feet). Star, Milton Sills. One of the best pictures I ever ran. Any exhibitor that wants a real honest to goodness "he man" picture should book it now. Attendance, house record. Draw country class in town of 8,000. C. L. Hackworth, Grand Theatre, Huntsville, Alabama.

SOULS FOR SALE. (7,864 feet). Star cast. Patrons liked it better than "Hollywood." Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

The bad print evil has been discussed from about every angle.

The cure rests with the exhibitor—solely.

It's natural with an exchange manager to "get away with it" as long as all he gets is kicks.

But when his salesmen trail the bad prints and come in with the story of exhibitors who state that they're not taking any, thank you—such and such prints were on the bum and there are other exchanges in their territory that are delivering what the exhibitor pays for—then things may begin to change for the better.

Every exhibitor ought to sit down and write courteously to the producer after running a bad print, explaining exactly how and why it was unfit to run. This would help. The producer doesn't want to spend thousands advertising his pictures and let some poor print ruin his future sales and destroy the effects of his advertising.

Tell him and tell the salesman.

Metro

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. This play, book, author and story are so well known your feature is sold to the public as soon as you post your first advertising. Saw many new faces, and, judging by the laughter and interest in the screen, I know they were pleased. It is a light Irish comedy drama, but a distinct and refreshing change from the eternal triangle situations that are so common in pictures today. The price was right and I showed this at regular admission to full houses in spite of unfavorable weather. A fine attraction for Sunday. Used slide, boards, window cards and mailing list. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

SOUL OF THE BEAST. (5,300 feet). Star cast. A good outdoor picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

THREE AGES. (5,251 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Little less than a knockout. Continual flashbacks weakened continuity, but has everything to please and did please ninety-five per cent. Second night better attended than first at raised admissions. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw mixed classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harvey, Strand and Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville and Dixon, California.

WHERE THE PAVEMENT ENDS. (7,706 feet). Star cast. Sure wish we had not played this one, Sunday. It is too rough. We can't understand how this picture ever received a good comment, but it has in several places. It was not liked here. Not any some at all. Moral tone not good and not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance first day. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Paramount

HEART RAIDER. (5,705 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Dandy picture. Different, cute, fast and entertaining. The folks will come out saying, "'Twas a fine picture." "Mr. Manager we are well pleased. Made us all feel young again. Full of pep, ambition, and sauer kraut." Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not his best, but a very good Meighan vehicle and if this star means anything to you, get behind it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Cash in on it, boys. Paramount is fair about rental, too. I wish we had more Meighans in the business. The picture has plenty of action and is human. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). A picture that should satisfy any audience. Plenty of action and some very good comedy. Ran it two days and did a fine business. Don't fail to book this one. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had large attendance. Draw general class in town of 4,000. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, Jewett City, Connecticut.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Of all the Peter B. Kyne stories that have been transferred to the screen I've never seen a poor one. The star is surrounded by a good cast. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,155 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best Swanson feature I have used. It pleased them all. Owing to fairs and unfavorable weather the attendance was poor, but it was no fault of the picture. A good picture for any day. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This was a fifty-fifty picture as far as being entertainment for our audience. It was well acted and cast but they don't like this kind here. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A story of old Salem, a Chinese maiden and an American sailor. Have read some adverse reports on this but considered it a fine picture. Albert Roscoe, Jacqueline Logan, Leatrice Joy and Raymond Hatton are splendid. Had good attendance. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. Fine attraction in every respect but box office picture in our town. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. A fair picture which did not please but about sixty per cent. Some will probably like it and others will not care for it at all. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. A sterling drama of tangled lives, of a husband who falls into the merciless net of another woman, of a wife who adopts the other woman's weapons in her winning fight for happiness. The picture is well worth seeing. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Pleasing production for usual patrons who attended. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Will please, especially if they care for pictures of this type. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LOVES OF PHARAOH. (7,352 feet). Star cast. A good picture, but following on the order of "The Sheik"; too many Egyptian and desert pictures having been shown, spoils this one as a box office money-getter. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. A pleasing little program picture along the lines of "The Dictator." Pleased practically everyone on a Saturday. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MY AMERICAN WIFE. (6,061 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Everybody liked this one. This one is one of the good ones of the "Super 39." Meighan is a steady drawing card for us. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Everybody satisfied. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

NOBODY'S MONEY. (5,584 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Fairly good entertainment for our audience. Would class it as a good program picture. Holt has fairly good drawing power for us. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star cast. Picture very good and pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A very fine production that received lots of praise here. Wish we had more as good. This one should have been the special, for in reality it is far better than any of the Paramount specials with possibly the exception of "Manslaughter." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. A rather above the average picture that seemed to give good satisfaction. Nothing big or startling but thoroughly satisfactory. Moral tone O. K., but is a little rough for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An excellent picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

SIXTY CENTS AN HOUR. (5,632 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Good, lively comedy that caused no kicks. Better than "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," but Hiers lacks a great deal of being a star. He is just a good comedian with a fat, pudgy face. Has O. K. moral tone and will do for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-24, 15-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SNOW BRIDE. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Our second Brady. Drew better than her first. It proved fair entertainment for our audience. We are having fairly good success with Paramount pictures. Had good attendance. Drew better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star cast. Zane Grey story. One of the best stories of its kind ever shown here. A bit slow in the last three reels. Scenery simply wonderful. Get behind it and boost it. Has good moral tone, but is not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charlestown, Illinois.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. This picture went over on Sunday in good shape, it is exceptionally well done; a mountain story which means a certain amount of action. Moreno and Ernest Torrence are to be depended upon any place they are cast. Minter has slipped, believe she cooked herself when she "slopped" over in the Taylor case and her row with her mother. Anyway the audience comments panned her personally, but not the picture. Draw all types, in town of 2,965. Admission 10-22. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

TRAVELING ON. (6,267 feet). Star, William S. Hart. A very good picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is a good picture, but just a little too long, but the picture pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Good. Business good. Patrons satisfied. A real picture. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,131 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Fair program picture that pleased the majority. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

WISE FOOL. (6,768 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A very good picture, which should please all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good program picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A picture that will hold the attention of the audience throughout. Poor title. Fair moral tone. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

Giving Credit Where It Is Due

"We have been reading the Straight From the Shoulder reports for some time and find they are very helpful.

"We never yet have had a poor print from Metro and have never had a better one from any other company.

"The cleaning and inspection service of Metro is great."—Benson & Landman, Town Hall, South Londonderry, Vermont.

Pathe

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. The last word in superb moving pictures. Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" unexcelled and unrivalled by any character ever appearing on the screen, or ever will appear on the screen. With both fear and mirth mixed at the same time and gripping the observer with rapture as well as dread, is entertained as never before, throughout the seven long reels of the best picture ever produced, and will equal any picture yet to come. It is one of the funniest and most entertaining pictures shown on the screen. The picture is a hair raiser and side splitting comedy well worth seeing, in which Harold Lloyd will be seen at his best, and any one failing to see this wonderful picture, will certainly miss an excellent treat, so by all means use it and your talk will do the rest. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Preferred

VIRGINIAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. A very good picture, a most capable cast and well directed. Possibly not quite as good as the exchanges think; be careful. Exploitation, talking up the Owen Wister novel, and with a mailing list you will play this to a box office advantage. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Selznick

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. Our patrons have "struck" on us with costume pictures. We are avoiding all costume or period dramas for a month, too many are being made. Eighty-five per cent. of the American picture patrons want American stories. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had very, very poor attendance. Draw family and railroad class in town of 7,750. Admission 10-25, specials 10-35, supers 10-50. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

QUICKSANDS. (6,541 feet). Star cast. A picture that will please everybody who is human. It keeps the audience thrilled from beginning to end. Draw all classes. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

United Artists

MOLLYCODDLE. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This one is old, but pleased better than "The Three Musketeers." We received an excellent print on this one, in fact, the best we have received from United Artists. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Just what the title implies. This picture sure gets them going. They scream their heads off. Advertising slants, ghosts, storm scene stuff. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Very good picture that satisfied; what more can you ask for? Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

Universal

DRIVEN. (5,400 feet). Star cast. A dramatic offering well acted. The story is not particularly appealing, but it is well done. Print was in fine shape. Had fair attendance. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This is a fair program picture, but by no means a special. Patrons considered it satisfactory entertainment. Fair attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MEN IN THE RAW. (4,313 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A real western feature and something different. Moral tone fair, but not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,178 feet). Star cast. Boost this and boost hard. A splendid picture, but must be worked on. Don't pay too much for it as it won't get the money unless you have every known way to exploit it. Moral tone alright and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theatre (600 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,178 feet). Star cast. Fine picture. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

NOBODY'S BRIDE. (4,861 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A very good picture. Pleased ninety per cent. Rawlinson is a good star for us, also Miss Lake. You can buy it right. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers and from town of 150. Admission 10-20, specials 10-25. Jack Synder, Casino Theatre (285 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Tie up this one; not much of a story, but it is a great Gibson success. You will laugh from start to finish. Good as some of the big specials. Good moral tone. Attendance good. Draw all classes, town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall (300 seats), Carmel, Maine.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (7,785 feet). Star, Rockliffe Fellows. Pleased them all. Good comedy mixed in this picture. You can't go wrong with this one. Used photos, paper, program. Had good attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

THRILL CHASER. Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair picture; nothing to brag about. If Universal wants to make anything out of Gibson they will have to put him in the things that he belongs in. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Suitable for Sunday

Watch it, boys. The exhibitor who runs on Sunday depends on you to tell him whether a picture is suitable for Sunday.

Weigh this carefully. It would be a shame to let a brother book in a film for the Sabbath that would hurt his house prestige—but it would be just as big a shame as well as unfair to a picture, to vote "no" hastily.

Vitagraph

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Another one that made me money. Good. Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star, Earl Williams. A very good picture and a good buy. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONE STOLEN NIGHT. (4,900 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A fair program picture; should please mostly all of Miss Calhoun's followers. Print in good shape. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH. (7,156 feet). Star cast. Wish to let brother exhibitors know to keep off this one. Vitagraph has no right to put out stuff of this kind and charge high rentals for it. The actors' acting and story, just fierce. No intelligent audience could be likely to sit through it. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre, Pass Christian, Mississippi.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star cast. Not fit to be shown in any first class theatre. Showed one performance and pulled it off. A disgrace to the industry. Moral tone poor. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Great for us, fine business and satisfied patrons for three days with vaudeville. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A picture that holds heart interest, teaching a good moral. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MAIN STREET. (8 reels). Star cast. Picture gave complete satisfaction, both to the public and at the ticket office. One of the best money-getters we have run this fall. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

MAIN STREET. (8,000 feet). Star cast. I think it the duty of every exhibitor, especially small town men, to show their patrons this one as it is so true to life. It's a shame to miss it. Pleased one hundred per cent. and made friends for my houses. Drew extra well. Clean, but a better middle week picture than for Sunday. Just think, boys, comedy, drama, tragedy and everything. The heart's desires all in one. Play it by all means. Draw mixed classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harvey, Strand and Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville and Dixon, California.

MAIN STREET. (8 reels). Star cast. A picture that will be sure to please any audience. Moral tone good and is suitable for Sunday. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Comedies

BIRTHDAY CAKE AND JUNGLE PETS. (Chester Comedy). This picture is one continuous scream in the second reel. A real knockout; if you have a chance to get it don't fail to do so. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BROKE. (Educational). Nothing to it but a good print and good photography. Would make a fairly good comedy for a "blind" man. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. B. K. Russell, Legion Theater, Cushing, Iowa.

CHAMPION. (Pathe). Another screamy picture of "His Rascals." They are all good for the grown-ups, as well as the youngsters. If you have never run any of these comedies buy one and be convinced. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CRASH. (Educational). This single reel was undoubtedly good when the print was all there, but the print I received was badly cut. What there was of it called out some hearty laughs. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

DETECTIVE. (Vitagraph). This is better than most of his comedies. This one is something on the order of Larry Semon comedies. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

EASTER BONNETS. (Educational). Here's a clever comedy of the refined type. There's nothing objectionable in it as one finds in so many comedies and everybody seems to thoroughly enjoy it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. J. E. Madsen, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

FRIEND HUSBAND. (Paramount). This comedy had never before played here and the print was brand new and had more than the usual amount of laughs of the comedies today. The price was the most reasonable film rental I have ever paid. You couldn't really ask for anything more, could you?

Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

GET OUT AND GET UNDER. (Pathe). Harold reveals a "full house" again. You could charge fifty cents and if Lloyd was "Hitting" alright you'd be safe to meet your patrons afterwards. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

MY MISTAKE. (Crescent). Only fair comedy. Have seen better, but at that, it's very good. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). Very pleasing type of comedy. Attracts all the children. Draw average small town class. Use one sheets. Good attendance. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

ROARING LIONS ON A STEAMSHIP. (Fox). This Sunshine Comedy has the previous "Lion" comedies beat by a mile. Played with "Penrod" and had our audience in a splendid mood for the long eight reeler that followed. Has good moral tone; it depends on the locality whether it is suitable for Sunday. Attendance S. R. O. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SMALL TOWN IDOL. (First National). Good comedy with Turpin at his best. Pleased a good sized audience. Made the high-brows laugh and drew all classes. Had excellent attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

SPEEDER. (Educational). Very good comedy. Lots of laughs, many of them supplied by Hamilton's facial expressions and his manner of walking. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

STAGE HAND. (Vitagraph). One of Larry Semon's good comedies that pleased a good patronage. The monkey is some actor and he sure knows his "stuff." Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

Every report you send keeps some exhibitors from booking a poor picture or helps them to grab the good ones.
USE THE BLANK BELOW

WEAK END PARTY. (Pathe-Stan Laurel). Good. Lots of laughs. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Serials

HAUNTED VALLEY. (Pathe). Started off the best of any serial I ever ran and wound up with the smallest attendance. Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

OREGON TRAIL. (Universal). This serial is holding up wonderful. Seems to please all. Good attendance whenever I run it. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

RUTH OF THE RANGE. (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. This is a very good serial, but not as good as "Haunted Valley," her former serial. For a western serial you won't go wrong by booking it. But don't depend on it too much. Moral tone ordinary. Not suitable for Sunday. Had ordinary attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,200. Admission 20-30. C. P. Alford, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Spring Hope, North Carolina.

Short Subjects

DEVIL'S FOOT. (Educational). This is first of Sherlock Holmes series. Patrons liked it well. Think they will help my Saturday business. Had good attendance. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. This is the best news reel by test for us. Our patrons like this news reel and we have been using it for two years. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE DISASTER. (Paramount). Just a repetition of news reel scenes. Wouldn't play it if you run a news reel. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SECOND SERIES LEATHER PUSHERS. (Universal). Just as good as first series and drawing power better. Used extra advertising. Had good attendance. Draw transient patronage. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS. (Pathe). Have used the Federated, Universal and now the Pathe series of Snapshots. Never yet played a bad one. In my opinion best single reel on market. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

State Rights

ACROSS THE BORDER. (Aywon). Star, Big Boy Williams. (5 reels). Satisfactory, if they like westerns. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

BIG STAKES. (East Coast Productions). Star, J. B. Warner. (4,700 feet). Good picture which took very well with our audience. Supporting cast was good. Mexican jumping bean scene well done and novel. Advertising slants, Mexican border and Mexican bean angle. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

HOMEWARD TIDE. (Sanford Productions). Star, Pete Morrison. A fair program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TEMPORARY MARRIAGE. (Principal). (7,050 feet). Star, Mildred Davis (Mrs. Harold Lloyd). Consider this a splendid picture. Critics all praised picture, saying, however, that Maude George and Tully Marshall steal the picture, especially in the court room scene, which is the best one since "Madame X." Had an interested few guests, lawyers, judges, sheriff; all declared the picture excellent, one which all mothers and daughters should see. (Note: Mr. Charninsky sent a mighty strong review and some press interviews with the men he mentions, but we can't get room to print these. —Ed.) S. Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

VALLEY OF LOST SOULS. (5 reels). Star cast. Mediocre picture with unknown players. Films in good condition, however, but picture failed to satisfy. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Novel Number for Brooklyn House

The Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre is creating much new musical interest through the novel methods employed by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman in staging the instrumental and vocal end of his programs.

No small amount of this aroused interest is due to the feminine chorus of eighteen, and the "orchestra within an orchestra" which has materialized as a result of the popularity of symphonized jazz numbers. The Mark Strand Little Symphonized Jazz Orchestra is made up of ten pieces, all playing in the regular orchestra in addition to being featured upon the presentation stage and in radio concerts.

Laurette Taylor Film Progressing

Robert W. Sherwood, motion picture critic of the New York Herald, in his recently published book, "The Best Moving Pictures of 1923-1924," is said to assign the Metro picture version of "Peg o' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor in her original role among the ten best pictures of that season.

Miss Taylor left New York for Hollywood recently to appear in the Metro picturization of two of her other great stage successes, "Happiness" and "One Night in Rome." Of these "Happiness" is already well into production under the direction of King Vidor.

Hunting in New York for Material

Within the next fortnight Ralph Block, former New York dramatic critic and more recently supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky, will leave for New York to negotiate with theatrical producers for the screen rights to a number of current stage successes, which he plans to picturize and direct for next season.

Block has spent more than a year with Famous, during which period he adapted twenty popular stories, books and plays.

A Boost

Mae Tinee, motion picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, has named two of the Warner Classics on her list of the twelve best pictures shown during the month of October. The photoplays are: "Where the North Begins," starring Rin-tin-tin, the famous police dog hero, and the screen adaptation of the successful David Belasco play, "The Gold Diggers," featuring Hope Hampton.

Hard-Boiled Cincinnati Succumbs to 'Hunchback'

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened its Cincinnati engagement at the Cox Theatre November 18. Long before the performance began long lines stood in front of the box office. It was necessary to hang out the "sold out" sign, standing room not being permitted in Cincinnati. Cincinnati audiences are known the country over as being hard-boiled.

The Enquirer said: "Fifty-seven adjectives were used by the New York critics in describing this production. After seeing it one is inclined to wonder how they could have restricted themselves to that number. However, one adjective might suffice if necessary and that is 'stupendous.'" The Post remarked: "As we left the theatre the manager asked how we liked this show, and all we could do was to strive in vain to find words to describe just how fine we found this spectacle to be."

The Commercial Tribune said: "In the past two years the screen has not offered as fine an example of its art as we find in 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' During that time it has been our privilege to see all the so-called super specials and while several of them, 'The Covered Wagon,' 'Orphans of the Storm' and Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood' compare favorably with this latest Universal offering they do not touch the same high note of artistry. To us it stands as one of the greatest achievements of the screen." The Times-Star summed up with these words: "A big hit."

Detroit Exhibitor and Critics Laud Ray Film

The following telegram, received by J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, from John H. Kunsky, Detroit exhibitor, on the day following the opening of the Detroit run of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," states: "'The Courtship of Myles Standish' opened to the largest Sunday business ever done at the Madison Theatre during the seven years it has been in operation. Public and press delighted. I look for a wonderful week. You are to be congratulated."

The Detroit News said: "The movie replica of the vessel that carried the earliest pioneers of religious liberty from England to the bleak and wintry coast of Massachusetts rightfully earns most of the attention because it is without doubt one of the screen's greatest achievements in 'set' construction."

The Detroit Free Press commented: "Charles Ray's latest screen play, 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' is the most lavish and costly he has ever made, and shows the star in an entirely new role."

The Times observed: "This historical drama is the only picture Mr. Ray ever made which really takes him entirely out of the rustic character he has made famous."

High Class Patronage Won by Pathe Picture

Letters addressed to the Yale University Press offices in New York show that the "Chronicles of America" series, now being distributed by Pathe, is doing remarkably effective missionary work for the screen in general. These letters, coming from persons outside the industry and bearing, in many instances, signatures of persons prominent in professional walks of life, indicate that this Pathe series of historical dramas is drawing to motion picture theatres in all sections of the country people who have never or seldom patronized the screen as a medium of entertainment.

Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in referring this week to this great body of letters being received from admirers of the "Chronicles of America" series, points out particularly that this new class of patrons being won for the screen are evidently people of discriminating tastes and of the type that it would be well for motion picture exhibitors to make permanent members of their audiences.

Griffith Film Gets Recruits for Army

Still in the process of filming, D. W. Griffith's forthcoming screen spectacle, "America," which he is making at the request of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is already winning recruits for the U. S. Army.

"America," is said to be the first dramatic photoplay ever used for army recruiting purposes, and according to the figuring of army officials will have aided in increasing the personnel of U. S. fighting forces long before it is placed on public exhibition.

Photographs taken by army cameramen during the filming of scenes are being used in an intensive campaign now being conducted by the army recruiting service.

Cordial Co-operation

Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers of "Sea-Tracks of the Speejacks 'Round the World," by Dale Collins, one of the co-voyagers of Commodore A. Y. Gowen on his round-the-world motor boat cruise, has written all its dealers advising them to co-operate with all exhibitors showing the Paramount picture, "Around the World in the Speejacks," in joint exploitation of the book and film.

Critics Flatter

Goldwyn's Tod Browning production of "The Day of Faith," from Arthur Somers Roche's novel of that name, was shown at the Capitol Theatre this week and proved very popular with the big audiences which saw it on Sunday. The film reviewers on the New York newspapers had many flattering things to say of the production, of Eleanor Boardman, the leading player, and other members of the cast.

Warners' Xmas Gift

"The Country Kid" is being used extensively all over the country as a Christmas week attraction, say the Warner Brothers.

This picture opens at the Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston, Mass., for the entire week of December 23, and for the same week at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I. The Star Theatre at Manchester has "The Country Kid" also for the week beginning December 24.

Let Not Man Put Asunder

"The Ten Commandments" Has Brilliant Premiere in Hollywood

Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Ten Commandments," had its world premiere at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood Tuesday night. For the producer, for Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the story of the picture, and for Sid Grauman, who had the honor of first presenting the production to the public, the occasion was an unprecedented triumph.

The audience, which packed the theatre to its doors and which included one of the most brilliant and representative gatherings of motion picture and society notables Los Angeles had ever known, had paid $5.50 per seat for the privilege of being present. It left the theatre praising the production to the skies. The applause mounted to deafening proportions at the Biblical and modern climaxes of the picture. The lighter touches of the first part of the modern story brought forth many laughs, but throughout the last reel the dropping of a pin could have been heard anywhere in the house.

Sid Grauman's presentation was tremendously effective throughout and especially the prologue, which included living pictures of "Moses on the Mount" and "The Last Supper." The musical score by Hugo Riesenfeld also proved startling in its effectiveness and appropriateness to the theme and moods of the picture. It is said that probably never before has a motion picture production been praised by newspaper critics in such superlative terms. Edwin Schallert in the Times said: "It is a picture that you cannot by any stretch of the imagination afford to miss. It offers new splendors in photography and theatrical wonders hitherto unrevealed. It is the greatest masterpiece thus far of pictorial artistry."

Florence Lawrence in the Examiner: "The screen has never borne a greater tale or told it with more conviction. It unquestionably is Cecil B. DeMille's magnus opus."

L. B. Fowler in the News: "It is to be hoped that every one of the one hundred and ten million people of these United States will have an opportunity to see this production. It conveys one of the greatest messages ever brought before the American people. Mere description of the action could not tell you its tremendous power and influence. The director and author have incorporated everything you can think of to make it interesting, fascinating and instructive."

Pearl Rall in the Express: "It is the voice of inspiration. Its very massiveness, the apparent difficulties confronting the director and the broadness of the canvas compel respect and utmost admiration." Guy Price in the Herald: "A mighty picture dramatically, photographically, scenically and morally. It is a triumph for the camera beyond all expectation and proves that real good can be disseminated through the theatre as well as the church."

Ted Taylor in the Record: "The public is going to be a mighty plaything under the spell of 'The Ten Commandments.'" Albert Dorris in the Hollywood News: "When a writer possesses words to properly describe the glory of the sunrise, the majesty of Niagara, the love of good women, then may be expected an adequate description of the message of 'The Ten Commandments.' It is far more than a mere motion picture."

H. C. Evans in the Hollywood Citizen: "The picture will live through centuries to come. Mere words can but give a hazy description of this film of films."

Mr. DeMille will leave Los Angeles in a few days for New York to be present at the metropolitan premiere at the George M. Cohan Theatre December 21.

Song Exploitation for "Big Brother"

The well-known music publishing firm of Watterson, Berlin & Snyder has just published a new ballad entitled "Big Brother," which will be used extensively in the exploitation of the Allan Dwan Paramount production of the same title, to be released this month.

The song was written by Fred Rath, Joseph Garren and Mel Shauer and was sold to Watterson, Berlin & Snyder strictly upon its merits. The entire professional department of the company, which has nineteen branch offices, will be utilized and wherever possible singers will be furnished to theatres for the exploitation of the song in connection with the showing of the picture. Phonograph and piano records of both vocal and instrumental versions will be prepared at the earliest possible moment.

"My Mamie Rose" Being Titled

Irving Cummings and a coterie of scenario and title writers and film editors are now busily engaged with the final editing and titling of "My Mamie Rose," Mary Philbin's new starring feature, recently completed at Universal City under Cummings' direction.

Four New Warner Films Progressing at Coast

Immediately upon his return to the Warner Brothers West Coast Studios, Jack L. Warner pitched into production work on four pictures. He had made a trip to New York and conferred on production plans for the approaching year.

"How to Educate a Wife" and "Broadway After Dark" were the first to go into work. Grand Carpenter has completed the continuity of the first, which is from the pen of Elinor Glyn. The direction is by William Seiter, and the cast is headed by Marie Prevost, Monte Blue, Alec B. Francis and Claude Gillingwater.

The second picture is "Broadway After Dark," from the story by Owen Davis. Monta Bell, who was recently associated with Charles Chaplin, is directing this Harry Rapf production, with a brilliant cast headed by Adolphe Menjou. The third production will be the Sinclair Lewis story, "Babbitt." The continuity has been put into shape by Julien Josephson, and the direction is in the hands of Harry Beaumont, assisted by Frank Strayer. The cast will be announced in the near future. "Lover's Lane," from the Clyde Fitch, is fourth on the program. Dorothy Farnum is at work on the adaptation. William Beaudine will direct it.

Dickens Film Endorsed by Philadelphia Women

"David Copperfield," a picturization of Charles Dickens' novel, released by Associated Exhibitors, was not only praised by the critics of the Philadelphia, Pa., newspapers when it opened at the Aldine Theatre, last week, but was also endorsed by the board of directors of the Civic Club, Philadelphia's leading women's club.

The reviewer on the North American said: "No stars appear to distract one's attention from the unfolding of this lovely tale. There is no jarring note and one sits as if in a dream. The picture is a work of art in every respect." The Public Ledger said: "The flavor and atmosphere and sentiment of Dickens have been captured by the clever director." The Inquirer: "The London scenes are particularly good and give a really convincing picture of the narrow cobbled streets of that period. The characters have been especially well taken."

The Record said: "'David Copperfield' has been brought to the screen in a fashion to please the most ardent Dickens admirers, and there were many Dickens enthusiasts among the audience who found the picture to be in the true spirit of the author." The Evening Bulletin: "David, played by Buddy Martin, is the image of what one has always dreamed he would be like. He has the same lovable charm and pathetic wistfulness always associated with 'David Copperfield.'"

The Evening Public Ledger: "'David Copperfield' has been brought to life by a refreshingly talented company."

Swain Star Featured in 12 New Rural Comedies

Announcement of the completion of distribution arrangements with Hollywood Pictures Corporation is made by General Manager Samuel Bischoff of the Grand Studio, whereby twelve two-reel rural comedies featuring the comedian, Dan Mason, will be released through Grand-Asher and produced at the Grand Studio under the direction of Jack Nelson and supervision of Paul Gerson.

Dan Mason is nationally known for his work in Fontaine Fox's cartoons of the Toonerville Trolley series; also in the role of Pop Tuttle in the Plum Center comedies. The new series in which he will be presented by Hollywood Features Corporation will show him in a series of adventures in his now famous makeup, accompanied by his partner, Wilna Hervey, known as "the biggest girl in pictures."

Jack Nelson will direct. Al Martin is to function as "gag" man and Paul Gerson, who supervised the Plum Center stories, will supervise the new series. Work starts in the near future.

"Anna Christie" Starts First Run Career

With special honors shown it by the National Board of Review, and bearing the personal endorsement of the author Eugene O'Neill,, and the trade writers, "Anna Christie" was introduced to the public during the past week on first run screens in big cities throughout the country. Before the end of this week the picture will have been presented in practically every key city.

The New York censor board recently added its voice to the chorus in praise of Ince's art of adapting virile drama to the screen in delicate fashion, by passing the production practically uncut. "Anna Christie" as it will be presented to New York audiences will be the same in development and treatment as Ince made it.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan New Season's Product Includes 18 Big Features

Eighteen big special features are announced for release within the next few months by the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan Distributing Corporation. Most of these productions are completed; on others the photography has recently been finished, and work is now under way on the rest. This is the biggest announcement which has emanated from Goldwyn Cosmopolitan since the amalgamation of the distribution of Goldwyn, Cosmopolitan and Distinctive pictures, made last year.

"Little Old New York," Cosmopolitan's latest Marion Davies production, heads the list. It is now being released to exhibitors of the country after its record-breaking run of three months at the Cosmopolitan Theatre in New York, followed by two additional weeks at the Capitol Theatre, where every record for attendance was smashed, and following long runs in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Detroit, Washington and other towns. In several of these cities it is still playing, as it is in London, where it has been packing the Empire for weeks.

"Little Old New York" was directed by Sidney Olcott and adapted from Rida Johnson Young's stage play by Luther Reed. In the cast supporting Miss Davies are Harrison Ford, Mahlon Hamilton, Louis Wolheim, J. M. Kerrigan, Courtenay Foote, Riley Hatch, Charles Kennedy and others.

On the schedule is Cosmopolitan's production starring Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen, "Unseeing Eyes," from Arthur Stringer's novel of the Canadian wilderness, "Snowblind." Bayard Veiller, noted playwright and scenarist, prepared the continuity, and E. H. Griffith directed. This is a forthright tale of adventure and romance amid the snows of the north woods, with thrills in abundance. A conspicuous bit of villainy is contributed through the skillful acting of Louis Wolheim.

Rupert Hughes' new picture, "Reno," which he wrote and directed, is one of the early releases. This is a dramatic story of the matrimonial entanglements which result from our varying divorce laws in different states. The cast is a brilliant one, including Helene Chadwick, Lew Cody, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Hedda Hopper, Dale Fuller, Kathleen Key, Marjorie Bonner, William Orlamond, Howard Truesdale and a dozen others.

Marshall Neilan's dramatic version of Madeleine Ruthven's Siberian story, "The Rendezvous," is one of "Mickey's" finest productions. The story is altogether foreign in its atmosphere, its action and in nearly all of its characters, yet it was made entirely in America. The cast is a notable one with Conrad Nagel and Lucille Ricksen in the leads. Sydney Chaplin, Emmett Corrigan, Elmo Lincoln, Richard Travers, Kathleen Key, Kate Lester, Cecil Holland, Lucien Littlefield, Eugenie Besserer and R. O. Pennell complete the cast.

"Second Youth" is a Distinctive Pictures production of an Allan Updegraff story in which Alfred Lunt, Herbert Corthell, Walter Catlett, Jobyna Howland, Lynn Fontanne, Mimi Palmeri, Margaret Dale, Faire Binney, Hugh Huntley, Lumsden Hare and Winifred Allen have the leading roles. John Lynch prepared the continuity and Albert Parker directed.

Victor Seastrom's first American production, "Name the Man!" a Goldwyn picture from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," is a December release. This is declared to be one of the most human and natural stories which have ever been filmed, and a production that marks a milestone in motion picture development. In the cast are: Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Creighton Hale, DeWitt Jennings, Hobart Bosworth, Evelyn Selbie, Winter Hall, Aileen Pringle, Anna Hernandez and Mark Fenton.

For early release is Cosmopolitan's mammoth picturization of Stanley Weyman's colorful story of adventure and action in ancient France, "Under the Red Robe," directed by Alan Crosland, with settings by Joseph Urban. Robert B. Mantell, noted actor of Shakespeare roles, appears as Cardinal Richelieu in this production. John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens have leading roles. Bayard Veiller made the adaptation.

Goldwyn's King Vidor production, "Wild Oranges," from Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, is one of the outstanding pictures in the list. There are but five characters in this production but they are involved in a story which for drama and human appeal is believed to be unexcelled. Vidor has made of it a picture in every way as great and as human as his "Three Wise Fools." In the cast are Frank Mayo, Virginia Valli, Ford Sterling, Nigel de Brullier and Charles A. Post.

Another Cosmopolitan production is "Out of the Dark," from Jack Boyle's story, "The Daughter of Mother McGinn." Frances Marion made the scenario and she aided George Hill in directing it. In the cast are Collen Moore, Forrest Stanley, Margaret Seddon and George Cooper.

Distinctive's new George Arliss production, "The Adopted Father," adapted from a story of Edgar Franklin's by Forrest Halsey and directed by Harmon Weight, is a comedy in which the star has a role different from anything else he has done for the screen. Supporting Mr. Arliss are such players as Edith Roberts, Taylor Holmes, Ronald Colman, Ivan Simpson, Redfield Clarke and Joseph Donahue. "The Adopted Father" is a comedy with an unusual twist. It affords Mr. Arliss one of those roles that he interprets with consummate ease and artistry. It is a story with a big popular appeal.

The production of "Greed," adapted and directed by Erich von Stroheim from Frank Norris' novel of San Francisco, it is announced, will hand the industry a surprise. This picture is declared by those who have seen it to be most realistic. Norris' story has not been departed from at all; its stark realism, its tense drama, its crude and acrid comedy have been kept in the film by Director von Stroheim. In the cast are: Gibson Gowland, ZaSu Pitts, Cesare Gravina, Jean Hersholt, Chester Conklin, Sylvia Ashton, Dale Fuller, Frank Hayes, Fanny Midgley and a score more.

Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," directed by Alan Crosland, with a cast embracing Aileen Pringle, Conrad Nagel, Stuart Holmes, H. Reeves-Smith, Mitchell Lewis, John Sainpolis, Dale Fuller, Joan Standing and others, will be screened early in the new year. The novel has been widely read.

Goldwyn's second Emmet Flynn production, "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," adapted by Carey Wilson from Owen Davis' old melodrama, is one of the classics of a type of stage melodrama which flourished in the late nineties and early in the present century. The cast is headed by Claire Windsor, as the cloak model, Mae Busch, Edmund Lowe, Lew Cody, Raymond Griffith, Hobart Bosworth, Will Walling, Dorothy Cumming and Arthur Hausman.

Then there will be Cosmopolitan's James Oliver Curwood story of the Canadian wilds, "The Flaming Forest." It contains all of the action which could possibly be put into one picture. John Lynch prepared the scenario.

There is another big Distinctive product, a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's great novel of Egypt, "The Weavers," directed by Harmon Weight, with Alfred Lunt and Mimi Palmeri in the leads. John Lynch made the adaptation. "The Weavers" was one of the most popular of Sir Gilbert's novels and it has been made into a photodrama of splendor and magnificent climaxes.

Another Marion Davies picture produced by Cosompolitan is "Yolanda," from the novel by Charles Major, author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Luther Reed made the adaptation, Robert Vignola directed and Joseph Urban is responsible for the settings. Lyn Harding, famous English actor, appears as Duke Charles the Bold of Burgund, playing opposite Miss Davies.

Two other Cosmopolitan productions will follow—an American historical romance, "Janice Meredith," from the popular novel by Paul Leicester Ford, which will furnish Marion Davies one of her best vehicles, and "The Great White Way" from H. C. Witwer's story, "Cain and Mabel," directed by E. Mason Hopper, in which Anita Stewart has one of her best roles. In the supporting cast are T. Roy Barnes and Oscar Shaw.

Going to True Locale

B. P. Schulberg announced this week that Gasnier will leave for Monte Carlo in the near future to take exteriors for "Poisoned Paradise," Robert W. Service's story which is now in production as a Preferred Picture.

The original plan was to reconstruct on the Schulberg lot the principal buildings of the famous resort but it has now been decided to take these street scenes in the true locale described by Service. The party to make the trip will consist of Director Gasnier, Karl Struss, cameraman; Clara Bow and Kenneth Harlan.

Mailman Popularity Contest

Twenty-five thousand votes were cast in the "Loyal Lives" popularity contest for mail carriers at Warren, Ohio. This contest was arranged by the Tribune of that city and the Duchess Theatre, which played the Whitmar Bennett special based on the life of postoffice employes.

The twenty-three carriers of the city were entered in the contest and the prize, a gold watch, was won by Noah Simpson, who had a total vote of 7,061.

Special Herald for "The Old Fool"

An unusual variety of scenic action is contained in the herald for "The Old Fool," the latest Hodkinson picture, to be released December 31. Besides the business-pulling stills, there are some interest arousing pen and ink sketches.

New Corporation

The DeLuxe Film Corporation, Detroit, is now in operation. Lloyd Hammond, well known in this territory, is at the head of the new undertaking. All of his first purchases were from Lee-Bradford and include: "Determination," "Is Money Everything?" "The Image Maker," "The Inside of the House of David," and a series of single reels entitled, "Tense Moments from Operas."

First National Booming Films in Its Biggest Sales Contest

Sales meetings in every exchange throughout the United States and Canada on the morning of December 15th gave the final impetus to the First National Month drive in January and launched the biggest contest, with corresponding prize awards, ever to be held by First National. E. A. Eschmann took his sales organization completely by surprise by unexpectedly calling forty meetings in as many exchanges and explaining the details of a sales competition which will result in the most powerful concentrated effort in the history of the big distributing organization.

As spontaneous as the meetings was the enthusiasm of the sales force. Mr. Eschmann's surprise crowned the determination already generated by the productions. The five pictures to be issued during First National Month represent the attainment of the First National ideal of consistent, big-time entertainment, and their quality coupled with the stimulant created by the contest, makes it highly probable that the exchange winning the first prize will set up a new record in played and paid business in its territory.

"Never was there such a demand for high-class box office pictures," stated Mr. Eschmann, "than at the present moment; and never had any company such an opportunity to give five such pictures wider distribution. This is First National's intention and aim and the bookings already written on our productions point surely to its accomplishment. They are pictures which of themselves create enthusiasm and the prizes which have been offered will not be so much in the nature of an incentive as they will be reward for sales efficiency.

"First National quality productions in the field of drama, comedy drama, human interest pictures and costume drama will provide the exhibitor with a wide variety of screen entertainment, all designed for and meriting presentation in the biggest and finest theatres of the country. To mention only our First National Month offerings there is "Black Oxen," a powerful society drama adapted from Gertrude Atherton's best seller. It is a Frank Lloyd Production and features Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle. "The Song of Love," starring Norma Talmadge, is a costume drama, although the story is laid in the present day. The action takes place in Algeria. "The Eternal City," the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, is drama moving against one of the most fascinating backgrounds ever brought to the screen. "Painted People," with Colleen Moore, is delightful comedy-drama and "Boy of Mine," J. K. McDonald's picturization of Booth Tarkington's story, is heart interest drama, even above the producer's last effort, "Penrod and Sam."

Premiere Dec. 8

By special arrangement with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Loew's Warfield Theatre in San Francisco presented Frank Lloyd's production of "Black Oxen," a First National picture, with Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle, in its world's premiere on December 8.

The staging of the world's premiere at San Francisco was a tribute to Gertrude Atherton, celebrated author of the story of rejuvenation which was among the best selling novels of 1923. Mrs. Atherton attended the opening with a party of friends.

Grand-Asher Talks Distribution Plans

General Manager Bischoff of Grand-Asher is on his way to New York to attend a conference of the executives called to perfect details of the new distribution plan which has been worked out in conjunction with the system that has been developed by Mr. Bischoff for handling independent productions for the screen.

He will be away approximately twelve days and on his return to the Grand studio will have further announcements to make concerning new productions. Meanwhile, all arrangements to start the R. William Neill production, "Rose of the Ghetto," and the series of Dan Mason comedies, around Christmas, will be made. Both of these units recently signed contracts to produce for Grand-Asher release.

"We are not satisfied," said Bischoff, "with anything less than 100 per cent. distribution for our producers and that is what we are now arranging for. Our facilities to place the Grand-Asher producing companies in line to take full advantage of the present great opportunity for independents, are unrivalled."

"The Acquittal" Makes Record at the Cameo

"The Acquittal," Universal's Jewel production of Rita Weiman's celebrated stage play, made with Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry in the leading roles, had its New York premiere this week in the Cameo Theatre, Forty-second street and Broadway. In the face of heavy opposition in the other Broadway houses, it went over big and made a record for itself in the Cameo.

The success of the New York opening bears out the unusual acclaim with which the production has been received in several other film centers where it has been shown pre-release.

"The Acquittal" is a mystery melodrama laid in society settings. Great praise has been accorded to Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry for their excellent portrayals in the picture.

Others in the strong cast which helped to make "The Acquittal" notable for its good acting, are Richard Travers, Barbara Bedford, Charles Wellesley, Frederick Vroom, Emmett King, Ben Deely, Dot Farley, Harry Mestayer and Hayden Stevenson. It was directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Hoffman Leaves for Coast

M. H. Hoffman vice-president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, left this week for an extended trip to the West Coast. While there he will go actively into the Truart production schedule for the year. It is anticipated that by the end of this month, under Mr. Hoffman's supervision, all of the five units of Truart will be under way on new productions.

Richard Talmadge has almost completed his second production, the first, "Let's Go!", having been released. Elaine Hammerstein is preparing to start number three of her series which will be an adaptation of another well-known novel. Roland West is preparing the script for an adaptation of "The Monster," the stage-play of the same name by Wilbur Crane. Larry Semon is ready to film "The Girl in the Limousine," from the A. H. Woods stage success by Wilson Collison and Avery Hopwood.

Joins Morgan

Oscar J. Lynch is again representing the Morgan Lithograph Company, with offices at 501 Fifth avenue, and will be glad to receive communications from his motion picture friends.

Barbara La Marr to Be a Star

Confirmation was made this week of the report that Barbara La Marr is to be a First National star. A contract was signed this week, stated R. A. Rowland, general manager of First National, whereby Miss La Marr will be presented in a series of pictures by Sawyer-Lubin, to be produced by Associated Pictures Corporation under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer.

Barbara La Marr has earned her right to stardom after a meteoric career during which she has risen to be one of the foremost leading women now on the screen. She has appeared recently in "The Eternal City," "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Strangers of the Night" and "Trifling Women." At present she is appearing in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

It has been definitely decided, according to Associated Pictures Corporation, that Clarence Badger will direct Miss La Marr in her first production for First National release. The La Marr pictures will be produced at the new West Coast studios of S.-L. productions and early in 1924 Miss La Marr will make her debut as a First National star in her first picture.

"Barefoot Boy" for Release December 17

This week marks the simultaneous release in all territories of "The Barefoot Boy," the all star feature based upon Whittier's poem, which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing for Mission Film Corporation.

December 17, the poet's birthday, has been set aside by all franchise holders, as the day on which this production will be released to exhibitors, and plans have been in readiness for months by C. B. C. whereby special arrangements have been completed to accompany the release and make this year's celebration of John Greenleaf Whittier's birthday most notable.

This is the first time a picture released on the state right basis has been held back in all territories for simultaneous release, it is said, and this, together with the reports that have come through on the production from pre-release showings, have aroused much interest among exhibitors.

All manner of special exhibits to tie up the poet's birthday and the motion picture have been perfected.

Smith Special Has Exploitation Aids

"The Man From Brodney's," the David Smith special which will be shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, on December 16, was enthusiastically received by critics of fan and trade papers at a pre-release showing by Vitagraph.

Vitagraph has provided artistic paper and a helpful campaign book for this picture. A full page advertisement is shown in full size and the advertising illustration is arranged as a "break-away" so that mats of individual scenes of which the whole is comprised may be used singly in smaller advertisements.

The cast is headed by J. Warren Kerrigan. Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley, Miss DuPont, Pat O'Malley and Kathleen Key are also among the all-star players.

"Flaming Youth" a Big Success

Loew's Warfield Theatre, in San Francisco, staged the western premiere of "Flaming Youth," a First National picture featuring Colleen Moore and directed by John Francis Dillon. The production opened on December 1, duplicating its success in Chicago and New York, where it was held over for a second week at the Strand Theatre.

Warner Officials Confer

This week Warner Brothers home office took on the aspect of a convention, exchange heads from different sections of the country having come to discuss methods of co-operation between exchanges and exhibitors, as well as to examine prints of pictures recently completed and soon to be released.

Among the exchange men to visit the home offices are Arthur Cohan, and Phil Kaufman, of Regal Films, Canada; W. D. Shapiro, of Franklin Film Co., Boston, Mass.; W. G. Underwood, of Specialty Film Co., Dallas, Texas; Oscar Oldknow, of Southern States Film Co., Atlanta, Ga.; L. Berman, of Independent Film Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Chicago Fire Will Be Reproduced on Screen

Recent announcement of Arthur Beck's decision to produce a pictured version of the great Chicago fire of 1871 as the first of his 1924 Specials for Associated Exhibitors created a considerable sensation, which is likely to be heightened now that more has become known of the gigantic proportions which the production will assume.

J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, returning from the West a few days ago, brought information respecting the preliminary work incident to the completion of the scenario. In Chicago he was in conference with Arthur F. Beck, who, for several weeks past, has been supervising the necessary research work in that city.

Mr. Beck is determined to picture this conflagration with scrupulous fidelity to fact and make of the production an important historical document. The picture promises also to be one of the most thrilling spectacles ever seen on the screen, it is stated.

Picture Sells "Old" Song

"Three O'Clock in the Morning," featuring Constance Binney, is meeting with a full measure of success wherever it is being shown. At a recent first run showing in Lynn, Mass., the manager of the theatre arranged for a special window display of the song with the local music dealer, and in spite of the fact that the song broke all sale records months ago, so great was the demand for the song during the week the picture was being shown, that a rush order had to be sent to the publishers of the song to keep pace with the demand.

Schulberg Wants Some Good Juvenile Actors

"In spite of the belief that Hollywood is overcrowded with screen players; that there are not enough parts for the hundreds seeking work, there is an alarming dearth of good juvenile actors," says B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures.

Mr. Schulberg is feeling around for the proper talent to play in Frank Craven's comedy drama, "The First Year," which is the most valuable property on his list of stories to be produced this season.

"There are plenty of actresses who meet the requirements but I cannot find the actor who quite fits the part. It is astounding that there are so few juveniles in pictures today. There are practically none that have attained any degree of popularity. I can remember a few years ago when there would have been a score of young actors suitable for 'The First Year' but without exception they have now graduated from the juvenile type into straight leads and no new faces have come to take the places they have left."

Roamax Film Co. Finishes Film

Miss Dorothy Chappell, president of the Roamax Film Co., Inc., has just completed, at the Tilford Studios, the first of a series of four pictures which are to be released by the Lee-Bradford Corporation.

This picture is entitled "Who's Cheating?" and the cast is comprised of Miss Chappell, Zena Keefe, Montagu Love, Ralph Kellard, William Tooker, Mary Brice, Marcia Harris, and other prominent screen folks.

The picture was directed by Joseph Levering and will be offered for distribution on the State Rights market right after the first of the year.

For Dec. 10 Release

"Twenty-One," Richard Barthelmess' next production under the direction of John S. Robertson, has released by Associated First National Pictures December 10.

Common Sense

L. Ernest Ouimet, president of Laval Productions, Ltd., is now in New York with a print of his first production which has as a working title "The Vital Question."

"I didn't want to make a picture that looked cheap," says Mr. Ouimet, "but I did want to make one where it would be possible for everyone—producer, distributor and exhibitor—to make a reasonable profit. I am proud to say that my first feature represents a cost that everyone said was impossible before I started production. As for the quality of the picture—well, I'll let it speak for itself."

"Going Up" Given Big Newspaper Publicity

"Going Up," Douglas MacLean's latest comedy released by Associated Exhibitors, came in for its full share of newspaper publicity when it played the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., during Thanksgiving Week. It occupied a prominent position on the front page of one of Long Beach's leading papers, The Press, every day for four weeks in advance of its opening, and when it opened it was impossible for all to get close to the lobby, for the crowd waiting to get in.

It has been the custom of Manager Browne to stage a Thanksgiving party in co-operation with The Press, for the poor children and orphans of Long Beach, each year, booking a special attraction to be shown to the kids on Thanksgiving morning. This year he had "Going Up" booked for Thanksgiving Week, and, feeling that this comedy would appeal to the youngsters as well as to the "grownups," he decided to use it for his special show.

Burr Reports Many First-Run Dates

C. C. Burr reports many first run bookings on his latest release, "Restless Wives." Several of the finest moving picture theatres in the country have booked this photoplay based on a story by Izola Forrester, which will appear in the Christmas issue of Ainslee's Magazine.

According to William N. Skirboll of the Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, Inc., distributors of the Mastodon Films, Inc. product for the states of Ohio and Kentucky, a large number of first run theatres in both those states have arranged for early play dates of "Restless Wives," in which Doris Kenyon is being featured.

Important Bookings for Warners' "Tiger Rose"

"Tiger Rose," the Warner Brothers' screen version of the famous David Belasco stage play of the same name, goes into the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, on December 23 for an indefinite run. The management of the Randolph is extremely well pleased with this production and believe that it will enjoy a run of several weeks.

A great reception was given "Tiger Rose" when it opened at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee on December 3.

"Tiger Rose" will open soon at the Stanley in Philadelphia and the Tom Moore in Washington, D. C. It will be shown in practically every leading theatre in America, and reports show it is already creating new box-office records.

Exploitation Is Aided by Photoplay Editions

Photoplay editions of the popular novels adapted for Paramount pictures have come to be one of the biggest features of the exploitation of the Paramount product. During the past year, including those at present in work, nearly twenty of these special publications have been made by the firms of Grosset & Dunlap and A. L. Burt & Co.

The works of Zane Grey, now being produced as Paramount pictures, have a big popular following and the sales of the photoplay editions reflect this popularity to a marked degree. A special photoplay edition of "The Heritage of the Desert" will be issued simultaneously with the release of the picture in January.

Rudyard Kipling's "The Light That Failed" has just been issued in photoplay edition. It will be pushed as a Christmas book. A special photoplay edition of Julian Street's novel, "Rita Coventry," is now being prepared and will be published under the photoplay title, "Don't Call It Love," at the same time that the William de Mille production is released.

In January Grosset & Dunlap will publish "The Covered Wagon." Present plans call for the issuing of a new edition each week for an indefinite period. Other illustrated photoplay editions planned by Grosset & Dunlap for the first of the year are Homer Croy's "West of the Water Tower" and "His Children's Children."

Among the new photoplay editions planned by A. L. Burt & Co. is Kate Jordan's "The Next Corner," which is being produced for Paramount by Sam Wood, with Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney, Dorothy Mackaill, Ricardo Cortez and Louise Dresser featured.

While the publication of these special editions is proving of immense value in the exploitation of the pictures, both these publishing houses give unreserved credit to the pictures for stimulating popular demand for their product.

Crowds at Capitol to See "Slave of Desire"

Goldwyn's Gilbert E. Gable production, "Slave of Desire," based upon Honore de Balzac's novel, "The Magic Skin," and directed by George D. Baker, proved itself a photoplay of unusual attractiveness to audiences in its showings at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week. The cast is headed by George Walsh, Bessie Love and Carmel Myers. Big audiences attended.

The reviewers on the New York daily papers found many good things to say about the production. The Evening Journal said: "Balzac's glittering romance is so strikingly adaptable to motion pictures that one wonders why it has been overlooked until now."

The Sun and Globe: "The picture had a famous and gripping story to build upon, and carries its eerie, bizarre quality over upon the screen." The Telegraph: "'Slave of Desire' a lavish display." New York American: "Balzac would open his eyes wide at the lavish production given his tale."

The Telegram: "Produced on a sumptuous scale worthy of the intrinsic merits of the story." The World: "A highly entertaining member of the cinema community."

Marion Davies Film Held for Third Week

"Little Old New York," Cosmopolitan's Marion Davies feature, has been held over for a third week at the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., due to the enthusiasm with which it was received by the press and the public. The showing of this film at Ascher's Merril Theatre in Milwaukee has likewise been continued for a third week. This is the first time in the history of that theatre that a photoplay has been held for a third week.

Goldwyn Cosmopolitan has booked the new Rupert Hughes picture at the State Theatre in Cleveland.

Cosmopolitan's "Unseeing Eyes" has been booked at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago and over the southern circuit of the West Coast Theatres.

District Supervisor L. B. Remy has booked the entire Goldwyn Cosmopolitan releases in the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

The Acamedy Theatre in Haverhill, Mass., has booked the first eleven productions of the season.

Fox Releases for the Week of December 16

"Hoodman Blind," a William Fox special production, adapted from the stage play of the same name by Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett; "Cupid's Fireman," featuring Charles Jones, and a Sunshine Comedy, "The Riding Master," are announced for release by Fox Film Corporation for the week of December 16. The Charles Jones vehicle was previously announced for release on December 2, but it now is included among this week's releases.

"Hoodman Blind" is a melodrama which is said to be ideally suited to presentation on the screen. The story presents the tragedy of a man with the wanderlust and an irresponsible character which permits him to desert one woman for another and then the second for a third. David Butler, who had the leading masculine role in "The Temple of Venus," has the chief part in this picture. Gladys Hulette plays a dual role. The supporting cast includes such well known players as: Regina Connelly, Frank Campeau, Marc McDermott, Trilby Clark, Jack Walters and Eddie Gribbon. John Ford directed the production.

"Cupid's Fireman," the latest Charles Jones feature, was adapted from the story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," written by Richard Harding Davis. William Wellman was the director. Marion Nixon has the leading feminine role.

"The Riding Master," the Sunshine Comedy release, presents the difficulties that surround a society riding instructor when he falls in love with one of his pupils.

Obtains Three Year Canadian Rights

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Ltd., (Canada), through Harry Kaufman of Premier Films has obtained three years' distribution rights in the Dominion of Canada for the following productions: "Bright Lights of Broadway," "Marriage Morals," "Passionate Friends," from the novel of the same name by H. G. Wells, "The Spider and the Rose," starring Gaston Glass and Alice Lake, "Don't Marry for Money," starring House Peters, "East Side, West Side," "Temporary Marriage," starring Mrs. Harold Lloyd, "The World's a Stage," an Eleanor Glyn story, and "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney.

New Yorkers Welcome Coogan Film Opening

Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," opened at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway, New York, last week. The story of Jackie's new picture is taken from Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel.

"At last Jackie Coogan, after several mediocre photoplays, has a story suited to him," wrote the critic of the New York Post. "Jackie is adorable," said the critic of the New York Journal. "He displays all his cleverness. He is sparkling and amusing." The New York Daily News said: "The spectacle of a little boy in princely robes falling asleep on a too-high throne is one to challenge fan imaginations. So Jackie Coogan fades out in 'Long Live the King,' Jackie being the sovereign ruler." The New York American stated: "All in all Jackie proves himself a rather remarkable fellow."

The New York World said: "Among the more masterfully conducted pieces of business in the history of the films is the good sense which has been back of the selection of the story for Jackie Coogan." "They have made a beautiful, stirring picture out of it—a picture that every one will love," wrote the New York Herald critic. "Jackie is to us the most appealing actor on the screen," wrote the New York Evening World reviewer.

The critic of the Mail wrote: "Jackie Coogan, resplendent in royal robes, gives the screen the finest and most enjoyable exhibition of his genius in 'Long Live the King.'" The New York Times critic wrote: "'Long Live the King' is one of the best pictures in which Jackie Coogan has appeared. It is one of the interesting and jolly productions that bring a tear or two between smiles and hearty laughter."

"Scaramouche" in St. Louis House

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" was selected to open the New Pershing Theatre in St. Louis several days ago. The theatre is one of the most beautiful in the city of St. Louis. Its opening alone was an interesting affair and attracted additional interest.

Invitations for the opening had been sent out to many prominent people in St. Louis and other parts of the state. Governor Hyde was sent one and referred to the fact that he had seen "Scaramouche" on the occasion of the recent Conference of Governors at West Baden, Indiana, when Metro presented "Scaramouche" before it and elicited praise.

Announces Purchase

Vitagraph announces that it has purchased world rights to "Borrowed Husbands," by Mildred K. Barbour, for the third J. Stuart Blackton production to be released by this firm.

Jackie's Greatest Film, Say Detroit Critics

Detroit has just seen Jackie Coogan in his first Metro picture, "Long Live the King." Detroit newspaper critics declare that in it Jackie has attained the greatest role of his career. It emphasizes to the nth degree those qualities which have made him the greatest screen favorite in the history of the industry.

"To see Jackie Coogan in 'Long Live the King' is to see this most talented child of the mimic world in the greatest role of his career," said Roy E. Marcotte in the Detroit Free Press. "The picture was produced on a lavish scale, there being settings and scenes which will rival the most spectacular pictures ever produced. The cast is large and in many of the scenes literally thousands of persons appear."

George W. Stark of the Detroit News said: "All the king's horses and all the king's men combined with all the pomp and circumstance that attended the courts of Europe in their most flourishing days cannot diminish the glory that is Jackie Coogan's. Which is another way of saying that young Mr. Coogan in his new picture, 'Long Live the King,' a radical departure in production from anything the boy has ever done, shines more brilliantly than ever."

Production Starts on Hoxie Film

The Jack Hoxie company has just left Universal City for Sonora, where exterior scenes for Hoxie's new feature, "The Drifter," will be filmed. The picture is a western melodrama based on the magazine story, "Hard Rock," by Jacques Jaccard. Robert North Bradbury is directing.

"The Humming Bird" to Be Paramount Film

Sidney Olcott, who is directing Gloria Swanson in her current Paramount picture, "The Humming Bird," at the Long Island studio, declares that the screen version of Maude Fulton's play is altogether the most interesting production he ever made and that he firmly believes it will be his best. Rushes of the pictures have been seen by Paramount home office executives and are said to bear out the producer's prediction.

The outstanding feature of "The Humming Bird" is said to be its intense realism of action and setting. It is a story of the apache underworld of Paris.

There is a touch of war in the picture, too, and in order that the war scenes might be absolutely authentic, prints of official English and French films were obtained from the war departments of those countries for incorporation in the production.

"Happiness" Shows Distinguished Cast

Metro has selected a group of distinguished players to support Laurette Taylor in her screen version of her great stage play, "Happiness," which is now in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of King Vidor. The complete cast to support Miss Taylor now consists of Pat O'Malley, Hedda Hopper, Edith York, Cyril Chadwick, Laurence Grant, Mario Carillo, Charlotta Minneau, Patterson Dial and Charles Mailes.

Pat O'Malley has already scored a great success this season by his playing in Reginald Barker's "The Eternal Struggle," which is part of this season's Metro schedule. Hedda Hopper is the beautiful wife of DeWolf Hopper, favorite of the American stage. The other members of the cast are all noted for their past work on the screen and have been selected for "Happiness" because of their exact suitability for the roles.

Miss Taylor is already on the coast with her husband, J. Hartley Manners, who wrote "Happiness," and has been immersed in active production for several weeks. Before production was taken up on the coast, Mr. Vidor came east with several members of his staff and photographed important exterior scenes in New York, using its great cosmopolitan atmosphere for background.

"The Love Bandit" Campaign Book

Vitagraph's campaign book for "The Love Bandit," Charles E. Blaney's production of his stage play, is quite novel and unique.

It is made up like the illustrated daily newspapers and presents catchy publicity ideas.

Hurley Free Lancing

Ed Hurley, general press representative for the Film Booking Offices, leaves that organization this week to go into business for himself. He will handle the production of several special features. Hurley is succeeded by Louis Kramer, exploitation man for F. B. O. in the Chicago territory.

Carewe Picks Paris to Complete Sahara Film

Edwin Carewe will film the interiors of First National's "A Son of the Sahara" in the Eclair studio in Paris. This plan, which was only tentative when the director left the States, became definite when Mr. Carewe with his chief cameraman, Robert Kurrle, and his laboratory expert, Lawrence Courcier, inspected the facilities of the Eclair studio and laboratory in Paris. They found the equipment unusually complete and decided to complete the picture there before returning to the United States.

This will mean that the Carewe company will be located in Paris for at least a month after its return from Biskra, Algeria, where the exteriors are now being taken. The company will probably take up its work there sometime during the first two weeks of the new year.

Mr. Carewe's cast includes Claire Windsor, Rosemary Theby, Bert Lytell, Montague Love and Paul Panzer. They sailed from New York early in November.

Singer Is "Find" in His Latest, Says Blackton

Pauline Frederick and Lou Tellegen have the leading roles and are supported by Leslie Austen, Helena D'Algy and an all star cast in "Let Not Man Put Asunder," under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton.

Mr. Blackton has evolved a score of new lighting effects. The sets are expressive of technical art and ingenuity. Mr. Blackton is supervising the cutting of the film and it will be ready for the Broadway showing in January.

"I have never directed a picture in which the players worked so easily and contributed so much to assist me," he said at Vitagraph studios. "I have in the cast a young woman whom I consider one of the finds of the year, Helena D'Algy. She is a Spanish girl who played in opera through South America. I saw her at the 'Follies' and after considering many candidates for the part I selected her."

Brilliant Davies' Film Premiere at Washington

The brilliancy of the New York opening of "Little Old New York" at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, according to reports, was surpassed by the opening of that Marion Davies picture at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C. Incidentally it broke all records of that house for attendance and for receipts. Its criticisms were just as laudatory as were those it received in New York, London, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and the many other towns where it has been shown.

Several Cabinet members and their wives and many members of Congress and persons otherwise eminent in Washington society were in attendance at the opening performance. The entire mezzanine floor was reserved for guests of the management and of Cosmopolitan Pictures Corporation.

Secretary of States Charles E. Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Denby, Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Work, Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. New, wife of the Postmaster General, were among those present.

Big Exploitation for Hodkinson Reel

An advertising campaign that will be of great benefit to every exhibitor booking "Fun from the Press," says Hodkinson, will be conducted by the Literary Digest during the next month.

Eleven million letters, one to every telephone subscriber, will be sent out, calling attention, in a conspicuous paragraph, to this humor reel.

"Grit," Hodkinson Film for January Release

"Grit," the fourth of the Film Guild productions, to be released by Hodkinson some time next month, is said to be a perfect combination of youth. In their own fields, both the author, F. Scott Fitzgerald, and the star, Glenn Hunter, signify "youth" to thousands of admirers.

This is Mr. Fitzgerald's first attempt at a movie story, and he wrote it especially for Glenn Hunter. It is a melodrama of the underworld and the East Side of New York, dealing with the struggle of "Kid Hart to find his better self and break away from the gang of crooks who have brought him up. In this he is aided by Orchid McGonigle, a little East Side hoyden.

"Anna Christie" Receives High Praise from Critical Reviewers

"Anna Christie," opening at the Strand Theatre to a critical New York public, which had seen Eugene O'Neill's drama on the spoken stage for more than a year and which was prepared to condemn any failing in the screen version, carried the verdict with flying colors.

The consensus of opinion on this Thomas H. Ince production, presented through First National, was that it was one of the few instances in the industry where a popular stage drama had been brought to the screen intact in theme, characterization and incident and that it gained, rather than lost, in ist transference to the screen. Public opinion backed the written statements of all newspaper reviewers.

The Strand did exceptional business throughout the entire week, tending to show that "Anna Christie" lives up to the claims advanced for it—that it draws a portion of the public to the box office which is usually considered beyond the reach of the motion picture's appeal.

More than one of the reviewers frankly stated that he had come to scoff, believing that the virile story would be devitalized in the process of filming. "It was to be expected," wrote Robert Sherwood in The Herald, "that 'Anna Christie' would emerge from the hopper of Hollywood, a 'good girl' —that the strength, the reality of O'Neill's play would be mangled beyond all recognition. But this is not what happened. 'Anna Christie' appears on the Strand screen almost exactly as O'Neill wrote it and as Arthur Hopkins staged it. As a result 'Anna Christie' is a singularly fine picture—a credit to Thomas Ince, a credit to the movies. * * *"

"Those who saw 'Anna Christie' on the stage need not be afraid to go and see the screen version," wrote Harriett Underhill in The Tribune.

"I approached 'Anna Christie,'" wrote Louella Parsons in her initial review as photoplay editor of the New York American, "with some trepidation and considerable uncertainty. 'Anna Christie' as a play had flourished successfully through an entire season and later carried off a prize. 'Anna Christie' as a picture, I feared, might not fare so well. * * * But I was wrong. 'Anna Christie' as a picture takes with it to the screen many of those qualities that made it such acceptable entertainment as a drama."

It is noteworthy that "Anna Christie" is drawing the attention of the more literary magazines of criticism, some of which express surprise that the movie has advanced to such a point where "Anna Christie" is possible. The praise has been showered not only on Mr. Ince, but on his director, John Griffith Wray, Bradley King, scenarist; Blanche Sweet in the title role; George Marion as Chris; William Russell as Matt, and Eugenie Besserer as Martha.

New Picture Star Arrived from Coast

Clara Horton, native California girl who has been doing important work in moving pictures on the Pacific Coast, has arrived in New York for her first visit to this city for a vacation and shopping tour, preparatory to going back to her native California to resume her picture work.

Miss Horton has been in a Rex Beach production, "A Girl from the Outside," leading lady with Charles Ray and several other productions. She has also been leading lady with Jack Pickford and many others.

Great Cast to Be Distinctive Film

Distinctive Pictures Corporation is marshalling a great cast for its forthcoming production, "Blood and Gold," which is now under way at its studios in New York under the direction of Al Parker.

As already announced, Alma Rubens and Conrad Nagel will take the leading parts in this film. Recent additions to the cast include George MacQuarrie, Mme. LaViolet, Fred Burton and Bela Lugosi. It will be distributed by Goldwyn Cosmopolitan.

Five Dollar Topper!

The Mission Theatre has contracted for the Los Angeles first run of B. P. Schulberg's "The Virginian," the latest Preferred release. The feature will open in the picture city on December 10th and the management of the Mission is planning to make it one of the most important premieres given this season in Los Angeles.

Elaborate preparations are being made, the price set for the opening night being five dollars top.

In New Position

Frederick E. Stanley, who has been a member of the West Coast publicity staff of First National since last January, has been transferred to the scenario department.

Another Excellent Cast Picked

Again has Goldwyn Pictures Corporation given Author-Director Rupert Hughes a cast of noted screen players for his new motion picture. It is called "True as Steel" and went into production on Monday last.

The cast, so far selected, includes Aileen Pringle, who has just completed the leading role in Goldwyn's screen version of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," Eleanor Boardman, who has recently acted the leading role in Goldwyn's Arthur Somers Roche picture, "The Day of Faith," Huntley Gordon, William Haines, Kathleen Key, who appeared in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous" and in Rupert Hughes' previous picture, "Reno," Jean Haskell, Lucien Littlefield and William Orlamond.

Different Cafe Scenes for "Racing Luck"

Two widely different cafe scenes were made by Herman Raymaker for "Racing Luck," Monty Banks' new Grand-Asher feature comedy, recently at the Grand Studio.

The first was a jollification in a little Italian dining place supposedly in "Little Italy," New York. The other setting was a fashionable cafe in the white light district of the Metropolis.

"Under Red Robe" Nearing Release

"Under the Red Robe," which on next Monday starts on the sixth week of its first run engagement at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York, is now being prepared for national release through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan. The picture will be presented in all the leading cities of the country and gives indications of duplicating in the key city first runs its phenomenal success in New York.

Meantime, at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, "Under the Red Robe" shows no diminishing of the interest that it has aroused since its premiere on Broadway. The continued and increasing demand for tickets in advance indicates strongly that the film will run far into the new year. Since its opening before the most distinguished audience that ever saw a premiere in New York, the photoplay has played to big audiences at every performance.

Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens are featured, supported by a brilliant cast of prominent players and 3,000 extras. A special feature of the Cosmopolitan engagement is the appearance twice daily of Victor Herbert and his orchestra.

Finishing Touches to "Souvenir"

Associated Exhibitors received word recently from Halperin Productions that the "shooting" of scenes for "Souvenir," the second Halperin feature for Associated distribution, has been completed, and the staff at Hollywood studios is now engaged in the work of cutting, editing and titling.

Agnes Ayres and Percy Marmont play the leads.

F. B. O's. "Lights Out" Still Breaking Records

Al Santell's novel comedy, "Lights Out," continues to smash records, according to reports to the Film Booking Offices. Exhibitors are calling this feature one of the freak films of the industry. Released unheralded, it looks as though it will be one of F. B. O.'s outstanding box-office winners, as is evidenced by the exhibitors prolonging the runs originally scheduled.

Nat. G. Rothstein, director of publicity and advertising for F. B. O., said: "We knew that 'Lights Out' was more than an ordinary feature the minute we saw it, but I will candidly admit, even we did not realize it was a knockout box office cleanup. But we do now. We woke up to this fact when we read the trade paper reviews and when exhibitors who had booked it for two days held it over for a week."

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Universal Offers Strong List of Short Subjects for the Holidays

To meet the heavy demand for short subjects during the holiday season, Universal announces it has an exceptional selection available, including several Westerns, a number of one-reel comedies and special releases besides Century comedies and two serials.

The westerns include three made by Nat Ross, a feature director. They are "Stolen Gold," "Western Skies" and "Rustlin' Buster," featuring Jack Mower. Other westerns are "The Perilous Leap," featuring Hoot Gibson, "The Last Outlaw," featuring King Fisher Jones, said to be a picture with exceptional dramatic force that will appeal to any type of audience.

The one-reelers include two with comedy team 'Neely Edwards and Bert Roach, and two by Hy Mayer, the celebrated cartoonist. The Mayer comedies are "A Movie Fantasy" and "A Son of Ananias." The Edwards-Roach offerings are "Under the White Robe" and "Chasing Wealth." There is also a special for the holidays, "The Rivals," featuring Slim Summerville.

The specials include "That Kid from Madrid, Michigan," first of the new "Leather Pushers," starring Billy Sullivan as successor to Reginald Denny. There is also the fourth issue of "The Gumps," "Aggravatin' Mama," featuring Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher.

Serials available include "The Ghost City," just released, featuring Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris, and including in the cast the stunt aviator, Al Wilson. It is a serial with a western atmosphere and plenty of punch and thrills. Also available is "Beasts of Paradise," featuring William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick, which is now in its mid-season.

Educational Lists First of New Bruce Films for January Release

Early in January Educational will release "Jean of Hecata Head" the first of the third series of Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales. The series will consist of eight single reel subjects, which, in the order of their release are "Jean of Hecata Head," "The Home-Maker," "Haunted Hills," "The Trader Keeps Moving," "Flowers of Hate," "Just Waiting," "The Ex-Bartender Retires" and "The Farewell."

The editing and titling of these pictures has been completed, and Mr. Bruce announces more drama has been incorporated in them than in the previous series, but that this has been done without sacrificing any of the beauty the Northwest country affords. Each story was chosen to fit the location and it is stated that many of the locations have never before been used in pictures.

"More entertainment value is added by the use of these unique locations," says Mr. Bruce, "which in many instances are a part of the dramatic atmosphere of the picture, as for instance in 'Haunted Hills' the sand spires at the junction of Sand Creek Canyon and Wheeler Canyon in southern Oregon are the only natural formations of their kind outside of the inaccessible region in the Ural mountains. Their wierdness gives a ghostly atmosphere to the background which enhances the dramatic value to a remarkable degree."

Practically the same cast was used in this series as in the 1923 pictures, including Irene Hall, Selmer Jackson, Gurnie Hays, Eddie O'Brien, William Dills, James Gordon, Anne Lockhart and Myrtel Forbes. Daniel Gobbett, with wide experience in all parts of the world, was the cameraman.

"I believe this series will provide the variety of entertainment so evidently needed in many motion picture programs of the day, says President E. W. Hammons of Educational. "These subjects will be idea for use with the feature comedy, or comedy drama of lighter vein. There is a shortage of short dramatic subjects and I believe the new Bruce Wilderness Tales will provide enough dramatic element to balance a program top heavy with a feature-comedy subject."

New Stan Laurel Two Reel Comedy Tops Pathe December 23 Program

Eight diversified subjects comprise the Pathe program for week of December 23. Prominent among these is a two-reel comedy, "Mother's Joy," starring Stan Laurel, and another "Dippy Doo Dad" entitled "Lovey Dovey."

In "Mother's Joy" Laurel plays the role of a young heir suddenly raised from the penury of a cab driver to the luxury of a rich home. The youth's first adventure into society leads to many laugh provoking developments.

"Lovey Dovey" is said by Pathe officials to be one of the cleverest animal comedies ever presented on the screen and is expected to set a new pace for this type of laugh provoker. The animals operate autos and aeroplanes. There is rapid-fire action and impersonation of human beings, added to laughable subtitles.

"The Five Orphans of the Storm," the current Aesop's Film Fable, is a burlesque of "Orphans of the Storm" and is said to be particularly well suited for Christmas, as it features Santa Claus and his reindeers, hanging of the stocking and other Christmas associations.

"The Desert of Death" is the eleventh chapter of the Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range" in which the heroine is confronted with new perils.

Pathe Review 51 includes a bit of the country in "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," a bird study captioned "Little Mothers," a touch of commerce in "The Locks of Sault Ste Marie," a color section, "Oxen Power," as employed in France and Spain.

New Pathe Series Stars Charles Chase

Another step in the expansion of Hal Roach's activities is disclosed in the Pathe announcement that Charles Chase will be featured in a series of single reel comedies. Chase, who is known as the "Fashion Plate of Fun" will make his debut on the Pathe program on January 6 in "At First Sight" to be followed by "One of the Family" released on January 27. It is planned to issue three Charles Chase single-reelers each month with a "Dippy-Do-Dad" the fourth week.

Showmen Praise New Fox Comedies

The newest Fox series of short subjects "Imperial Comedies" is meeting with unusual success according to statement from Fox Film Corporation. This series started in August and seven have been released. December 23 will see the final number of the first series "Monks A La Mode."

Exhibitor reports indicate that these comedies have been consistent laugh getters. Many first run houses including Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo have booked these comedies and have given them prominence in their newspaper advertising. Among the theatres whose reports to trade papers have praised comedies of this brand are Capitol Theatre, New Bedford; Palm Theatre, Mound City, Ill.; Court Theatre, Huntington, Tenn.

New Rogers Comedy Highly Praised

As a result of a pre-release showing at Ocean Park, Cal., Will Roger's new two reel comedy "Two Wagons, Both Covered" received unusually high praise from a Los Angeles photoplay critic who declared it looks like this production will land Rogers in the class with Chaplin, Lloyd and Fairbanks.

It is stated Rogers is working under J. A. Howe on a comedy "Great Moments from Little Pictures" in which he impersonates Ford Sterling and the Keystone cops, and also proposes to make a series of comedies involving good humored political satire which Bob Wagner will direct.

New Hamilton Comedy

Lloyd Hamilton has completed "My Friend" his next comedy for Educational. It was directed by Fred Hibbard under the supervision of Jack White, and Ruth Hiatt again appears as the comedian's leading lady. Advance reports indicate that this comedy will surpass anything Hamilton has done for Educational in the past year.

"Bee" Recommended

National Motion Picture League has placed "The Bee," third of Educational's "Secrets of Life" series, produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, in the class of films recommended for supplementary class room instruction on account of its educational value.

Broadway Booking

An Educational-Cameo single reeler "Film Foolish" is the comedy attraction at the Rivoli Theatre, New York during the current week.

"Modern Banking"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Those who have wondered about what takes place back of the cages in a bank will watch this Urban Classic No. 52 with interest. The various duties of the banking employees, in making change, opening checking accounts, cancelling paid checks, counting receipts are shown and there are various other bits of information.—M. K.

"Call the Wagon"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Christie Comedies are favorably represented in this one. It has a clever idea and is done with plenty of speed and pep. Neal Burns is a pretty girl's suitor who gets rid of his rivals by making them believe that she has false hair and teeth. She gets even with him and he barely escapes the lunatic asylum. Charlotte Merriam is the girl and Babe London also has a part. It is two reels of interesting entertainment.—M. K.

"A Movie Fantasy"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Hy Mayer's cartoon characters come to life in a clever comedy on the movie star craze. A young bride arranges to take lessons in screen acting and her husband cures her by impersonating the professor, putting her through vigorous exercises, and subjecting her to the gossip of neighbors until she is glad to give up her career for her husband. A popular subject interestingly handled.—M. K.

"Newsprint Paper"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Some new and interesting facts about manufacturing paper are revealed in this Urban Classic No. 47, "From Forest to Newsboy." The felling and chopping of the giant trees and the treatment of the pulp is pictured in detail.—M. K.

"The Morning After"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry's fable hero this time is a dog motor cop. He has other interests besides catching speeders, as the concluding proverb, "Old Stuff is Hard to Get" proves. It should be fairly amusing to anti-drys.—M. K.

Sid Smith Signed for Cameo Comedies

Educational announces that the well-known comedian Sid Smith has been added to the company making Cameo Comedies under the direction of Gil Pratt. Sid Smith came into prominence with his work in "Hallroom Boys" comedies and has also been starred in a series of two-reelers distributed by Grand-Asher. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are also working in "Oh Girls," a Cameo comedy now in production.

SHORT SUBJECTS REVIEWED IN THIS ISSUE

Bucking the Line (Universal)
Horseshoes (Vitagraph)
Call the Wagon (Educational)
Liquid Lava (Educational)
Lovey Dovey (Pathe)
Modern Banking (Vitagraph)
Morning After, The (Pathe)
Mother's Joy (Pathe)
Movie Fantasy, A (Universal)
Newsprint Paper (Vitagraph)
Under the White Robe (Universal)
Way of a Man, The (Pathe)

"Horseshoes"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

A good many original touches are seen in Larry Semon's latest which has plenty of laughs. Larry wins the disfavor of a giant pugilist and most of the scenes show various amusing tricks in evading him. The action is lively and has a spontaneity that will go very well. He elopes with the prize-fighter's girl and the climax is an exciting motorcycle-automobile race. The comedy is without the elaborateness in settings and costumes of some of the star's recent pictures but makes up for this in speed and fun.—M. K.

"Mother's Joy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel's type of comedy is well featured in this two-reeler, which has a more consistent and effective line of fun than some of his other recent efforts. As the long-lost and banished heir to a wealthy household, he returns, a vast disappointment to his grandfather whom he disgraces by social peculiarities as well as by his musical efforts. There are some highly amusing incidents and altogether it should please the average audience.—M. K.

"Lovey Dovey"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Another of the "Dippy-Doo-Dads" series, and one which is fully as bright and original as the others is now being offered by Pathe. With a maiden duckling and her two monkey-sweethearts as the famous triangle, a quaint and entertaining travesty on the popular thriller with motor and aeroplane races has been made. It is cleverly done and will add to any program.—M. K.

"Under the White Robe"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Neely Edwards' hobo make-up gains him an entree to a masked ball, thus enabling him to elude the police. A skeleton and other mysterious figures float about in mid-air, scattering the guests to the winds. Nervy Ned stands up as best man in a family wedding but a rival of the groom puts out the light, removes the groom and Ned finds himself clasping the hand of the bride in matrimony. Next scene, Reno. This affords fairly good but not new amusement.—M. K.

"Bucking the Line"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

There are some very good bits in this Century comedy with Buddy Messenger. Buddy works or rather amuses himself in his dad's store where there is a laughable scene in the toy department between a baby and a pet monkey. Buddy forgets to be a messenger when sent to deliver goods and distinguishes himself in a football game by substituting a watermelon for a football when kicking and making a touchdown with the real ball. It gains in entertainment value and leaves an impression of satisfaction.—M. K.

"Liquid Lava"

(Educational-Hodge Podge—One Reel)

A great variety of places and incidents are included in this number of Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge." Pictorial beauty is supplied by the views of Roman architecture, the old West, what the searchlights reveals on the water, and the famous New York skyline. A volcano eruption is another feature.—M. K.

New Witwer-F. B. O. Series Titled "The Telephone Girl"

The new Witwer series which is being filmed by F. B. O. will be known as "The Telephone Girl" and will be based on stories of the same title now appearing in Cosmopolitan Magazine. "Julius Sees Her" has been selected by the author as the title of the first episode.

The series will consist of twelve two-reel episodes and, unlike the "Fighting Blood" series, will be built around a feminine instead of a masculine character. The title role, that of a telephone operator in a Broadway hotel, will be portrayed by Alberta Vaughan, who has been prominent in a large number of Mack Sennett comedies.

Mal St. Clair, who directed the first "Fighting Bloods," is directing this series, and most of the incidents have a humorous twist, but drama develops and the heroine straightens matters out. Prominent in the cast are Al Cooke and Kit Guard, who won great popularity by their work in "Fighting Blood." The cast also includes Gertrude Short and others.

It is believed this series will have a greater appeal for women. However, there is as much ring action which should hold the following built up by "Fighting Blood."

"The Way of a Man"

Excellent Thrills in Pathe Serial Based on Emerson Hough Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Emerson Hough's story of pioneer days has been fashioned into thrilling serial by George B. Seitz for Pathe. Serial audiences should respond to this in much the same way as the feature houses do to the author's other great story, "The Covered Wagon." While the action is obvious and entertains without a mental strain, there is a sturdiness and vitality about the theme that makes it an unusually strong attraction.

In the first three episodes, a young Southern gentleman takes a Western trail in search of his dead father's business partner. In company with a caravan of pioneers he is attacked by the Indians. His mission is further endangered by an old acquaintance who has followed, presumably as a friend but really to get possession of his father's property. These complications keep up the suspense so that there is continual excitement.

The Indian attacks have been realistically staged. The make-ups are convincing and general standard of the characterization and atmosphere is high. Harold Miller and Allene Ray are youthful attractive types for the leading parts. Lillian Gale and Whitehorse are fine character studies and Bud Osborne is excellent as the villain.

"Into the Unknown," the first chapter, is in three reels and shows the young Southerner arriving at a Western trading post, attending a masked ball, where he meets Ellen Meriwether, unintentionally piques her but attempts to atone in a thrilling rescue of her, with the Indians close in pursuit.

The second, in two reels, is "Red Skin and White." Further intrigue on the part of the hero's white enemy and a big attack by the Indians, unfinished at the close, furnish excitement in this one.

"In the Toils of the Torrent" shows the hero badly wounded after the Indian skirmish, but restored by the villain, who is forced to use his medical skill. The hero and Ellen Meriwether are trapped in a roaring canyon at the close of this epsiode.

Pathe Signs for New Sennett Series

As a result of the success attending the first series of Mack Sennett two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, it is announced that this famous comedy producer will make a second group for the same distributing organization. The first of the series will be available in January. The first series started with "Nip and Tuck" on August 12 and "Inbad the Sailor" scheduled for December 30 will be the last of the series.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Big Banquet

On Friday, December 24, all the projectionists of the forty or more Loew Theatres in the New York City district will foregather at the "Aristocrat," 69 St. Mark's Place, New York City, where they will partake of the annual midnight banquet in honor of "Mike" Campbell, chief projectionist of the Loew Theatres.

These banquets have been held for a number of years. They have been very successful and have served a good purpose in bringing the Campbell projectionist force together socially once each year. It is expected that the coming affair will be bigger and better than ever. I will tell you all about it later.

Duluth Comes Across

From Duluth Local Union 509, Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., comes the following, under seal:

Brother Richardson: Your article in recent issue relative to the adoption of the word, or term "Projector Room" into the nomenclature of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was brought up at regular meeting last week. Upon being put to a vote it was unanimously decided that the term "Projector Room" is absolutely undesirable, and that the same would be, at best, a misnomer.

The secretary was therefore instructed to advise you that this local places itself on record as unanimously endorsing the term "Projection Room" as the name to be applied to the inclosure housing working projection equipment—the room from which motion pictures are projected.

Signed, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. Local 509,
By E. A. Currey, Secretary.

Good! That is the second local to act in this matter within two weeks, giving notice that they have some interest in things connected with the profession outside the usual routine. Also that they don't propose to allow the producer to instruct them even as to what they shall call the room they work in.

There are many other live-wire locals, I am sure, from which we should and shall hear in due time. Wake up, men! Take a ittle interest in something else besides merely your wage and actual working conditions. Those certainly are of first importance to you, but that is no reason why they ought to absorb ALL the energy of your organization, especially now that they are pretty well taken care of and out of the way with most of you for some time to come. I should have at least fifty indorsements of "Projection Room" by locals, and at least 10,000 from individual projectionists to present at the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Get busy!

From North Wales

Frank H. Kenyon, Projectionist, Princess Picture and Variety Theatre, Colwyn Bay, North Wales, England, says:

Attached find six dollars in exchange for one copy of the "BLUEBOOK of Projection" (Caps are his.—Ed.). If it is not asking too much, I would esteem it highly if you would affix your autograph to same. May say I have the second and third editions, both of which have been very helpful.

Up to now I have been unable to obtain condensers of proper focal length for my optical line-up, so am going to try Cinephor, which I have ordered and expect to arrive shortly.

In closing I thank you for the good work which you are doing and have been doing during the past eleven years I have been reading your writings and learning from you. What about that long promised visit to this little island? Don't let the "stars" leave you behind.

Many thanks for your commendation. It is gratifying to know that one has been able to help even men of other and far removed countries. Makes one feel as though he really has not lived quite in vain. As to the autograph, why, the office has, I think, a few autographed books on hand. No doubt one was sent to you.

I'd like to visit my many English friends alrighty right, but it's a long way and I'm no bloated plutocrat. Some day when "my ship comes in," perhaps I'll be able to visit old England, and if I do I promise you will "have company" in Colwyn Bay.

Defends Pittsburgh

James M. Hillman, Wilmerding, Pa., says:

I see in a recent issue of the department that some chap who calls himself a projectionist has taken a poke at the Pittsburgh men. This man calls himself a Projectionist, but is he? We have to take his word for that, as we cannot examine his work.

I wonder how many of those fellows who sign themselves projectionists really are that, or how many of them are only machine "operators." Doubtless some of them really are what they claim to be, and good ones, too, but also perhaps some make claims they would have trouble in substantiating.

Well, anyhow, I'm one of the Pittsburgh men, member of Pittsburgh Local Union No. 171, so called DUBS, employed at the Capitol Theatre, Braddock, Pa., which has the best projection room in the state. Have a 100—100 Hertner transverter, using 100 amperes at a 65 volt arc. Use one-inch Columbia positives and 7-16 Silvertip negatives and a 6½—9½ plano convex condenser; type S lamps and Peerless arc controls; 5¼ Cinephor lens and projecting a d—n good picture—steady and sharp, though the speed is 13 to 14 reels in two hours, though sometimes we only have ten. Shows are 1 to 3, 3 to 5, 5 to 7, 7 to 9 and 9 to 11.

The "queer ones" in that distinguished city (Pittsburgh) have to keep 'em going or get out, which is one reason for the oil pans you saw beneath the projector mechanisms. I use blotters under the intermittent casing.

I think more of the chap who will try to dig things out for himself, and when he does get it, remembers it, than of the one who has some one else do it for him and then promptly forgets it. That is one reason the Pittsburgh men seldom write. Watch them and shortly you will find what they are preparing to do.

I have the third edition of your handbook, also the Bluebook (fourth edition) and am inclosing check for a dollar for lens chart.

Besides my two projectors I have a switchboard with 28 switches and dimmers and two remote control switches to work, besides keeping my eye on friend picture, and do it all by my lonesome too.

For the love of Mike, give the Pittsburgh men a good word once in a while!

P. S. By the way, with regard to the Pittsburgh Film Board of Trade, if the exchanges would get a few new boxes their films would not get torn on the sides nearly so much. I get some that it requires a hammer, two screwdrivers, a pair of plyers and much language to get the reels out. The metal of some of the boxes is torn around the top, and when you pull out the reel from a single-reel can, unless you are very careful, damage to the film results.

As to the Pittsburgh men, I have not taken them to task nearly as much as the facts in the past would seem to justify. I am encouraged to believe that conditions have improved very much in the Steel City, because the American Projection Society has established its first branch there, and unless the bars of admission have been lowered, which I think they have not, one must be a real projectionist to get into the A. P. S. Heaven knows I've nothing against Pittsburgh itself. I applaud high class work wherever found. I will say, however, that projection speed is NO excuse for the oil cans I spoke of.

If things are better in Pittsburgh I shall be hugely delighted to know it, and will tender my most sincere congratulations to the men on that fact.

As to using the title "Projectionist," why, it probably is true that some use it who have small right to, but the very fact that they do use the term is an incentive to them to make good, and that is one of the main ideas I had in fighting for the adoption of the title Projectionist. Glad to hear from you any time, friend ——. Oh piffle, I just found the note at the end of your letter asking that I suppress your name. Alright, 'tis done! Maybe I'll visit Pittsburgh next Summer—maybe.

LENS CHART

By
JOHN GRIFFITHS

Here is an accurate chart which belongs in every projection room where carbon arcs are used. It will enable you to get maximum screen results with the equipment you are using.

The news Lens Chart (size 15" x 20") is printed on heavy Ledger Stock paper, suitable for framing. It will be sent to you in a strong mailing tube, insuring proper protection.

Get this chart now and be all ready to reproduce with maximum screen results the splendid pictures which are coming.

New Organization

Robert Runyon, Projectionist, Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Cal., arises to remark:

I read the article by James B. Enoch and it has fired me to the point of writing.

In so doing I wish to call your attention to an organization you may never have heard of—the Association of Independent Cinema Projectionists, which was born here in San Diego three years or more ago. It has grown from a charter membership of ten or fifteen to more than 250 members. I am distinctly proud to say that the entire membership is composed of projectionists, spelled with a capital "P," too.

We insist that every man live up to his title of PROJECTIONIST, hence we have but few grouches in our ranks. As nearly as I know, every man has both a lens chart and a Bluebook of Projection.

Well, doubtless you are by now weary of reading about the A. I. C. P., so I will switch to other topics.

Recently you showed a coffee can film scrap can. I'm not throwing any rocks when I say that such a container has been known to me for years. As to brother Growden and his in-and-out-of-focus effect, I believe if he would get some 32-gauge sheet aluminum and make himself a shutter blade of lighter weight it would greatly reduce the wear and tear on the shutter shaft and bearings, hence reduce lost motion and vibration, and at least tend to reduce the trouble.

For myself I made a pair of your 85-degree shutters and found that I got fully ten per cent. more light on the screen than with ordinary stock shutter. Projecting at 80 feet per minute all flicker tendency disappears. I got the formula from the department some while ago. Believe it would be well to publish it again.

I project in a first run house and get film in very good condition. Try to return it in approximately the same shape in which it was received. Have Powers 6B projectors—two of them, of course. Distance of projection, 70 feet, spreading the light from 50 amperes D. C. over a picture 12 feet 1 inch by 9 feet 1 inch; glass bead screen; use Snaplite projection lenses, 5.2 E. F. with a 6¼-7¼ condenser—plano convex. Am not sure my conditions are right but will know as soon as chart comes. You will probably hear from the A. I. C. P., Local No. 2, in future.

I am glad to hear from San Diego—glad indeed, because the men there impressed me as progressive when I visited that beautiful city some years ago. I don't quite understand the I. A. C. P., though. If it is an educational organization, auxiliary to the San Diego I. A. local, I'm for it. If it is displacing the local—well, that is very muchly something else again. Let us have further particulars.

From Duluth

Ray L. Brainerd, Duluth, Minn., orders a lens chart and says:

I have no doubt but that local union 509 will, in due time, officially approve of the term "Projection Room" as against "Projector Room," and so notify you.

The Bluebook is a masterpiece. Every member of Local 509 owns one and consults it, too. The one who is trying to earn his living at the profession of motion picture projection, and do it creditably, cannot be without one.

Would you be good enough to send a decent photograph of yourself? It will be accounted a valuable addition to the decorations of our new lodge room. Never mind saying "no" to this request, as that isn't the answer at all.

Huh, man dear, you don't suppose I'd send an indecent photograph, do you? It happens that I have not, at this time, a good photograph, but as I am offered the honor of a place on the walls of your lodge room, by gum, I'll have some taken real soon, and Local 509 shall have one.

Non-Professional

James L. Jameson, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Perhaps you do not answer questions concerning the motion picture field outside of theatres, but I very much want to know what makes of motion picture projectors are approved for use in the home.

I do not pay very much attention to projectors outside the professional field, but here is the list that is approved by the Pennsylvania Industrial Board, or that was approved by that body last Summer. It may or may not have been added to or subtracted from since then. I would suggest that you write the Secretary of the Industrial Board, Harrisburg, Pa., for up-to-the-minute information:

DeVry, with safety cutout and spring gate; Graphoscope, with safety cutout; Acme, 12-F and SVE; Projectoscope; Aladdin; Victor Safety Cinema; Pathescope; Zenith and the Burwood.

That is the full list supplied me by the Board last Summer. I might add that in order to work with these projectors you must apply to the State Industrial Board for a license, naming the make of projector you propose to handle.

What Do You Think?

There have been those, in the past, who have censured me for what they term my "harsh criticism." To cite an illustrative instance: A man high up in I. A. Councils, recently asked me: "Richardson, what in the name of Heaven ever possessed you to write so harshly about Chicago the last time you were there?"

"In Chicago, as elsewhere," I replied, "I described EXACTLY what I saw, giving praise where praise was deserved, and censure where censure was deserved, just as I have done everywhere and always."

I am not to blame if I find punk work or bad conditions! Is it wrong to give them publicity? Could I get better results by not doing so? Would the profession of projection and the industry be better served were I to smooth over faults and deal only in praise?

I am in earnest about this. If my methods are wrong I want to know it. RESULTS are what I am after. If milder methods will get them better than the methods I have been using, I will be delighted to use milder methods. My whole argument has been that the man who did not NEED censure did not and would not get it; that the man who lacked interest or knowledge, or who was too lazy to give the best possible results, RICHLY DESERVED TO BE EXPOSED, and that his exposure could only be of benefit to the profession of projection and to the motion picture industry.

I would much appreciate the setting forth of YOUR views. If Chicago felt hurt or unjustly dealt with, I would highly appreciate an expression of opinion as to just WHY she felt unjustly dealt with by a frank statement of exactly what I saw with my own eyes. I will make this offer: when next I am in Chicago I will be glad to take the President or Business Agent of the Chicago local with me on a tour of Chicago theatres, and will not say one solitary thing concerning what we see, except what he himself approves of, PROVIDED that he lets me purchase admission tickets, and that we enter without either of us being known.

I have tried hard to be just and fair. I want to be that, but have always felt that IT IS NO MORE FAIR TO REFRAIN FROM SETTING FORTH OBJECTIONABLE FACTS THAN IT WOULD BE TO DETRACT FROM THOSE THINGS WHICH DESERVE PRAISE. I would highly appreciate your views on this point.

Well, Rather!

From Oklahoma comes this:

Thought I'd just let you know that Oklahoma is still lying around out here in the "great open spaces." While I'm about it I'll ask a bit of information regarding something which is not in the Bluebook. Started projecting at the —— Theatre last September. Found things in a very unclean condition. Lenses were covered with oil and had been in this condition for six or seven months. Would or would not this collecting of oil deaden the working power of the lenses?

Holy smoke, friend, if you mean that the lenses themselves—the glass surfaces—were covered with oil—but surely you cannot mean that, since if it were true you would get nothing but a blur on the screen. If you mean there was oil on the lens jackets—the barrel in which the lenses are mounted—then I would say that, while such a condition is something no projectionist should or would tolerate, still it would not affect the actual working of the lens.

Two-Blade Shutter

Joe De Renzy, East Stroudsburg, Pa., wants to know why the blades on an extra-lite shutter, used for A. C., are the same width. Says he stopped travel ghost by following my instructions and increasing width of master blade by about ⅛ inch on each side, but that it increased flicker tendency.

The two-blade shutter is used for A. C. because with a three-blader the shutter blades are apt to get into synchronism with the alternations of the current. You know that with single-phase 60-cycle current there is no current or voltage at the arc 120 times each second, hence the light is much diminished at those periods. Should the blades of the shutter cover the lens just at the instant the current is at full value, and uncover it at the instant the current is at negative value, the result would be diminution of light on the screen and since the shutter could not possibly remain in perfect synchronism for but a very short period of time, the net result is a waving effect in screen illumination. This does not occur when a two-blader is used.

The two-blader is made with equal blade and opening widths because thus the flicker tendency is kept at minimum value. See pages 622-623 of the Bluebook for more complete explanation.

A Christmas Suggestion

Someone you know would appreciate a copy of F. H. Richardson's new fourth edition HANDBOOK OF PROJECTION more than anything else you could give.

The Handbook is absolutely the last word on projection. Its 974 pages of information and 842 questions with answers leave nothing to be desired. It is worth its price times over.

This is a suggestion to act on NOW. Xmas is near and the mails will soon be crowded. So mail your order TODAY with $6.00, to:

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

More Dope on the Operation of Independent Generating Plants

IN our issue of November 3, we published an article on the independent generating plant and its application to the motion picture theatre.

Before our November 3 issue was many days old, we were in receipt of inquiries from readers which showed that they were in the market for approximately $10,000 worth of independent generating plants.

In addition to these inquiries, as to where plants, such as we described, could be obtained, we also received requests for further information on the subject.

Having started to do the manufacturer's work for him, we figure we might just as well finish it, and are, accordingly, answering some of the typical questions asked us, as we have reason to believe that they touch on points which are of vital interest to many readers of the Moving Picture World.

War In the Dark

One inquirier, who frankly states that he knows nothing about independent generating plants or whether they are practical and dependable, wants to know just what the cost per hour for operation would be on a 7 1/2 KW plant, and if he could save money in the long run by installing such a plant.

Our correspondent is losing sight of the fact that the outstanding advantage of an independent generating plant lies not in its possessor's ability to compete in price with the local public service station furnishing current, but in the assurance it gives that he will have the juice on tap when he wants it, in spite of poor service from or a breakdown of his local power station.

The main consideration in the matter is not a few cents one way or the other in current cost, but in obviating cash losses of admissions when the house is dark, to say nothing of the bad effect produced on one's patrons by an interrupted show.

Approximate Estimate of Cost

The case of one of our inquiries whose current bill amounts to $630.88 per annum and who figures out that he has an annual loss of $300.00, due to a dark house, caused by current failure, is a typical one from which it is fair to estimate initial and operating cost of a 7 1/2 K.W. plant and which we dope out approximately as follows:

Depreciation at 15 per cent. (Cost of plant $1,200)	$180.00
Cost of operation (Generating current 4 1/2 hours per night at 33c. per hour, gasoline at 22c.) figuring 312 shows per annum	619.32
	$799.32
Present electric light bills	$630.88
Actual loss by dark house	300.00
	$930.88
Saving at end of first year	$130.56

We have placed a heavy depreciation charge against the outfit, 50% more in fact than manufacturers tell us that we should and, moreover, it is to be remembered that the owner of the house is not figuring on what its second-hand value will be; also that the outfit will give him many years of service.

Where Mirror or Mazda Would Help

Another exhibitor shows from his inquiry that his requirements are just over the border line of the capabilities of a 7 1/2 K.W. plant. This is caused solely by the fact that, although he has a small house, he is utilizing a regular arc projection lamp. If he were utilizing either Mirror reflecting or Mazda lamp projection, his wattage requirements would be sufficiently reduced to come within the facilities provided by a 7 1/2 K.W. plant.

In equipping a new or re-equipping an old house, this fact could be carried in mind to advantage and also the fact that one's own independent generating plant permits the use of direct current motors for furnishing power to the electric fans, ventilating apparatus and organ.

Many exhibitors, who would now like to install an independent lighting plant, are up against the fact that they are utilizing alternating current for projection and power purposes, whereas if they had installed A. C. to D. C. motor generators and operated their apparatus on D. C., no changes would be required when installing an independent plant.

Where the Storage Battery Comes In

Another difficulty encountered when one's requirements are close up to the facilities of a certain sized plant is the fact that one can get along all right up to the time when one changes over from one projector to the other, and these few seconds require a higher wattage than an otherwise satisfactory small plant can provide. This is where an auxiliary set of storage batteries could be installed to advantage to take care of this occasional peak of current requirement.

One of our readers states that he is now using alternating current—110 volts—and that all his equipment is wired for this. He wants a generating set that he can throw in when necessary and utilize his present equipment. He is utilizing Mazda projection and he uses but one motor—of 2 1/2 horse power—for operating his organ.

In this case, the best course for him to pursue would be to install an A. C. to D. C. motor generator, to use with his usual current supply and dispose of the organ motor and obtain one wired for direct current. His Mazda projection lamps will require no change beyond the installation of a direct current rheostat. Independent generating plants, to generate A. C. are only built in the larger sizes and the difference in cost between the smaller size D. C. generating plant which he could obtain and one generating alternating current would be far greater than would cover his expenditure for a new motor—less what he could obtain for his present outfit.

Another Method

Should the exhibitor object to the plan of installing an A. C. to D. C. converter which would remain idle while an independent lighting set is operating, the following outfit could be substituted.

A 15 H.P. alternating current motor wired according to voltage and frequency of the public service supply and equipped with

They Ask the World

In this department for November 3 we printed a story on independent generating plant.

Properly this was the province of the manufacturers of such plant, but none of them seemed to realize that the public wanted to know, so we did their work for them.

Within a week we had received inquiries indicating that these correspondents alone were in the market for such plants totaling in excess of $10,000. Just these few who were sufficiently interested to write in for more detailed information—and addresses.

What's the matter with the manufacturers? Are they trying to keep their existence a trade secret? We'll help tell an interested world, but we can't keep on taking space we need for other matters to advertise generating sets. In this issue we carry the matter further for the benefit of our readers. The rest is going to be up to the makers of such equipment.

And to show the general spirit of our readers, who have come to look to this department for real dollars and sense aid in the purchase of equipment, we reproduce one—just one—of a number of recent letters. It runs:

"We are asking you for this information as the Moving Picture World seems to be more interested in subscribers than just merely mailing the magazine each week."

THE REJUVENATED OPERA HOUSE OF LORAIN, OHIO, N OW THE STATE THEATRE

starting box and fused main switch may be belted to a 7½ K.W. compound D.C. generator. This for service in connection with the A.C. public service supply.

Connected by belt and fast and loose pulley to the generator, a 15 H.P. gasolene engine would produce the juice when the public service supply failed.

Such an outfit would require a special switchboard equipped with volt meter, ammeter, field rheostat, fuses, and a two pole 100 ampere main switch—it being taken for granted that distributing switches are already installed in the house.

This outfit would be less compact than a direct connected generating plant while its strong point would be the economy in purchase of equipment effected by the utilization of the generator for both public service and emergency current supply.

Economy of A. C. to D. C. Generator

The instances quoted above indicate that, aside from the improvement in projection, every house should be provided with means for converting alternating current to direct current; so that, at any time, it may install an independent generating plant without other change in the equipment.

One correspondent pathetically asks whether he should receive power or light rates for the current utilized on his projection machine.

He should receive the power rate, but he has just about as much of a chance of getting it as a Ford run-about has of holding its right-of-way against a ten ton truck. The chances are, however, that if he installed an independent generating plant, his public service corporation would offer him a lower rate and that he would continue to enjoy that lower rate just as long as he kept that independent plant in commission.

Cases have been known in which lighting companies have made particularly moderate rates to houses equipped to produce their own current, but jumped these rates immediately the exhibitor discarded his independent lighting equipment.

New Film Exchange

DALLAS, TEXAS — Famous Players Lasky Corporation has plans by Lang & Witchell for erection of two-story film exchange building at Market and Jackson street, 50 by 100 feet, to cost $35,000.

BELVIDERE, ILL.—Midwest Theatres, Inc., operating a chain of moving picture and vaudeville theatres in Aurora, Rockford, Joliet, Decatur, Blooming, Galesburg, Elgin, Beloit and La Crosse, has taken over recently completed DeKalb Theatre.

Greenbaum Didn't Forget Projection Room When His House Was Renovated

THE "Great Transformation Act" as put on by Mark Greenbaum practically gave the town of Lorain a new theatre. It certainly looks like new and the public is flocking to it.

The theatre which was renovated was the old opera house, but is now known as the State Theatre. It was taken over last summer by Mark Greenbaum and his son Jack and by remodeling the lobby and front, together with a thorough renovating of the interior, a fine, home-like, comfortable and up-to-date theatre now appears.

The interior, which is of the double-balcony style, was redecorated and furnished, but beyond this it was quite impossible for Greenbaum to make any great improvements without entirely reconstructing it.

But the lobby received plenty of attention. Greenbaum pulled out a partition and made that portion of the house twice as large. Then he fitted it tastefully with wicker furniture, ferns and flowers for use as a lounging place. This was something new in Lorain and made a hit. The lighting fixtures were all changed so as to give more illumination, and a bubbler fountain was installed.

Two New Simplexes

The projection room was enlarged and two new Simplex projectors installed by the Argus Company, of Cleveland. It is now roomy and one of the best ventilated in the state.

The street front of the old house was completely transformed. A step leading to the sidewalk was eliminated and a new marquee and golden finished wood frames were fitted on the sides. A new electric sign, with changeable letters on both sides of the marquee was set up, the stage rewired and a system of indirect lighting installed in the theatre proper.

The State plays a combination program of five acts of vaudeville and a feature picture, changing twice a week, on Sundays and Thursdays. John Gallagher, formerly manager of the Miles Theatre, Cleveland, is the house manager.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

The week ended December 8 witnessed a decided slump in the number of motion picture companies incorporating and entering business in New York State.

There were but two companies incorporated instead of the six or eight which are generally formed in the Empire State each week.

These two companies are the Hanlon Silhouette Film Company, capitalized for $20,000, and with George W. Hanlon, of New York, together with M. G. and Pauline Blankenburg, of Newark, N. J., and the H. E. R. Studios, with a capitalization of $10,000, and with Grace Sheehan, John Thow and Isaac Schmal, of New York, as directors for the first year.

The American Ace

The Premier of Portable Projectors

Ready for immediate delivery ~

A projector that is portable, practical, convenient and gives projection to compare with a permanent installation—these are some of the reasons for the tremendous popularity of the new American Ace.

No need to put up with poor projection—unhandy cases—unsatisfactory lighting—or flimsy construction.

The Ace is not only easily portable, but is practical in the strictest sense of the word.

It gives a steadier, more brilliant picture at all distances from ten to one hundred twenty feet than is possible with any other portable projector.

For churches, schools, industrial sales, advertising, production, welfare and all educational and entertainment purposes, it is ideal —for use in a small room or a large auditorium.

Write at once for full information about this really remarkable machine. Our facilities are ample, but not unlimited and orders are coming in fast. Get acquainted Now with the Ace. Don't wait for literature. Send in your order, the American Ace is guaranteed.

Why The Ace Wins!

Absolutely Safe.

Practically Fire-proof.

Requires no experience to operate.

Extremely simple and sturdy.

No permanent case to obstruct operation.

Straight through film feed—like professional installations.

Operates from any electric light connection.

Weighs only 35 pounds.

Throws a beautiful picture up to 120 feet.

Equally suitable for use in offices, living room or large theatres.

The price is wonderfully attractive.

You'll Say It's an Audience Picture!

And a box office picture, too!

That's what we set out to make—a picture that would get the public into your theatre, any time, any place! And we have certainly hit the nail on the head this time; it's a knockout!

How your audiences are going to thunder their applause—they'll raise the roof as Hoot leaves them thrilled and breathless time and time again. You know what Hoot can do with a bucking bronco—but just wait until you see him with a roaring fire-truck! And speaking of box office receipts—why, that's just what we mean when we say it's his greatest picture!

ONCE in a season comes a 100% box-office knock-out, that is superbly written, supremely acted and directed—a landslide for the exhibitor.

"PLEASURE MAD" is a box-office avalanche that's sweeping everything before it. It's Reginald Barker's newest and biggest, presented by Louis B. Mayer through Metro. It's a smash-hit that has everything!

Tremendous heart interest, spectacular scenes that are eye-openers, a sure-fire cast headed by Mary Alden and Huntly Gordon, and a mighty love story of Divorce and the Jazz Age and a woman who fought against odds to save her home.

"PLEASURE MAD" took Frisco by storm when it struck Loew's Warfield like a thunderbolt. Audiences laughed, wept, and cheered! And the business it did for the Warfield in Frisco it will do for you, for every exhibitor anywhere. It will hold your audiences breathless to a staggering climax—but will send them away happier, and send them away talking!

They will smash your gate to see "PLEASURE MAD." It's the biggest buy the exhibitor ever had! Get behind it with everything you've got, and watch the dollars roll in.

LOVE THAT IS LAWLESS

It Hits Home in Every Home!

Millions of movie-goers are waiting for this picture, for a million American homes have been touched by the Jazz Age and the problems of modern life and modern love and divorce. The greatest universal emotion of the human heart is exalted in this story of an old-fashioned wife and her new-fashioned husband and children who drift away from her to a playground of passion.

"PLEASURE MAD" is a symphony of life, in crashing cymbals and muted strings, and it plays a box-office tune all its own!

Campaign that rocked Frisco

Mayor Rolph presents Louis B. Mayer with Keys to City.

Louis B. Mayer, Norma Shearer, and Police Chief Dan O'Brien.

How They Did It

The greatest publicity campaign ever put over in 'Frisco was opened by a reception at the station on the arrival of Louis B. Mayer's party by these notables:

Mayor Rolph of San Francisco.

Chief of Police Dan O'Brien.

Mrs. Blanche Upright, writer of "Pleasure Mad" and prominent club woman.

President and officials of the Chamber of Commerce.

Motorcycle police escort.

30th Infantry Band.

Jazz orchestra and chorus girls from the "Palais Royal."

A parade led by the 45-piece band, with 25 autos in the line, through the business section to the city hall, was followed by Mayor Rolph's presentation of the keys of the city to Louis B. Mayer in recognition of the world premiere of "Pleasure Mad" at Loew's Warfield.

Sensational Stunts

"Pleasure Mad" night was celebrated at the Palais Royal cabaret.

A siren-shrieking ambulance preceded a wrecked car towed through the streets, proving the driver was "Pleasure Mad."

Every yellow taxicab had pasted on the front and rear windows the slogan "Our Drivers Are Not 'Pleasure Mad'—They Drive With Care," and the name of the Warfield.

Special billboard teaser campaign got results.

You'll Get the Same Results

"Pleasure Mad" is a money-making title with endless possibilities for exploitation. The stunts that the Warfield did can be duplicated anywhere, and there are scores of others contained in the Metro press sheet that will help you put over "Pleasure Mad" to walloping receipts.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

THE NEW YEAR IS ABOUT TO START that is sure to mean much, for good or ill, to the motion picture industry.

What will the year bring? Will it find the industry still permitting the Ego of some selfish directors to go on padding features into unwarranted, tiresome lengths, or will it see a return to the feature of normal length, that will permit an exhibitor to build up a REAL SHOW, a program of diversified entertainment such as built up the tremendous popularity of motion pictures?

It is largely up to you, Mr. Exhibitor, to bring about this needed reform. If you raise your voice loud enough, it will be heard and heeded. And unless features come to a saner length, all the best wishes for a prosperous New Year for you will be in vain, for, as Danny says in Film Daily, "the public is willing and anxious to pay for real entertainment—diversified entertainment—and sooner or later will refuse to pay for 'Ego'."

Let's all work earnestly for this reform, so that the whole industry may have a prosperous year, which is Educational's sincere wish.

What is an All Star Cast?

WE see many pictures on the market advertised as presenting an "all-star cast." Most often on close examination this "all-star cast" reveals one featured player supported by a group of practically unknown personalities.

The phrase "an all-star cast" is used loosely in advertising pictures today, yet the public is not slow to recognize a real all-star cast from a false one. Releases of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan possess casts which are "electric light names." Look over our list and note the combined drawing power of each one of these players. These are truly all-star casts.

A SENSATIONAL DRAMA OF

FLAMING PASSION

FROM KATHLEEN NORRIS' FAMOUS NOVEL

"LUCRETIA LOMBARD"

A HARRY RAPF PRODUCTION

FEATURING

Irene Rich and Monte Blue

DIRECTED BY

Jack Conway

Frank Elliott in M. P. News: "One of the best pictures produced this season. A story that grips the interest at all times, boasting several fine punches and a climax that will pull the most hard-boiled fan right up to the edge of the seat. For thrill, the big forest fire climax has not been surpassed this year."

Louella O. Parsons in N. Y. American: "The direction is particularly good in this picture. There is a flood, a forest fire and a number of other thrilling events. The forest fire is well done."

Dorothy Day in N. Y. Morning Telegraph: "'Lucretia Lombard' is primarily a money-maker, and the Warner Bros. should be quite pleased to add it to their list. A fine screen presentation."

Quinn Martin in New York World: "'Lucretia Lombard' is a highly sentimental, very well acted melodrama. It is cast and mounted nicely, and extremely effective."

N. Y. Evening Telegram: "Spectacular thrills follow each other uninterruptedly in this production. Amid the horrors of forest fires and turbulent flood, the drama of conflict steadily develops to a crescendo of emotions, thence rising to a whirlwind climax."

N. Y. Sun & Globe: "Irene Rich, Marc MacDermott, Norma Shearer and Monte Blue give performances that are sincere and fine as anything seen in the films this year."

N. Y. Evening Mail: "'Lucretia Lombard' at the Strand this week is a 'sell out.' Exhibitors need have no fear for the box-office when this picture comes to their theatres."

N. Y. Evening Journal: "The narrative, as filmed, bristles with situations. Good effects in the flaming woods and raging rivers."

N. Y. Times Square Daily: "A real box-office hit. 'Lucretia Lombard' is a strong story and Jack Conway, who directed, handled the tale skilfully, getting in several touches of the sexy variety that are sure to prove of assistance at the box-office."

N. Y. Evening Post: "Queer to relate, and unusual in this day of the obvious, the production is bound to rouse many questions. Excellently played, well staged, intelligently cast, an interesting and enjoyable story which is never soporific."

Harriette Underhill in N. Y. Tribune: "The cast is excellent. There is an ingenue who is the last word in ingenues."

M. C. LEVEE
PRESIDENT

ANTICIPATING by several months the necessity for lower production costs, the $800,000 improvement program of the United Studios in Hollywood has been completed.

With these improvements finished, this plant offers the independent producer economy in production through new facilities and efficiency methods designed with this end in view.

Keeping pace with the progress of the industry the United Studios has not only retained its leadership as the largest and most efficient leasing plant in the world, but has increased its own facilities a hundred per cent.

Progress & Achievement

"Anna Christie" reaches the theatres for Christmas. It should contribute materially toward exhibitor prosperity in 1924.

The newspaper and magazine critics call "Anna Christie" the greatest picture I have ever produced, and declare it to be an outstanding production of a season in which many fine pictures have been released.

The test engagements have established "Anna Christie" as a highly successful box-office attraction.

For a great many years I have been producing pictures that have made money in the theatres, and I intend to continue to do so for a great many years to come. I refuse to be stampeded by the hysterics of the industry into policies which violate good business judgment.

Ours is an industry of progress. We have gone forward more than even we realize during the twelve months of 1923, and I pledge myself, my resources and my organization toward greater progress in 1924, toward finer pictures and higher standards.

Who Writes Screen Plots Juicy with Showmans' Exploitation Possibilities!

Meet "Bill" Pelley! He is the man who wrote "The Light in the Dark," "The Shock," "Her Fatal Millions," "The Fog" and eight other photoplays this year, FIVE OF WHICH ARE NOW IN PRODUCTION. What other Dramatist can point to five of his screen plays all being "shot" at the same time? Tom Mix is making a Pelley story right now; so is Maurice Tourneur; so is Hoot Gibson; so is the U. S. Department of Justice. Richard Thomas has just acquired the rights to a new Pelley story: "What Women Love."

$100,000 OF PHOTOPLAY PLOTS

is the figure Pelley's sales force and exploitation staff have before them for a goal in the year ahead. He operates a printing plant, art department and group of professional exploitation men to wring his plays dry of exploitation possibilities for both producer and exhibitor. He also will start the publication of a house organ, "THE SCREEN SHOWMAN," on January 1st. This is to be sent free to every showman running Pelley's screen plays.

A STORY WITH A WALLOP EVERY TWO WEEKS' FOR 1924. ASK YOUR PRODUCER TO SEND YOU HIS PELLEY PLAYS—Fox, Universal, Metro, First National, Film Booking Offices have them and you can buy them right because Pelley sold them right—they will please your patrons!

The Greatest Story of All!

A MASSIVE DRAMA of the beginning of the America that you know. The struggles of a few that became the romance of one hundred million people. It is the story of Her whom you love more than any other . . . of Her for whom you would shed your blood . . . of Her for whom you would sacrifice all—the first great story of America.

Carol Dempster

The Daughters of the American Revolution wanted a complete, accurate and dramatic version of America's greatest of all stories, the Revolutionary War, told with a true mastery upon the screen. They informed Will H. Hays of their wishes. And Mr. Hays discussed the idea with

D. W. GRIFFITH

Neil Hamilton

He agreed to make it. To do so he and his staff of players visited practically every shrine of American Liberty taking scenes of the drama upon the actual ground where they occurred in the Revolution.

Helping Griffith to make this story more accurate than any story of this period has ever been, are The Daughters of the American Revolution, The Sons of the Revolution, President Edwin Worthen of the Lexington Historical Society, the Boston Historical Society, the Mount Vernon Historical Society, the Smithsonian Institution, the New York Public Library.

Robert W. Chambers, accepted as one of the best informed historians on Revolutionary matters, has written the story in the filming. John L. E. Pell is making the historical arrangements.

The name selected for this tremendous production is

"AMERICA"

The cast being chosen is recommended by appearance and ability alone. It is not intended that a famous character shall be altered to fit a famous actor. Literally hundreds of persons have been tested out that these characters shall be real in appearance.

This picture digs so deep into the tough hides of all that such praise was bound to come to light.

From the Author—

". . . when a picture's pathos makes a group of newspaper reporters cry visibly and sniffle audibly as 'Boy of Mine' did last night, and then brings forth shrieks of delighted laughter from everybody, the producer ought to be satisfied."

From Motion Picture News—

"How thoroughly adapted is Ben Alexander as the youngster. No suggestion of coaching in his acting, he portrays the lad with genuine sympathy and feeling. The story has a full quota of true touches . . . it is worth seeing."

From the Moving Picture World—

"Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. It is a gem among pictures. It is one of those pictures no one should miss."

With its tremendous book sales; with 231 or more newspapers telling the story of "Black Oxen" to their 5,000,000 readers every day; with the publicity this picture is obtaining—and with such a production, our claim is modest.

Read what the Exhibitors' Herald had to say—

"Gertrude Atherton's 'Best Seller' Made Into Splendid Production"

"It ought to be a clean-up for every exhibitor who plays it. It's a novel with a million dollars' worth of publicity and advertising back of it and all this publicity can be turned to good account in exploiting the picture. Never have we seen Miss Griffith more beautiful or more alluring. Miss Atherton's story contains such an unusual theme and has created such a stir that there is an immense audience waiting to see this filmization of her book. And director Frank Lloyd has made an excellent job of it, one that puts him in the front rank of present day directors. 'Black Oxen' will prove a surprise for most picture devotees. A 'best seller' made into a best seller."

THE pages of Moving Picture World present history in the making — history alive, history in the week-to-week deeds and words of men whom you and I know. However, we harbor no desire to play the solemn dour-faced historian. Rather, in the pages that follow, we have sought to present a chatty, surface-skimming romp through the files of Moving Picture World. The "young-old-timers" still among us will revive fond memories, renew warm acquaintances, and echo many a chuckle of yesteryear. The generation that will create Tomorrow's history will gather the atmosphere of intense struggle, supreme daring, and indomitable courage that have built this most wonderful of industries.

Nineteen Seven and Nineteen Eight were years that saw attention pretty evenly divided between lantern slides and motion pictures. ——— If we are any judge the slides were more interesting than the motion pictures. ——— Charles K. Harris has an article on "The Increasing Cost of Producing Slides" ——— As many as seven people are taken to Bronx Park to make a scene, he says. ——— Independents staged their pictures with bodyguards to protect the camera from Patents Company detectives. ——— Hectic days for the Independent but still harder for an independent editor. ———James P. Chalmers was square-jawed and Scotch, though, and he fought his own battles and those of the Independent to equal success.

I HAVE QUIT THE PATENTS COMPANY

Nothing but a straight business proposition, the best of films, the most reliable service, and prices that are within your easy reach
CARL LAEMMLE, President
The Laemmle Film Service
HEADQUARTERS 196-198 Lake Street CHICAGO
SPECIAL NOTICE
MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. PORTLAND, Ore. SALT LAKE CITY, Utah
EVANSVILLE, Ind. OMAHA, Neb. WINNIPEG, Can. MONTREAL, Can.

"TODAY his weekly receipts are $10,000 and the end is not in sight," we quote from an article in the first January, 1909, issue of Moving Picture World concerning Carl Laemmle, a rising young film renter. ——— Then, in fear that his imagination might be running wild, the writer added: "if there had been any danger of the end being in sight the recent discovery of talking motion pictures by a Berlin inventor dispels all fears." ——— Think of how far the talking motion picture has brought us since 1909! And how much it contributed to increase Carl Laemmle's weekly receipts! ——— This was the year of the great "anti-Trust" fight, brought about by the insistence of the Motion Picture Patents Company on collecting a two-dollar-a-reel royalty fee from every theatre. ——— The Licensed producers were Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Lubin, Pathé, Selig, Vitagraph and Kleine. Of these, only Pathé and Vitagraph still retain their position. ——— And you can judge how strong the Independent looked when the New York Motion Picture Company advertised in an issue of the World: "Don't judge us by the company we are in!" ——— Those were hectic days. Every other page in the file is a ringing call to arms from Carl Laemmle, Bill Swanson, the Miles Brothers, and other Independents, while the Licensed attitude may be judged from an ad. of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. (R. A. Rowland) who said, "The comparison between Licensed Films and Independent Junk is the same as that between Four Aces and a Four Flusher!" G-r-r-r! Bite 'em! ——— Another important film battle of the year developed when Mayor McClellan, of New York City, declared that he would issue NO MORE LICENSES to motion picture theatres. For one thing, the theatres were getting too numerous; for another, films were degrading the youth of the land, and finally, a fire in Johnstown, Pa., had just shown that picture theatres were unsafe. Gustavus Rogers had to go to court for the picture theatres to change the Mayor's attitude.

R. H. COCHRANE has been the very live, flesh-and-blood shadow in the Universal background through the years. Our opinion of his urbane, silken smile is tempered by the feeling that he has been responsible in no small part for Universal's two-fisted method of meeting the problems of each succeeding year.

GLANCE at the youthful Carl Laemmle in the "Declaration of War" above and the mature Carl Laemmle to the right. The same fighting jaw! And the same ringing note in his advertising copy and his doings through the years since 1909 — that's our outstanding recollection of a ramble through the files of Moving Picture World.

VITAGRAPH was established in 1897, but we drop them in the 1910 position on our calendar because the advertisement shows a typical weekly program of the time and the sort of advertising done.———Note particularly that there was no star evil, for the players went incognito.———Florence Turner, as the ad. shows, was merely "The Vitagraph Girl."———A page article in a January number of The World tells of a "startling new method of advertising" consisting of placing players' photographs in the lobby.———Kalem devised it and the story goes on to say "The people who play the parts in the pictures do not welcome the innovation. While pictures have attained a distinct place in the theatrical field actors and actresses playing in them are very sensitive about having their identity known."———So lobby frames and photos were supplied but the individuals were unnamed.———S. L. Rothapfel, of Forest City, Pa., wrote a series of articles for The World this year which was introduced with this statement: "Readers of The World know that our ideal motion picture theater is yet to materialize and that it will be located on New York's Great White Way. We ventured this suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and pointed out that his abilities deserved a wider scope. It is not improbable that he will undertake it, provided a suitable location can be found."———There's a prophet for you!———Pictures are getting "bigger and better" for there are many advertised as nine hundred and ninety feet in length.———But when Vitagraph made the "Life of Moses" in three parts it released one reel a week for three weeks and exhibitors presented it the same way.———Song slide advertising is receding in importance in 1910 but not a little space is given to appliances for producing "sound effects" back of the screen.———The cordial relations existing between rival groups is well evidenced by an editorial in The World headed "Liar! Liar! Liar!" the gentle words being aimed at a contemporary editor.

ALBERT E. SMITH is now the real daddy of this motion picture field — not in years nor in energies but in point of continuous service. Since 1897 — and without interruption — he has been at the helm of a single motion picture organization—a company at all times a prominent factor in both production and distribution activities.

FIRST it was Smith, and Blackton, and Rock — then it was Smith and Blackton — then it was Smith alone. But now it is good to once more think of J. Stuart Blackton in the same second that Vitagraph comes to mind. Remember "The Battle Cry of Peace?" Well, watch Stuart Blackton for another in 1924 that will make 'em sit up.

THE GREATEST NEWS EVER PUBLISHED FOR THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS
PATHE'S WEEKLY
A FILM ISSUED EVERY TUESDAY, MADE UP OF SHORT SCENES OF GREAT INTERNATIONAL EVENTS OF UNIVERSAL INTEREST FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD. AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE ON A FILM. THE NEWS OF THE WORLD IN PICTURES.
BOOK IT! INSIST ON IT!
IT MEANS BIGGER, BETTER BUSINESS

HERE'S a revolutionary announcement, the first news weekly! Films of topical events, such as "Roosevelt's Return," had proved popular, so Pathe took a big gambling chance and decided to attempt a regular weekly release. ——— These are the days of the first "hidden advertising," for all parades in the News Weekly were certain to end with the sandwich man carrying the "English Curved Cut" banner. ——— Competing with Pathe was a "News-Slide Service" supplied by the American Press Association. ——— Kinemacolor, "motion pictures in nature's own colors" were given their first public presentation in New York at the Eden Musee in January. — Carl Laemmle presents a new star just coaxed from Biograph and announced as "Little Mary." ——— From the photograph in the ad. we strongly suspect it was Mary Pickford, but apparently the name was an unimportant item to exhibitors. ———An editorial along about March hails as epoch-making the establishment of a scenario school in New York. ——— Vitagraph is advertising that it will pay as much as $25 a reel for good stores. ——— An important state rights release of the year is "The Truth About the Pole" by Dr. Frederick A. Cook and a notable supporting cast, direct from its record-breaking engagement at Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House. ——— G. M. Anderson, writing from Huron, S. D., puts forth a very valuable suggestion for worried theater managers. "A local manager," he writes, "having lots of trouble keeping the chairs the right distance apart, had a strip of wood nailed on the floor for each row of chairs." ——— It is to be hoped that The World readers took full advantage of the suggestion. ———Powers Picture Plays, P. A. himself, takes a two page ad. to say this "The fact that our plant was burned completely to the ground on Monday, June 5th, didn't interfere with Power's enterprise. We even made a picture of the plant burning down. Inside of two hours the director had performers out in the part making a new picture."

TRACING its parentage baek to the original Pathe Fréres of Franee — the Pathe of today is wholly Amerieun, in faet and in spirit, as one glanee at the go-getter eountenance of Elmer Pearson will attest. Mr. Pearson eame through the ranks from the selling end to gain the equipment fitting him so well to head Pathe's aetivities in this year and generation. His personality makes him one of the most popular of film men.

WHEN the infant industry was howling in its cradle in 1896 E. S. Porter entered the door. He belongs in Row A. Aisle Seat, in any historieal reeord. In later years he was assoeiated with Thomas A. Edison; then supplied the motion pieture knowledge to the first Famous Players partnership; and after disposing of his large holdings there founded Preeision Maehine Co., whieh ehanged the S. in his name to Simplex.

HOW many readers of this advertisement in Moving Picture World in 1912 even thought that the unknown individual whose name appears in the left hand corner would later become the single outstanding Napoleonic figure of the industry? ——— So little known was he to the editors that two later ads. spelled the name "A. Zuker" and it got by all the proofreading. ——— The "Delhi Durbar," length one thousand feet, and with one thousand real elephants, is advertised by Pathe Freres as "the most spectacular film of the year." Remember it? ——— One of those typically lying press agents is announcing Selig's production of "The Coming of Columbus, THE FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLAR PICTURE." ——— This flamboyant advertising and excessive waste on picture production must stop! ———Robert Lieber, manager of the Indianapolis office of the General Film Company, boasts that he is supplying thirty-three houses in that city with Licensed service. ——— That record got him his job as President of First National. ——— G. M. Anderson, interviewed as "the acting member of Essanay," makes so bold as to state, "The film of the future will cost $25,000 to produce. It will comprehend an entire evening's entertainment and will tell the whole story where we now give only an occasional scene." ——— Interesting, if true. — Carl Laemmle and "Imp" conducted a sensational scenario contest with a Grand First Prize of $100. ——— Kalem has a company of players under Sidney Olcott on a trip around the world. ——— Many subjects were made in Ireland; in Egypt, where "From the Manger to the Cross" was staged, headquarters were at Luxor. ——— But King Tut wasn't ready to make his appearance. ——— P. A. Powers has a new photograph taken for his ad. copy each week. The one before us at the minute shows a Doc Munyon pose. ——— Epes Winthrop Sargent giving advice under the heading "Buying a Picture Theater" lists one of the most important questions to be answered, "Is the piano owned by the house or rented?"

Sarah Bernhardt

IN THE GREAT SPECTACULAR PHOTOPLAY

"Queen Elizabeth"

IN THREE PARTS

Press critics have pronounced "Queen Elizabeth" the crowning triumph of Bernhardt's career. The story itself is one of the strongest ever recorded. Attractive line of original lithographic masterpieces, varieties of one-sheet, three-sheet, eight-sheet, 16-sheet and 24-sheet posters. Artistic booklets, folders and elaborate programmes. Special music written by Mr. Joseph Carl Breil with complete orchestration that will play the production to the music of success.

WHEN Adolph Zukor saw the stream of pennies in the arcade slot machines he decided that this was a pretty good business. So we have the company announced above with the insignificant signature "A. Zukor." Incidentally, it is not generally known that the state rights on "Queen Elizabeth" were nearly all velvet. After contracts were signed to make the picture in Paris, E. S. Porter turned around and sold the foreign rights for enough to cover the cost.

JESSE LASKY was the first man to introduce the cabaret style of entertainment to America — and dropped a fortune trying it at the Folies Bergere. Later such acts as "Lasky's Redheads" in vaudeville got quite a bit of it back. The next thing we heard of was the Lasky Feature Film Company — Jesse and Samuel Goldwyn — and a proposed production of "The Squaw Man." Then came Paramount, followed by Famous Players-Lasky — and look at him today!

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"
YOU are buying motion picture entertainment today just as you buy groceries or dry goods. Wherever—you think you run least risk of making an unsatisfactory purchase.
Theatres showing Educational Pictures do not depend on just one picture to please an entire audience. They offer you so many different kinds of good pictures that their programs are bound to please you.
You may see a two-reel feature photo-play like The Northern Trail, SELIG-RORK'S great production of James Oliver Curwood's story. Or—
A two-reel comedy by CHRISTIE—or a TORCHY COMEDY from a Sewell Ford story.
You can see the great screen comedian Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton in a MERMAID COMEDY ably directed by Jack White. Or—
One of Wm. S. Campbell's ANIMAL COMEDIES with almost human animal actors.
You can take Jolly Journeys around the world in Motion Picture Scenics for which the standard has been set by Robert C. Bruce's SCENICS BEAUTIFUL. You may laugh at Julian Ollendorff's animated cartoons, SKETCHOGRAPHS, or—
See in KINOGRAMS the visual news of all the world.
When you shop for your money's worth in motion picture entertainment, look in theatre entrances for posters and cards showing the Educational Pictures sign. When you see it—go in!

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., E. W. Hammons, President

EVEN so casual a skimming of history as these pages would be incomplete without a post for General Film, so we have used the 'Daddy of them all' as a background for Earl Hammons. ——— The man who took the short subject and made it a feature. ——— The ad. reproduced is Educational's first national magazine copy, in 1921. ——— In 1913 Earl Hammons was sitting in a Madison Avenue office pondering the possibilities of this "movie craze." ——— Daily newspapers this year began to admit that motion pictures might last because Edison's Talking Pictures were the sensation of the hour. ——— The Zukor slogan this year was "Thirty Famous Features a Year." ——— Benny Schulberg please write. ——— From thirty it climbed to one hundred and four and in 1921 it will be "fewer and better." ——— Going forward. ——— The Keystone cops, in split-reel releases, were showing new comedy possibilities. ——— If this chap Mack Sennett takes his job seriously he'll soon be as famous as Ford Sterling. ——— "Paul Rainey's African Hunt" is proving that the success of "Quo Vadis" in legitimate theaters was no accident. ——— Mayor Gaynor vetoes the first censorship bill and gives us an opinion that is still quoted. ——— The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Motion Picture Company is formed and will sell on a state rights basis. ——— Soon afterwards Harry Reichenbach makes his initial appearance as a toastmaster trying to convince us that "The Squaw Man" could be worse. ——— "Mutual Movies Make Time Fly" is appearing as the first national advertiser. ——— But aviation was in its infancy and Mutual couldn't keep up with the times. ——— Moving Picture World published the first Convention Daily. ——— Still remains the biggest. ——— The Government is holding a series of hearings on the Motion Picture Patents Company that can with ease be rewritten to cover today's Famous Players hearing. ——— The most important editorial subject of the day is "The Single Reeler versus the Two Reeler—What is the Future of the Single Reel?" ——— If any.

FROM the soles of our shoes up —we have always admired Earl Hammons, the man who stuck to his guns. When the feature came in — it came with a bang — and the short subject went the way of General Film, into the discard. It was a long hard struggle for the man who said that "Short FEATURES" had a place — but Earl Hammons stuck and today "the spice of the program" is a reality, not alone a slogan.

'WAY back in a 1911 issue of Moving Picture World our eyes were stopped by the photograph of "an enterprising young theater manager" who turned out to be none other than our well known S. L. Rothafel. "Roxy" deserves a place in any pictorial gallery of film celebrities — his contribution to the advancement of picture presentation and consequently to the screen art itself cannot be measured.

NINETEEN FOURTEEN saw an epidemic of new distributing organizations, but of them all William Fox and Paramount alone survive. ——— Alco, formed from the initials of Al Lichtman's name, was one of the most ambitious. ——— Pathe attempted a Daily News release but it died abornin'. ——— Carl Laemmle, interviewed by Moving Picture World declares, "I believe that long features are doomed. If I were running a theater I would rather show single reels any time than some of the poor features that are on the market." ——— Billy Brown, of the "palatial Nordland Plaza Theater, Cincinnati," boasts in a letter to The World, "Mine is the only house in Cincinnati getting ten cents." ——— William Fox, organized in January, 1914, started releasing in February, but by November had decided that he had to make his own pictures if he wanted them right. ——— Which may explain why Bill lasted as a distributor where so many died. ——— December sees the completion of "A Fool There Was," with Theda Bara. ——— The Strand Theater, New York, opens in April with Selig's "The Spoilers." ——— Those "in the know" will whisper to you that the stage has been built big enough to handle shows of the Hippodrome type if pictures flop in a three-thousand-seat house. ——— Which they certainly will. ——— "The Perils of Pauline" is standing them up all over the country. ——— Oh, boys, wasn't that a thriller? ——— The Criterion is know as the Vitagraph Theater and "A Million Bid" is bringing the house down at every show. ——— "Cabiria" is pronounced the last word in picture production. ——— If you could steal Francis X. Bushman from Essanay your fortune would be made. ——— If Jesse Lasky had even seen J. Warren Kerrigan as he appears before us in an ad. for Universal's "Samson" there might never have been a "Covered Wagon". ——— In April we get our first look at "Tess of the Storm Country" and Mary Pickford's fame is assured. ——— E. S. Porter produced it.

WHEN the Greater New York Film Exchange fought the Film Trust and collected — in cash — William Fox decided that he was ready to throw his coat in the ring alongside his hat and go the limit of producing pictures as well as selling and showing them. Since then each year has shown Bill Fox displaying the uncanny sense of showmanship that had originally made him a successful theater owner.

"WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, formerly secretary to Police Commissioner Waldo, and previously of The New York Evening World has entered the picture business" we read back in 1910. What a far cry it seems to those days — for Winnie Sheehan is now Film Man from start to finish, with the capital "F" and capital "M" appropriate. He has been at the right hand of Bill Fox through his entire film career.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION

METRO seems rather proud of that statement, "Capital $300,000."——— It's a good thing they didn't tackle "The Four Horsemen" with the initial bankroll.———David W. Griffith presents "The Birth of a Nation." It is rumored, but few of us believe it, that the picture cost almost one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. —But it is unanimously pronounced the last word in picture production.——— Metro captures Francis X. Bushman, which assures its success.——— The Motion Picture Board of Trade is formed.——— If the announcement before us had been carried out Will Hays would still be the country's best Postmaster General.——— Frank Bacon plays character roles in Metro pictures.——— After "Lightning" all the money in the world didn't tempt him to the screen.——— Triangle Film looks like the best bet in the business.——— They have cornered the market with Griffith, Ince. Sennett.—Towards the end of the year Paramount starts a News Weekly.——— It wasn't mentioned in the following year's Christmas Edition.——— Essanay has signed Charles Chaplin.——— The young man is going up in the world.——— W. Edgar Shallenberger has so much money invested in Thanhouser and Mutual that he is coming into the picture business completely to look after it.——— As a result of good work in "The Lamb," his initial picture venture, Douglas Fairbanks has been offered a three year contract by Fine Arts, D. W. Griffith directing.——— Every time you turn to another volume of The World files some enterprising company has made a new version of "East Lynne."——— Some day that subject will be a big money-maker.———If America in 1915 had heeded the message of J. Stuart Blackton in "The Battle Cry of Peace" it might have been a different story in 1917.———President Fred Herrington, of the Exhibitors League, lists the evils confronting exhibitors: "First, the showing of pictures in saloons and cafes; Second, the showing of pictures in department stores; Third, censorship."———Two down, one to go!

WHEN Metro started, Marcus Loew was merely a good customer — maybe a kicking one — and little dreaming that some day he would be signing the title "President" himself and mailing the checks to the studio. But 1920 saw Marcus Loew determined to guarantee his own source of picture supply and the gigantic Loew-Metro combination was the result.

ONE of the quiet figures in the background of picture activity is William Atkinson, general manager of the Metro film activities. Mr. Atkinson is one executive in this business who is a real "organization product" for he has come up the ladder of importance with Metro and is of, for, and by Metro all the time. Cool, calm, and efficient — those are the words.

WHAT a lot of water has gone over the dam since the days when Fred Warren was writing the Goldwyn copy as shown at the right! ——— History places Goldwyn in the 1916 niche but we think they really deserve an honor post in 1923 as marking the beginning of work on "Ben Hur." ——— That's something picture men have been casting gloating eyes at in the seventeen years of this history and it remained for F. J. Godsol to turn the trick. ——— We have covered ten years of Moving Picture World history and J. H. Hallberg is still advertising in every issue.——— As he is this week. ——— Arthur Brisbane, speaking at a Board of Trade dinner tells us, "The success of the motion picture is based upon the stupidity of the human race."———Remember how sore that made us feel? ——— J. A. Berst, as president of Pathe, writes every exhibitor in the country urging help to pass a bill for Federal censorship. ——— Ouch! ——— Famous is boasting of its hundred and four a year and Adolph Zukor gets peeved about this "open booking" fallacy. ——— In a World interview he declares, among other things, "Open booking will prevent the building of new theaters as the investors will seek to determine whether they can keep open the entire year and the programme alone assures that." ——— That settles it. ——— Hearst establishes his own exchanges.——— The act opens and closes in one. ——— Charles Chaplin signs his million-dollar contract with Mutual and since then no star has ever been secured for less. ——— Famous Players and Lasky merge in the Summer and like the idea so well they take over Paramount in December.———Adolph Zukor casts an anchor to windward by starting Artcraft to handle Mary Pickford. ——— Rothafel opens the Rialto. ——— Wonder if the Times Square district isn't getting crowded, with the Strand and the Rialto in direct competition? ——— Al. Christie is on his own, releasing state rights, and everybody knows he'll be sorry he left that good job at Universal.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

December 30, 1916

ALIGNED in this new motion picture company are personalities that have been responsible for the biggest developments of the modern stage and screen.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, the President, was a founder of one of the first companies formed to produce feature films in which good taste and refinement were dominant. He has, from the beginning, been a factor in the production of better pictures and helped through forward and intelligent understanding to make motion pictures one of our greatest industries.

EDGAR SELWYN, the Vice-President, has, with ARCHIBALD SELWYN and CROSBY GAIGE brought the theatrical producing firm of Selwyn & Co. to the forefront in dramatic production. Their plays, their clientele of authors, their alertness and their code of business honor have made for them a position that is the envy of many older firms and the model for most of the newer ones.

ARTHUR HOPKINS, Vice-President, is one of the producers who, because of his creative ability and capacity, has been invited into this alliance. His knowledge of stagecraft gives him high rank at the start in the field of motion picture production.

MARGARET MAYO is the author of several of the most profitable plays in the history of the American stage and is also one of the ablest judges of plays in the theatrical profession. Her judgment and discerning vision are counted as great assets by this company.

Our advice to ALL EXHIBITORS is to watch and read the future announcements of this company with great care.

JIMMIE GRAINGER started "going after the money" back in the circus days when you often used both fists but could never fall down on showmanship. Today he "goes after the money" for Goldwyn which can't be such a hard job with the product he has had to talk about this season and the fact that there is no man in the field who boasts of more friends than that same Jimmie.

WE have dropped George Eastman's picture in here without regard to the calendar — just at random. Because it would be rather presumptuous to place the man whose development of celluloid film made the industry possible at any single spot in its history. Mr. Eastman has in many other ways shown a lively interest in the industry's development culminating in his magnificent Eastman Theater.

In Answering Advertisements Please Mention the MOVING PICTURE WORLD

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, at this time of Metro, let Petrova slip his corral to be grabbed by First National. ——— Luckily First National staged a game recovery. ——— The United States enters the war in April and it's a good man who can tell where this picture business will be in a few months. ——— Everybody is buying Liberty Bonds. ——— How many of yours are still in the safe? ——— The Admission Tax is slapped on theaters but it will probably be repealed before 1918. ——— Goldwyn, which started advertising in 1916, finally makes its first release "Polly of the Circus" in September, 1917. ——— Most of us are pretty sorry for Mark Dintenfass and the Warner boys who are going to try and make a picture out of Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany." ——— Even after its opening at the Knickerbocker the film folk say it's nothing but a news reel, but boy what it did for First National on release! ——— J. Stuart Blackton has left Vitagraph and announces that he will produce for Paramount. ——— What a lot of "Important Announcements" in these seventeen years never got any further than the press story! ——— A young lady named Marion Davies has left the cast of "Oh Boy" to try the pictures. ——— Somehow or other she survives that first, "Runaway Romany." ——— Edward McManus joins Paramount and "Who is Number One?" is announced. ——— Just watch Paramount show them how to handle serials! ——— Later: "Number One" is both first and last. ——— Chaplin so busy filing suits against imitators, reissues, and what nots that his initial First National is still on the way. ——— Bill Brady gets a letter from President Wilson and the industry feels a lot better about this war. ——— If you are not on some sort of war committee it's because the letter carrier couldn't find you. ——— The exhibitor convention in Chicago breaks up in a riot and Charlie Pettijohn says he will soon have the only real exhibitor organization. ——— "No politics!" is the slogan. ——— Still trying.

"R. A. ROWLAND, of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light and Film Company," is the way we first encounter Dick Rowland's name in the files of Moving Picture World. Then we follow the growth of Rowland and Clark; find the smiling Pittsburghian at the Metro helm when that forerunner of feature distributors was launched — and now we see him bring First National to the close of its greatest year.

THOMAS H. INCE isn't on this page because he releases many of his productions through First National, but because since the Kay Bee days of 1913 he has been an outstanding figure in picture making — holding consistently to a policy, seeing distributors come and go, but through it all maintaining the Ince individuality and the mammoth Ince organization. "An Ince Production" — that says a lot.

HODKINSON published the ad. on the right late in 1917 but it was 1918 before his new organization got under way. ——— The less said about Nineteen Eighteen the better. ——— Heatless Mondays, lightless nights, a drive for this and a drive for that, and finally "The Flu." ——— In October the producers decide to shut up shop completely. ——— Among the major fatalities is General Film, which breathes a silent prayer in memory of the Patents Company and fades away. ——— The Rivoli Theater opens and now we know Times Square is overseated. ——— Every company is announcing in spread heads that the jobs of men who go to war will be there when they get back. ——— Principal difficulty on return was that many of the companies had succumbed before the soldiers. ——— Hearst finally settles his news weekly worries. Starting with Selig, then shifting to Vitagraph, followed by Pathe, he at last merges with Universal. ——— "And they lived happily ever after." ——— Hiram Abrams and Benjamin Schulberg resign from Paramount to start in business for themselves. ——— They have a bright future. ——— Enrico Caruso becomes a screen star. ——— We are getting more important every year. ——— A heading says, "Five-cent Houses Passing in Portland." ——— A lingering death. ——— Frank Hall is going to show us how to distribute efficiently. ——— Later: "Jake" Ruppert decides to stick to baseball. ——— A press agent story says, "Marguerite Clark is fortunate in having in her support Thomas Meighan, who has been so successful playing opposite feminine stars." ——— If you haven't got a "Kaiser" title in your list you are out of luck. ——— United Picture Theaters is going to solve the exhibitor's troubles. ——— At so much per solution. ——— Gosh, how many cures of all evils we have encountered in this search through the files. ——— Sam Rothafel resigns as President of First National. ——— Got tired writing indorsements of Petrova pictures.

William W. Hodkinson

A motion picture distributing organization to be known as the
W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION is now being organized.

My own name is being used because the new company will stand for only those principles in the motion picture business to which I am willing to give my name.

Important connections have been made with quality producers. The first of these will be announced in next week's trade papers.

Wm. W. Hodkinson
1527 5th Ave., New York.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN — not now connected with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the lawyers tell us to add—dreamed a dream while selling gloves, brought Jesse Lasky around to his idea in 1915, and see what he has done since. Prominent in the developments that changed Paramount to Famous Players-Lasky, he later organized his own company, and now is found an independent producer of vision and courage.

W. W. HODKINSON — lone-handed fighter for a principle all his film life. First, way back in 1912 he told exhibitors in San Francisco that they could charge a dime and proved it; then he told Adolph Zukor that no distributor should be producer-controlled and left the Paramount organization which he had founded to prove it by starting one entirely his own. "Down to the Sea in Ships" was a bit of concrete evidence.

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION
Revolution!
The things that were and the things that are are good only to build upon. When present conditions become intolerable we must either throw them off or sink under their weight.
For years the motion picture industry has been bound by traditions and customs, by practices and methods that have not only outlived their usefulness but that have fostered the growth of many burdensome evils. These we are casting from us, and are embarking on an era of progress and prosperity that demands full freedom of action.
In protest against the antiquated and obsolete methods of distribution which hindered their giving of the best in their power, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, admittedly the four greatest individual producers of motion pictures, have cast off these shackles of yesterday and have organized to distribute their product on a basis that means absolute and complete independence for the exhibitor.
At Last—REAL Open Booking
United Artists Corporation, for the first time in the history of the industry, makes possible the booking of the supreme boxoffice attractions of the screen by the individual picture only.
Gone is the program, that relic of filmdom's dark ages, and its modern substitute, the star series. In their stead is the only sound basis on which an exhibitor can run his theatre—the booking of individual pictures on a standard of pure merit.
United Artists Corporation will deal with exhibitors by the single picture only. The booking of each release of each of the four producing units will constitute a separate and distinct transaction, so that at no time will there be any obligation that will prevent an exhibitor from running his own affairs in his own way, free from the dictates of those whose sole business it should be to serve him.
This is revolution, yes; but we are striking the blow for the exhibitor, not at him. We are tearing down a forest of dead wood and are planting in its place a new live growth whose fruit will be greater profits for the exhibitor and the full liberty in which to benefit by those profits.
OSCAR A. PRICE, President

D. W. GRIFFITH

"THE lunatics have taken charge of the asylum," declared a very prominent film man when the first news story appeared concerning the "Big Four." ——— And, gosh, how we laughed! ——— But that's a long, long time ago; and a lot of contracts have passed over Niagara since those words were spoken. ——— Incidentally, isn't that a neat piece of copy Paul Lazarus has on our left? ——— Wonder what's become of that well known film man William Gibbs McAdoo? ——— Nineteen Nineteen gave us United Artists but aside from that there are a number of things we would like to forget. ——— Realart. ——— F'rexample. ——— And we would not dare mention to Sam Rothafel the famous "Rothafel Unit Program." ——— Standing head in every issue for seventeen y ars: "Albany Reports Many New Incorporations." ——— Where do they all go to? ——— E. A. Eschmann, Minneapolis World Film Manager, gets a watch-fob on retiring from the Film Board presidency. ——— In December, 1923, he receives a wrist watch from the Pathe salesmen. ——— How's he going to use them both? ——— Good at collecting everything but golf cups. ——— The Capitol Theater opens on Broadway. ——— They'll starve to death; there isn't room enough for one thing, and it's too far uptown, for another. ——— A startling example of production waste is "The Miracle Man," on which months have been spent and over a hundred thousand dollars expended. ——— This production extravagance MUST stop. ——— Zukor acquires Mary Miles Minter and W. W. Irwin. ——— Judging from The World advertising pages it's pretty hard to decide whether to buy Triangle or World Film stock. ——— And in case of a tie there's National Theaters. ——— Sales managers will never forget the rental boosts that this year brought. ——— And a lot of exhibitors are wishing they had sold out while sitting on top of the world.

HIRAM ABRAMS sold newspapers in Portland, Maine; sold films in Boston; sold service as President of Paramount and then capped it all by selling masterpieces for unheard of grosses as head of United Artists. Hi Abrams is the epitome of selling genius, as Doug and Mary will attest, and an executive whose organization swears by him through thick and thin.

FROM almost the first issue of Moving Picture World we find George Kleine a consistent advertiser and equally consistently a factor of importance. In the early days George Kleine stood supreme as an importer and it may well be said that his "Quo Vadis" inspired American creators to feature work. Recently he has returned from semi-retirement to Ritz-Carlton Pictures.

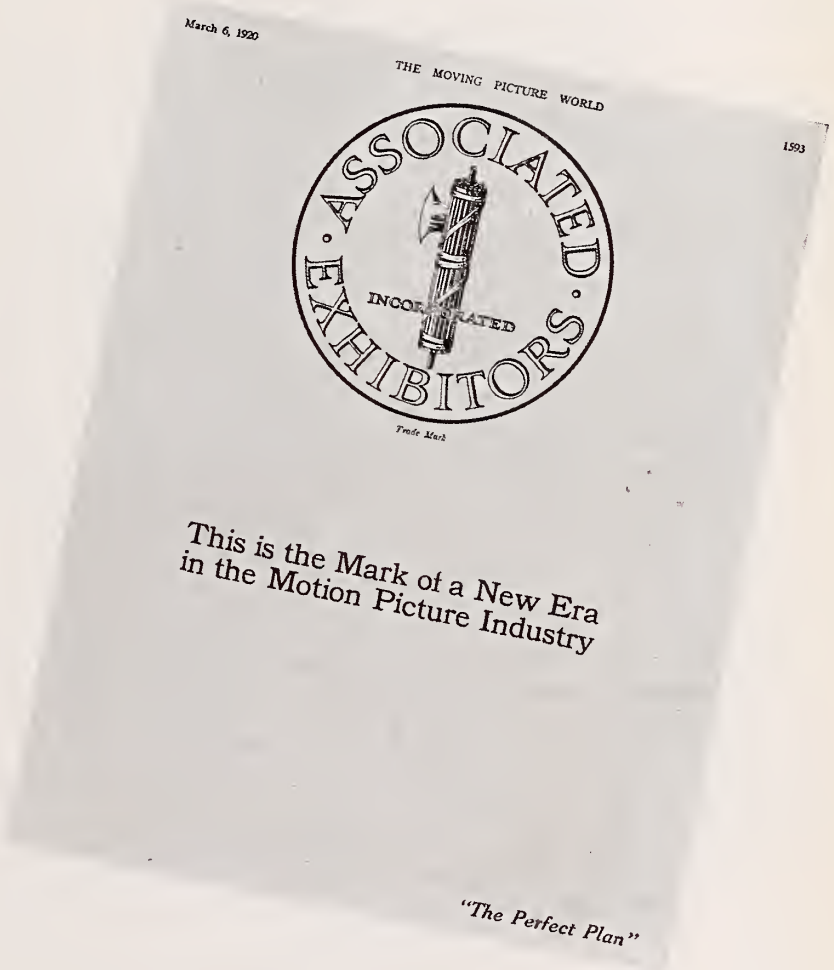
PERHAPS, as an historian, we should make no comments as to the copy on our right, but to tell the truth this is the 986th time that we have encountered a "new era" in the industry since Volume One, Number One. ——— Associated Exhibitors started out to sell franchises and sub-franchises but First National had beaten them to it early in the year with the slogan: "There'll Be a Franchise Everywhere." ——— Nothing lost, though, for when Arthur Kane took hold later he found dividends in straight picture selling. ——— Ought to be "extra dividends" this year with Jack Woody also on the job. ——— Nineteen Twenty saw the taking over of Metro by Marcus Loew. ——— Before "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" came along Marcus had almost reached the opinion that picture production had "taken" him. ——— A two page ad. from Carl Laemmle is headed "Notice to Crooked Producers." ——— Carl then goes on to pan the crooks who are trying to steal Erich Von Stroheim, who has just made "Blind Husbands." ——— Christie Comedies quit the state rights field to link up with Educational. ———First chapter in a happy story. ———Producer-owned theaters is the topic of the year. ——— Goldwyn has a humdinger ad. saying, "We won't buy theaters unless we have to, but if we HAVE to, look out." ——— Soon afterwards Godsol buys into The Capitol. ——— Cecil DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" starts a new title cycle. ——— It has been interesting to watch how the titles run in cycles over these seventeen years. ——— And it's a rash man who would bet money that any particular title has not been used before. ——— The Holiday Number in Nineteen Twenty finds the distributors trying to out-boast each other regarding the NUMBER of features they will release next year. ——— Times do change.



ARTHUR KANE, quiet and unassuming, just sits in the background and makes certain that the dividends are earned and paid. From Eclectic — a Pathe off-shoot for features in the early days — Arthur Kane later held the reins on the Selznick organization when that company enjoyed its most successful years — and they WERE successful. After Realart Mr. Kane took up personal work that led to his post as Associated Exhibitors chief.

SOMEONE once called J. D. Williams a "practical dreamer" and we guess that sums it up. We remember his dreams of bigger and better theaters that could control their own sources of product and saw the fruition in the organization of First National. After carrying that company through the storms and past the rocks he has in this year of 1923 embarked on his own with Ritz-Carlton and further "practical dreams" in the offing.

WE'D have to drop the Warner Brothers in on every page of this "page-a-year" record if we tried to do justice to their multitudinous picture activities, but we have compromised with history. ——— In the background on the left is a Warner ad. of the Nineteen Thirteen vintage, when the boys were two-fisted fighting Independents. ——— Every other issue of The World in those days found the Warners announcing the opening of a new exchange. ——— Finally they had to reproduce a map to list them all. ——— Overlapping the earlier advertisement is the one that started the latter day Warner climb. ——— Remember the surprise "Why Girls Leave Home?" handed all the wise folk? ——— Nineteen Twenty-One saw the worst of the post-war decline. ——— Wasn't that a tough year on the fellows trying to get Nineteen Twenty quotas? ——— The Arbuckle case didn't help, either. ——— W. W. Hodkinson finally decides that the way to get a thing done is to do it yourself so he opens his own exchange system. ——— R. A. Rowland resigns from Metro. ——— The interview says, "The only reason I have for leaving Metro is because of a desire to get into business for myself." ——— Whadayoumean? ———In July, 1921, Jesse Lasky declares, "Abnormal salaries, needless waste, 'banker's hours' must come to an abrupt end." ———The Long Island studios are closed down indefinitely as a means to the end. ———Write your own ticket. ——— If it hadn't been for William Fox and "Over the Hill" the year could just as well have been lifted off the calendar. ———How did they ever make up a list of "Ten Best Pictures" that year? ———Exhibitors Convention in Cleveland Results in Another Split. ———Keep that head in type.

WE have two of the Warner Brothers here — if we tried to run them all we'd need the page. But in Cleveland once we met one of the sweetest mothers that the Creator ever blessed—and we know the reason why it has always been "The Warner Brothers — One for All and All for One." Harry Warner is the brother who is presented on the left.

WARNER Brothers have done many big things in the picture industry — but it remained for 1923 to find them accomplishing a feat that had been attempted without success by practically all of our leading lights. Enlisting David Belasco in picture production was a fitting climax to a career that is unbreakably entwined with screen history. A. Warner on our right.

F. B. O., which made its first appearance with the advertisement on our right, is descended from one of our motion picture Mayflower families. ——— From Mutual to Exhibitors Mutual, then Robertson-Cole and finally F. B. O. ——— Growing younger every year. ——— Nineteen Twenty-Two sees the entry of Will Hays into the business and the discovery of those words "Confidence and Co-operation." ——— Preferred Pictures is established, with Ben Schulberg, Jack Bachmann and Al Lichtiman holding the reins. ——— And in all the years we have covered there hasn't been an infant organization that started out with such a high level of quality in its product. ——— That has been an interesting phase of this seventeen-year survey, to notice how practically every organization got off on the left foot as far as product went. ——— Preferred is the exception. ——— R. A. Rowland joins First National. ——— Many months and dozens of pencils used up trying to merge Goldwyn and First National. ——— It's all off. ——— Godsol buys "Ben Hur" rights for a reported million. ——— Back in 1911 Kalem made it in three reels, with the assistance of Paine's Fireworks display. ———Didn't bother to ask anybody's permission so the picture never saw release. ——— First National enters production. ——— That's another lesson of this history: In the end you have to do it yourself, whether it be exchanges or pictures. ——— Zukor is unloading the theaters that were causing all the talk in 1921. ——— What a lot of trade paper space could have been saved through the years if we could always see twelve months ahead.———Think we'll edit in the future with the files at our right hand, for Moving Picture World is: "Yesterday, Today, Forever."

To the Exhibitors of the World
THE statements that have been made—the adjectives that have been hurled—the prophecies that have been uttered—the expectations that have been aroused in the minds and hearts of thousands of film men in every city, town, village and hamlet in the country have not been in vain.
The picture that will uphold the reputation of the entire industry—that will give the public a new and bigger insight into the rare beauties of what fine pictures can accomplish in rare entertainment—the picture is here. . . . It's "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW" (an Emory Johnson Production) Directed by Dame Nature —God's own story of every town that dots America. . . . Speak to your nearest F. B O. Exchange Manager NOW and—
Keep your eye on F. B. O.
R-C Exchanges will hereafter be known as FILM BOOKING OFFICES of America

BACK of the remarkable strides taken by F. B. O. in the past year is a go-getter sales, advertising and exploitation policy that stands alone. It is in no small part due to the fact that Jos. Schnitzer climbed from the firing line — film selling. Joe was sales manager of Universal before embarking on Equity Pictures, later to take the helm at F. B. O.

TURN the pages of Moving Picture World for seventeen years and you find the name of Nicholas Power always present. So it would not be fair to complete even a surface-scratching of film history without presenting Edward Earl, who, for close on to ten years now, has sat in the post of authority for this company. Mr. Earl came from the banking field to enter our midst.

Pride

¶ Out of every great industry there has grown an organ that is flesh of that industry's flesh, soul of its soul.

Suffering as that industry suffers; prospering as its individuals prosper. Sharing the joys and tribulations, the progress and the set-backs, the conquests and the defeats of its industry. But, always, SHARING.

Living with its industry, but never on it; sometimes leading to the hazardous paths of ambition; never following along the highway of expediency; meeting Today's problems squarely, never compromising with Tomorrow for Today's unmerited gain.

An organ whose Memory encompasses the first yesterday, whose Vision is directed to the far horizon.

¶ These thoughts come to mind as we complete the preparation of this year's holiday feature: "Seventeen Years of Picture History as Seen Through the Pages of Moving Picture World."
Pardon us the gesture of pride.

We are making it as an individual, speaking of a third party. For our own humble person shrinks to insignificance in the structure that is Moving Picture World.

¶ Its beginnings deep-rooted in the industry's struggle for independence, Moving Picture World can face its seventeen-year story without an apology.

Mistakes have been made, it is true. Because Moving Picture World is as fallible as it is human. And it will ever be written that sincere courage errs while expediency temporizes.

Realizing always that the ultimate good of ANY branch of this industry is irrevocably bound up in the continuous well-being of ALL branches—Moving Picture World has at times disagreed with individuals, but never with conscience.

And if there be a page to list the honest mistakes—what glorious chapters record the achievements. To exhibitors, producers, distributors, may be left the testimony of aid rendered individuals, of contributions made to an industry's forward strides.

¶ I am proud to be a part of Moving Picture World; to be a part of that which is part and parcel of the motion picture industry.

I am proud to be the mouthpiece chosen by the moment to renew Moving Picture World's pledge of unswerving service to its industry.

Drinking the wine of Golden Memories we pledge that Nineteen Twenty-Four will not dim a record that bears no touch of tarnish.

This Week

John Flinn and Paul Mooney share the Personality news of the week. Both have acquired the "first of the year" urge and have decided to turn over new pages.

It's something of a shock to hear that John Flinn is resigning from Famous Players-Lasky. It seemed an inseparable combination. John holds an almost unique record of continuous service in important capacity with one organization. It must have been back in 1915 or so that the New York Herald lost him to Lasky; John later figuring as one of the assets in the Lasky-Famous-Paramount mergers.

John Flinn is taking up important executive work after the first of the year with—but, hold on, it isn't ready for announcement yet. But just as John's post is important you may count on it that the organization he joins is also, and will be more so, through his acquisition.

The ever-smiling Paul Mooney, who has been getting the money for Louis B. Mayer and making both exhibitors and distributor sales managers like it, is also "taking up important executive work with a prominent picture company." More anon.

If we were addicted to rumors we might mention Hodkinson prominently in this week's gossip, but———.

One of Bill Johnston's exhibitor readers has at last written a letter to his Congressman. That will help, Bill.

Among the Christmas wishes that have come to our attention:

Jerome Beatty says if his youngsters don't get snow for Christmas he may get sore enough to pack up and go back to California. This summer-like weather is no way to treat a loyal native son who has returned to the Eastern fold.

Harry Schwalbe says that about six "Ponjolas" and "Flaming Youths" next year will make the dollars and cents department of First National believe fully in Santa Claus.

Harry used to be able to smile even in the days when it was all going out to Chaplin and Joe Schenck and a little less coming in. You can imagine his jovial appearance as 1924 nears.

Al Lichtman is thinking of petitioning Santa or Uncle Sam to make a $1.65 coin. Great help to the exhibitors who are going to play "The Hunchback."

That stuff about cutting production cost is all off. The Southern California Jockey Club is going to hold a meeting near Los Angeles early in the year. Applications for bookmaking posts will be filled in the order of receipt—up to the first hundred thousand.

Mark Kellogg has been appointed to the advertising and publicity post at Associated First National, succeeding Bob Dexter.

Brother Kellogg comes from the general advertising field, having directed the advertising work of the Burroughs Adding Machine. Let us say here that if the house organ, dealer helps, and Satevepost copy of Burroughs are any criterion, the picture field has made an acquisition.

That goes double. We have it that Mr. Kellogg is also a "reg'lar feller." On the authority of Bob Dexter. There isn't any better.

Howard Dietz has a Christmas wish. "Hurry along that 'Ben Hur'," he says. "I want to show 'em something."

C. A. "Doc" Willat was a recent visitor to the office to tell us about the glories of Technicolor. The color sequence in "The Ten Commandments" tells it all in emphatic fashion.

Famous must feel the same way. Going to make a Zane Grey special entirely in Technicolor.

Rumors also that Famous is looking closely into the DeForrest talking pictures.

Everybody is seeking something besides million dollar sets to make 'em sit up next year. A good sign.

March 29th has been set as the date for the next "Naked Truth" dinner. A. M. Botsford will once more be chairman, a reward for efficient service.

Nat Rothstein has the habit of speed and zip so pronouncedly that he came across last week with his beautiful Holiday Greeting card. "The Mail Man" brought it.

A poor trade paper person can hardly get time to work these days with all the rumors that are afloat. Resignations here, acquisitions there—the pot a-boiling merrily. Watch for a lot of short and crisp items after the first of the year.

The boys are not running true to form, however. Going over The World files the other day, we found that ninety-nine out of every hundred men who resigned in the picture business did so because: "I have long contemplated going into business for myself, and now feel that the time is ripe for this departure," etc., etc.

Quite a number of our best known picture people are hanging their Christmas stockings in the lobby of Doc Gianinni's bank.

Our own Christmas wish:

May all your pictures be "Covered Wagons." Whether you make 'em, show 'em, talk about 'em, or sell 'em.

"On with the Music Fight" Ohio Exhibitors Tell Mills

SAM BULLOCK, field representative of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, addresses the following open letter to E. C. Mills, chairman, Advisory Board, American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers:

You are quoted in trade papers of this date as saying that the conferences inaugurated at Atlantic City between your society and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are now at an end. This is the first public intimation Ohio exhibitors have received that the "armistice" you officially asked for at Atlantic City is now declared off. As one who questioned you at some length at Atlantic City, after hearing your statement that you had full authority to act, it does not surprise me to learn of your decision as quoted in the trade papers.

Your agent at Cleveland has absolutely ignored your officially requested armistice of August 9, and from the moment I informed him of our "gentlemen's agreement," immediately upon my arrival from Atlantic City, he loaded the mails with even more insistent demands for so-called "liquidated damages" and returned many license fee checks to our members whom I had advised to pay the license and escape court action under the conditions you suggested when pleading for the armistice before the men who hesitated to give you an audience, but were afterwards impressed by your apparent sincerity.

We know we have a few members, though the number is negligible, who did not understand the joint notice sent out by your society and the M. P. T. O. of America, but we soon had each properly informed in Ohio.

On the contrary your Cleveland agent, while ignoring your armistice entirely at all times to my face, was writing your general manager, Mr. Rosenthal, beseeching him to "abrogate that Atlantic City agreement at once!" I now have the evidence. He played this game from August 13 to October 17, while gathering-in so-called "liquidated damages" despite his New York employers' orders, issued by you. His "damages," plus license fee, are seldom less than $100, a "fine" imposed by him! He persistently denied knowing anything of you or your authority while pleading by mail, "Please abrogate that agreement!" In spite of a partial knowledge of this on our part we kept the faith with your society in Ohio.

Your trade-paper statement is misleading, for while we did correct and control our few uninformed members in Ohio you failed miserably to control your one employe in Cleveland and, incidentally, the same in Cincinnati, though he has acted a little decently in comparison.

Your announced intention to pursue a more vigorous campaign than ever is welcomed by Buckeye exhibitors. Your quoted statement that "$125,000 in fines has been collected from 500 exhibitors" is all we needed to stiffen the backbones of Buckeye fighters. You will need every dollar of that for Ohio will never compromise.

Off with armistice! On with the fight!

Opens New Exchange

Edward Grossman, former special representative for Preferred Pictures, has opened an Exchange in Chicago at 808 S. Wabash Ave. called the Epic Film Attractions.

His first release is the Weiss Bros.' Super production "After Six Days" and will also distribute their series of one-reel classics.

Hodkinson Seeks Exhibitor Advice

Since exhibitors are probably in a position to know better than anyone else what kind of pictures the public wants, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is seeking their advice as to the type of "western" they desire to see Harry Carey appear in. The popular star has been signed up to make a series of six pictures for Hodkinson release and a questionnaire is being sent to ten thousand exhibitors throughout the country in order that they may give their impression of the public taste. They are asked to signify their choice of the character of the star, the location of the setting and the chief interest of the story.

"The Night Hawk," the first picture in the Harry Carey series, has been completed. Hunt Stromberg produced it.

Pictures Made Hits

Associated Exhibitors scored heavily in Cincinnati during the week of December 10 with first runs in two of the leading theatres of the city. Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" was the feature at the Strand, while "The Destroying Angel," one of Leah Baird's 1923 Specials, was the offering at the Palace.

Film Is Started

Emory Johnson and his company, featuring Mary Carr and Johnnie Walker, have been busy for several days at Santa Barbara, California, shooting exterior scenes for the next Johnson production for F. B. O.

Members of the company motored to Santa Barbara last Sunday and made arrangements to stay a week. Mr. Johnson was accompanied by his talented mother, Emilie Johnson, who will assist her son in filming the production.

The title and theme of the Johnson picture are being temporarily withheld.

Avoid Post Mortems, Says Pelley by Having Exhibitor Viewpoint

CAN much of the high cost of producing pictures be eliminated by "shooting the piece" on paper and selling exhibitors on a given story plot before the first set is built or the camera turned for the first "take?"

William Dudley Pelley believes that it can and is backing his belief with American dollars. During the past two years Pelley has been selling his screen dramas at the rate of one every three weeks by a novel sales system. With the original intention of bidding for quick decisions from reading staffs, he not only placed the whole synopsis of a play he was offering for sale in a small, handy circular, but went somewhat into cost of production, theme, cast and audience appeal. As a result, his system not only brought handsome returns, it is said, but warrants him in going a step further in 1924.

Installing a complete printing plant in New York City with linotypes and two-color presses, on January 1 he is starting an art and exploitation department.

William A. Pause, the film artist, formerly of the Paramount and Goldwyn organizations, will give all his time to Pelley productions after the first of the year. Charles E. Wagner, formerly of Pathe, will edit press books to be issued as each play is offered producers, and also take charge of a weekly newspaper, "The Screen Showman," which will be a house organ sent to exhibitors who play Pelley's dramas giving them the smartest dope obtainable on how to make Pelley dramas box-office successes. Several other professional exploitation men from other organizations are also going with Pelley after January 1.

Pelley says he intends to "play the producers and exhibitors game" to the utmost of his ability and demonstrate in his elaborae press-books and circularizations how Pelley stories hold exploitation values they cannot afford to ignore.

At the present time Bill Pelley has five screen dramas in course of production to be released shortly in addition to "The Fog," "Her Fatal Millions" and "The Shock," all of which are now going big. The five include: Tom Mix in "Ladies to Board" by Fox; "Courtin' Calamity" with Hoot Gibson by Universal; "Torment" with Owen Moore directed by Maurice Tourneur for First National; "Crimes Against Criminals" for the U. S. Department of Justice, and "What Women Love" to be made by Richard Thomas Productions in the Powers Studio on the Coast.

C. B. C. Picture Debut

"Forgive and Forget" Well Received at Premiere in Philadelphia

"Forgive and Forget," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation production, had its premiere at the Stanley Company's Karlton Theatre in Philadelphia, last week.

The Public Ledger said: "It has many gripping scenes which appeal to lovers of pictures." The Evening Ledger said: "For those who crave excitement there is plenty in 'Forgive and Forget' to keep them in suspense." The Inquirer stated: "A story that could be told about many present-day homes. It is a picture that is replete with action."

The Record said: "Pauline Garon and Estelle Taylor are pleasant to look at and act as though humor and tragedy cause some animation." The North American said: "'Forgive and Forget' should please. It is well acted."

Latin-Americans Wideawake; Know and Want Best Pictures

THAT the public in the Latin-American countries appreciates and demands good motion pictures is the report brought to New York by Max Ehrenreich, who has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he acted as general sales representative in South American for United Artists.

Mr. Ehrenreich said he found South Americans thoroughly acquainted with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith. These stars are just as well known in the small, interior towns of the Latin-American countries as they are in every village and hamlet in the United States, he said.

"The South American public know who these picture stars are," said Mr. Ehrenreich, "just as well as our own public here. Their pictures are known and appreciated for just what they—the biggest pictures made. 'Tess of the Storm Country,' 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' and 'One Exciting Night' are the pictures that are all the rage now throughout the South American states. And these releases are all popular, whether they be shown in the larger coast cities or the smaller interior towns.

"I found the Latin-American generally an exceptionally well educated people. They know good pictures and demand the best and are not satisfied unless they have the best. They are quick to note defects in the ordinary picture and equally quick to see and appreciate the better qualties in such pictures as United Artists productions.

"Exhibitors I came in contact with, and there were many in all sorts of cities and towns, are almost without exception men of high calibre. They are shrewd, intelligent buyers of film, study the wants and the needs of their patrons and make every reasonable effort to cater to those demands. They have good theatres and keep them clean and well ventilated, and seem all the time to have the comfort of their public well in mind.

"When a salesman sells a picture to the Latin-American exhibitor and the contract is signed, the salesman can rest assured that the contract is going to be lived up to in every particular, and that he will be given a play-date without trouble.

"Another thing I found in connection with the theatres is that many of the larger and better class houses have a removable roof arrangement, so that on pleasant evenings they become airdomes, and the public sits comfortably out-of-doors and sees the picture. The musical program is another thing that gets a good deal of attention. Latin-Americans all love good music, and exhibitors go the limit in catering to this taste and satisfying this demand. In all the larger houses there are big and well-trained, well-conducted orchestras—orchestras that would be perfectly at home in almost any Broadway theatre."

"The White Sister" Soon to be Released Nationally by Metro

MARCUS LOEW, in announcing that Metro Pictures Corporation will release "The White Sister," the Inspiration picture produced by Henry King, states that the film will be given to exhibitors at once, in order that they may benefit from the national publicity gained for "The White Sister."

"In immediately releasing 'The White Sister' to exhibitors everywhere, Metro feels that it has accomplished a coup that will be eagerly welcomed by the trade," said Mr. Loew. "I consider this the most beautiful production ever made. Miss Lillian Gish gives one of the most remarkable performances I have seen—undoubtedly the finest of her career—and I have the deepest admiration for Henry King's directorial genius and for Mr. Charles H. Duell, Jr., whose vision made 'The White Sister' possible. I know that the picture will be a big money-maker for exhibitors. It has proven that by its great success at advanced admission prices."

Charles H. Duell, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., in commenting on Metro's distribution of "The White Sister," declared that the contract signed with Metro "comes as the culmination of two years of continued labor on the photoplay."

"We recall," Mr. Duell said, "how a little group of forward looking men and women began planning the creation of a photoplay which would not only entertain but would elevate. Almost two years ago they instituted a search for a story, a star and a director, to be combined in a film that would embody perfection in acting, beautiful settings, and powerful drama.

"They chose 'The White Sister,' F. Marion Crawford's immortal story of eternal love, and they selected as the star Miss Lillian Gish, the screen's greatest artiste because of her ability to portray a role demanding absolute mastery of the art of photoplay acting."

Shipman in Florida

Ernest Shipman, head of Ernest Shipman, Inc., is having a good time down in Florida. Incidentally, according to a note reaching the office, Mr. Shipman apparently has very little more to view in the land of the fountain of youth. In a single day he drove 475 miles, during the course of which he made quite a few speeches and was tendered royal receptions.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder"

The Public's Voice Demands Diversified Entertainment

By E. W. HAMMONS
President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

THE end of the year is, and should naturally be, a time for predictions on the coming year, and for a review of the year just drawing to a close. Probably no year in the history of the business has been so significant as 1923. In it production reached a peak never before gained; the reaction from this over-production came with the subsequent curtailment of activities, and finally the settling down to a safe and saner basis. The new year will profit by the mistake of the old. Therefore, it is safe to predict saner production schedules, saner marketing methods and greater prosperity for all.

The short subject, on which the industry was founded, and which for a time has been slighted because of the deluge of over-long features, will undoubtedly again assert itself as an indispensable part of the program. Features of eight, nine and ten thousand feet and upward crowded the short subject from the screens in many theatres; the reaction will be as certain and as emphatic as that which followed over-production.

The public has voiced its objections to the lengthy "padded" pictures which prevent the presentation of a diversified program of high entertainment value. The public has spoken and its voice has been heard. How it will be heeded, the coming year will bring forth.

But it will be heeded if the exhibitor adds his voice and weight to the demand that features be curtailed to a length that will allow him to build a program of real entertainment—a program composed of a feature and surrounded with a variety of short subjects, a program that lends individuality to the theatre and gives the owner or manager an opportunity to show his program building and showmanship abilities, the qualities which made the largest theatres in the country possible and enabled them to hold their patronage because of the diversity of their programs.

The diversified program is the constructive way to build a picture theatre into an institution that will enjoy constant attendance and constant prosperity. The picture house cannot be compared with the legitimate theatre, where the house is rented on a guaranteed so-much-per-week basis, the owners taking their profit from the rental from the property rather than from the profits of the show; the picture theatre must make its profits from its steady, continuous patronage, built up and held by the presentation of well balanced, diversified, entertaining programs which make the theatre an institution rather than the temporary abode of some over-length feature which constitutes an entire program. When the picture house reaches this ideal state, when it has become an institution, recognized in the community as the home of diversified entertainment, the business of exhibiting pictures will be stabilized; the gamble will be removed and steady prosperity will be the reward of the exhibitor.

But this ideal state will not come without pressure from the exhibitor. Emphatic protest to the makers of the over-long, padded features alone will bring it about. And I predict that the coming year will not close without the exhibitor realizing and employing this method of bringing about the solution of a condition that now menaces his future existence and his prosperity.

Hodkinson November Drive Set High Record in Total Sales

THE November Sales Drive conducted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through its branch exchanges for November, came to a close in a blaze of glory. The drive is being continued throughout December, with every branch sales manager and individual salesman keyed to the highest pitch, in the race to compete for the substantial cash prizes that are being warded.

Ben Weisenbach, who covers southern Wisconsin out of the Chicago branch office, and S. W. Whitehead, of the Los Angeles branch, were the largest individual prize winners, each running first in total volume of business and in the number of features sold. Each has received a check for his efforts. Mrs. Anna Sessions, branch sales manager for New Orleans and Atlanta, carried away the honors in her division, both in volume of business and in branch exchange collections, while Irving Hanover, of the New York exchange, stood first in the total amount of business for the eastern division.

Philadelphia won first honors for the branch exchange with greatest collections in the eastern division; Chicago won the record for the central division, Los Angeles for the western division and New Orleans the southern division.

Cash prizes totaling $3,000 were distributed for the month, and there will be a similar distribution for the best business collections for December.

Cobb After "Cribbers"

N. Y. Chieftain Corralling Unauthorized Films with "Lifted" Numbers

According to George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, the exhibitors of that state are living up to the censorship law, and with but few exceptions no attempts are being made these days to evade its provisions. Chairman Cobb had a conference during the past week with Governor Alfred E. Smith. According to Mr. Cobb, a drive is now being made in New York city against some foreign motion picture film producers.

"We have already obtained several convictions in cases of this character," said Mr. Cobb. "The pictures exhibited have never been authorized and in many cases the numbers of other licensed film have been stolen from pictures not being used at the present time. The state not only loses money through such transactions, but many pictures are being shown which would never have been permitted had they been inspected by the Commission.

New Distribution Deal

Grand-Ascher's "By Divine Right" to Go Through F. B. O.

The Film Booking Offices announce that it will handle the distribution of "By Divine Right," the first production made by the Grand-Ascher organization starring Elliott Dexter and Marion Harris.

The production was made at the Grand-Ascher studios in Hollywood under the direction of William Neal and carries an all-star supporting cast including De Witt C. Jennings, Anders Randolf, Grace Carlisle, Sidney Bracey, Hazel Deane and baby Jeanne Carpenter. The story has been adapted to the screen by Florence Hein from Adam Hull Shirk's novel, "The Way Men Love."

"By Divine Right" offers, it is said, many unusual exploitation possibilities which Nat G. Rothstein and his staff are now working on.

Completion of Big New Plant Technicolor's 1924 Gift

RAPIDLY expanding because of its achievement of practical motion pictures in natural color, the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation has just opened a new, large laboratory in Boston. The new building is a solid monument to the success of those men who for years have concentrated intensely on the perfection of the process. The structure is the last word in laboratory efficiency, embodying all of the good points of the best equipped "black-and white" laboratories together with those technical features peculiar to Technicolor alone.

Proof that motion pictures in natural color are practical for general release was forthcoming late last year, when Metro released the Technicolor production, "The Toll of the Sea." This feature already has played more than 4,000 theatres, and at a convention of Metro managers this Summer the general report was that not one of the 4,000-odd exhibitors who had played it had an adverse criticism of the Technicolor process as embodied in "The Toll of the Sea."

Further indications of the practicability of Technicolor are the facts that Famous Players-Lasky have contracted for an entire production in color—a picturization of Zane Grey's story, "The Wanderer of the Wastelands"; Rex Ingram also has expressed a desire to do pictures in Technicolor, according to their announcement, and Cecil De Mille thinks so much of it that an important sequence in "The Ten Commandments" is in Technicolor.

The Technicolor development was originally financed by a syndicate of Boston men headed by William H. Coolidge, well known for his financial leadership of various large and successful enterprises.

In 1920, William Travers Jerome, former District Attorney of New York, began to take an increasingly active interest in the development. Soon thereafter Marcus Loew, Nicholas Schenck and Joseph Schenck became associated with the enterprise.

Today the company is controlled by Mr. Jerome and his associates, through a holding company—Technicolor, Inc., the Board of Directors of which consists of Eversley Childs, President Bon Ami Company, President; William Hamlin Childs, Loew's, Inc.; James C. Colgate, of James B. Colgate & Co., Trustee of N. Y. Trust Co.; William H. Coolidge, of Coolidge & Hight, lawyers; Job E. Hedges, Receiver of N. Y. Railways Co.; Alfred Erickson, President, the Erickson Co.; Alfred Fritzsche, Gen. Sales Manager, the Grinnell Co., Inc.; William Travers Jerome; Herbert T. Kalmus, President Kalmus, Comstock & Westcott, Inc.; Marcus Loew; T. Pulsifer, Valentine & Co.; Nicholas Schenck and Thomas W. Slocum, Trustee, Equitable Life Assurance Society.

The early history of Technicolor ran parallel to that of other great developments. The difficulties were enormous and were not only along scientific but also engineering lines—practical and financial.

The Boston firm of engineers, Kalmus, Comstock & Westcott, Inc., already well known for their other developments in chemical and physical industry, have from the start been employed as engineers by the Technicolor Company, and its process has been entirely developed by them.

The senior members of this firm have been the two principal leaders of the Technicolor development, namely, Herbert T. Kalmus, Ph. D., and Daniel F. Comstock, Ph. D., both formerly professors at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Through Mr. Kalmus' executive leadership the enterprise has avoided the many pitfalls into which so many new developments have fallen. Mr. Kalmus is now president of the Technicolor Company. Mr. Comstock has been the principal inventor and has directed the scientific work from the start.

A. C. ("Doc") Willat, well known in the motion picture industry for many years, was the first motion picture man to realize the importance of the Technicolor development. Mr. Willat had always made it a business to keep in close touch with the various attempts at color in motion picture photography. He had studied all of the various embryonic processes and as early as 1914 made the announcement that the Technicolor system was the only one which had commercial promise. He became associated with the development about that time and has been intimately involved with it ever since. He is now the company's California manager.

In carrying out this long and difficult development the following members of the firm of Kalmus, Comstock and Wescott, Inc., have rendered invaluable service: Leonard T. Troland, Ph., D., graduate of Institute of Technology and Harvard, and President of the Optical Society of America; Eastman A. Weaver, graduate of the Institute of Technology, and one of the foremost color experts in the country; Joseph A. Ball, graduate of the Institute of Technology and now Director of Photography; J. M. Andrews, "black-and-white" cinematograph expert, now Technicolor Positive Plant Manager, and W. B. Westcott, mechanical engineer.

The present Technicolor process may be briefly outlined as consisting of the following steps:

(1) Preparation of a new, uniquely high-speed color negative for use in the camera;

(2) Taking of two component pictures in the camera, one through a red-orange-yellow screen and the other through a green-blue screen. These pictures are taken at exactly the same time from exactly the same point of view.

(3) The preparation of a positive film having one of these pictures on one side and the other picture on the other side in accurate automatic register.

(4) The coloring of this positive film with a red-orange-yellow dye on one side and a green-blue dye on the other side in such a way that the dyes are taken up by the film in proportion to density of the two images.

It will be noticed that the colors, red-orange-yellow, include one whole half of the spectrum, and the colors green-blue include practically all of the remainder.

To Finish Film Soon

Harold Lloyd plans to complete camera work on his first independent production, "The Girl Expert," before the Christmas holidays. "The Girl Expert" is being directed by Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor from an original story by Taylor, Ted Wilde and Tim Whelan, with Tommy Gray now assisting in the "gag" department.

TECHNICOLOR MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION'S LARGE LABORATORY JUST OPENED IN BOSTON

Elimination of Waste Must Mark 1924 Producing Programs

WITH the producing activities of 1924 must come the elimination of waste in the making of films if we are to cut down the high production costs which curtailed producing the past fall," says M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios in Hollywood.

"Just what is and what is not waste in motion picture producing is something that can be argued until the end of all things. If time and money are wasted in the literal sense of the word, and through this apparent waste a situation or an idea is made possible that greatly helps to put over the picture, then that is not a waste after all. What to the hardened business man may at times seem waste, may in reality be the source of a great creation on the part of the artist.

"In a business where intangible factors that go to make up the product are necessary, such as in the making of motion pictures, it is impossible to entirely eliminate waste. In an enterprise where weather conditions must be gambled with, where personalities play such an important part in the quality of the product, and where artistic creations become part of the selling values, there will continue a certain amount of waste.

"However, there are various physical factors that contribute to the success and production costs of pictures. Any waste resulting through the misjudgment or mishandling of these physical properties is inexcusable.

"There is no reason why a company should start shooting and then lay off for days while the director plans other scenes. There is no reason why a player should be placed on a salary and then kept idle for weeks before he starts actual work. Nor is there any excuse for the building of sets at the eleventh hour necessitating overtime work on the part of hundreds of men—and then having that set lay unused for days.

"In the production of Maurice Tourneur pictures, for instance, the entire working schedule is laid out before a single scene is shot. Players start work when they go on salary and stop with the conclusion of their actual engagement. We can tell a week in advance on what day certain sets will be photographed and on what day location trips will be made. This and other information we have on hand before we start shooting a scene just as a builder has his complete plans figured out before he starts laying a foundation.

"Producers adopting these methods are eliminating waste as much as it can be eliminated in this business. This, however, requires facilities and organization which, as far as the average independent producer is concerned, are not always at his command. A great many independent producers start shooting before they know what the shooting is all about.

"The institution that has at its disposal the services of an organization and the facilities to handle the business end of producing for the independent producer will save money not only for the producer but for the distributor and the exhibitor as well, for they all must share in the costs made at the source."

Holiday Greetings

There has been and is an increasing recognition, on the part of those who make pictures and those who show them, of the importance of the film and the screen in the everyday life of the American people.

There has been and is an increasing appreciation, on the people's part, of the finer type of pictures which we are trying whole-heartedly to produce and display for them. Such genuine efforts for service, with such encouragement, cannot fail of success, with the accompanying rewards of success.

This is the record of 1923. 1924 must and shall bring still further endeavor and still greater success.

To all those men and women of the industry who are giving their best in this great service, I extend the fullest gratitude, with the wish that their Christmas may be a happy one, and the hope that the New Year may bring to them the amplest measure of attainment and satisfaction.

WILL H. HAYS.

Famous Song Filmed

Carl Anderson's First Release Is "After The Ball"

Carl Anderson has announced his first release for the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, "After the Ball," written by Charles K. Harris and founded on his world-famous ballad of a generation ago. James Colwell prepared the scenario from the Harris song hit, and Dallas Fitzgerald directed the production.

"After the Ball" is the last picture produced by the late H. J. Reynolds, president of the Renco Film Company. His other pictures include a number of successes current during the past two years. The leading parts in "After the Ball" are taken by Gaston Glass, Miriam Cooper, Edna Murphy and Robert Frazier.

It is doubtful if any popular song ever enjoyed the long popularity accorded "After the Ball." It has been nearly thirty years since J. Aldrich Libbey first sung it on the concert stage, and although in that time more than 8,000,000 copies have been sold, the Harris office reports a steady demand for it today.

Films Aid Business

Government Finds They Enhance America's Reputation Abroad

Considerable work of value to the moving picture industry was performed during the fiscal year ended June 30, last, by the Specialties Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, according to the annual report of Director Klein, just made public. One of the most important activities of the division during the year was the sending out of a questionnaire to a number of the bureau's foreign representatives, regarding the character of American films shown in various districts. This questionnaire, it is stated in the report, was sent out because of various rumors that some of the films exhibited in foreign countries were injuring the reputation of American business. To the contrary, it was found, the great majority of moving pictures have been important factors in stimulating American goods abroad.

During the year a statistical table was compiled showing the number of picture theatres in various foreign countries, with figures as to seating capacity, population of the towns and other details. This table was of considerable value to producers and distributors, and during the coming year it is planned to amplify much of the information contained therein, as well as to obtain new information which was not available at the time the table was compiled.

Keaton Picks New Lead

Kathryn McGuire, who has been playing leading roles in big productions, has been selected by Buster Keaton to be his leading lady in his next feature length Metro comedy for Metro. Miss McGuire has had a thorough training in comedy values and also in straight dramatic roles, both of which she has been playing right along.

Retitle Carey Film

The title of the first Hunt Stromberg stellar production, starring Harry Carey, has been changed from "High Dawn" to "The Night Hawk." It will be released by Hodkinson in February.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER
President, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company

Slump Period Is Bonanza to Rothacker; Big Foreign Plan

By TOM WALLER

THESE last few months, which outwardly have marked the crisis of slumps so far experienced by the industry, have established, peculiar though it may seem, just an opposite precedent for the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. A twenty-four hour day for seven days a week, and even at that not sufficient working time, has boomed this company, during the cloudiest period of moviedom, to today and the greatest business it ever conceived. The prospects for the ensuing year are not illusionary affairs, but contracts piled high; so high that Watterson R. Rothacker, according to William S. Gill, sales manager in New York, is hurrying plans for the erection of subsidiary plants in Manhattan and London.

Originating in 1910, the Rothacker concern, the pioneer of the business, promises next year this time to be the biggest institution of its kind on the globe. The main unit at Hollywood and the general offices in Chicago have found it imperative from time to time in the past year to increase their payroll. Now, this company employs about 700 experts to carry on its work of developing films and making prints. Modern to the minute is the equipment used in the Hollywood plant. In fact, Mr. Gill says, many of these employes have contributed much in a scientific way, making possible the skilled methods in vogue.

Plans for the laboratory unit in London are already completed, while those for the one in New York are at present under serious contemplation.

Work on the London branch will probably commence in the spring or at a time when the English tax problem is less burdensome. Bit by bit the tax is being lightened and the prospects for heavy revenue on the incoming of American films are decreasing.

Mr. Rothacker, who effected negotiations while in London last August, foresees, Mr. Gill remarks, a wonderful future for his potential plant across the water. This unit will commence operation primarily to accommodate American companies on foreign locale. As is generally known, Mr. Gill adds, developing concerns in Europe are far inferior to those of this country; so much so that they are believed to have disheartened many a producer who would otherwise have packed his camera and troupe to the true scene of the scenario. With developing facilities over there as adequate and efficient as they are here, Mr. Gill, who is intimately acquainted with the old world, particularly because of his service as a war correspondent for a big news organization, can prophesy with authority what Europe holds for the American producer as a field for locale.

Just as much as in the respect that it will be a real and profitable accommodation for Americans, Mr. Gill believes this unit, novel to England for its completeness, will be an inspiration to European film men. The Rothacker plant in London will be of a proportionate size to accept business from the entire overseas country, said Mr. Gill, who stated that Mr. Rothacker at present, at least, has under contemplation no plans for other European units.

With the opening of the foreign plant, men trained at Hollywood in the technique of film development and prints will be sent to London. Every device used in the Rothacker augmentary there will be American made.

District Heads Meet

F. B. O.'s Western District Sales Managers "Talk Things Over"

District Sales Managers of the Film Booking Offices, from the territories east of the Rocky Mountains, held their first get-together meeting at the home office, last Sunday, at which plans were outlined for a mammoth sales and advertising campaign on F. B. O.'s forthcoming "Big Four" releases, which include: "The Mailman," "By Divine Right," "The Lullaby" and "Judgment of the Storm."

The meeting was presided over by H. M. Berman, general manager. Those who attended were: Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director; Lee Marcus and Al Boasberg, of the home office; "Cleve" Adams, Middle West division manager; Max Weisfeldt, Minneapolis and district manager in the Northwest; J. Safron, Philadelphia; A. R. Cherry, Pittsburgh; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis.

At the same time another get-acquainted convention was being held in San Francisco, attended by all the branch managers in the inter-mountain territory, at which the new Western Division manager, A. A. Schmidt, was introduced to the managers by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president, who is visiting the West Coast in the interest of production and distributing matters.

Charles Chaplin Lauded

San Francisco Critics Hail Chaplin's Directing as Truthful and New

"A satisfying picture; a different picture; a new picture built along entirely new lines, a picture for which we should be thankful," said the reviewer for the San Francisco Chronicle when Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris," a United Artists release, opened at the California and Granada theatres in a day and date engagement.

"Absorbingly interesting," said the Examiner. "A grim narrative along truthful lines with fascination in the telling." "A picture that warrants being seen more than once," wrote the critic for the Bulletin.

"'A Woman of Paris' will be seen time and time again by the more discriminating of picture lovers," said the reviewer for the News.

New Year Fosters Great Things for Independents, Says Cohen

ONLY through the encouragement of the independent producer does Sydney S. Cohen see further development and prosperity of the industry. Slumps like the present will be the same in the new year, he prophesies, unless the picture-going public is augmented by a few of the millions of stay-aways; and such augmentation will be instituted by shorter and more vital reels, thus making opportune the introduction of snappier and more diversified programs. As to the elimination of that obnoxious drag of the moment—the Admission Tax—Mr. Cohen is silently confident, with unanimous exhibitor co-operation, of its repeal.

The committee which will arrange for the fullest co-ordination and co-operation of all the forces in the industry to fight for the repeal, includes: R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis, Mo.; C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; E. W. Collins, Jonesboro, Ark.; Martin G. Smith, Toledo, O.; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles, Cal.; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Joseph W. Walsh, Hartford, Conn., and Sydney S. Cohen, ex-officio.

Reduction of footage and elimination of padding will rehabilitate and energize many features of today which are tedious and boring, Cohen observes. As to short subjects, lots of them; and then watch for the surprising increase in the box office line-up, says Cohen.

"The exhibitors and the public cannot absorb the cost of some of these lavish superfeatures. Big round numbers mean nothing in the advertisement to the populace and if, instead of drawn out social stuff and too realistically expensive sets, there was a good, strong plot, simply and truthfully and briefly portrayed, the public would be satisfied, the exhibitor would make money and the distributor and producer would profit in their turn by wider distribution."

During the new year Mr. Cohen looks forward to closer contact between the industry and the government, thus the screen will aid in developing many noble public service activities until the point is reached where filmdom will have the sympathetic support of officialdom.

1924 to Be Biggest Year in Principal Pictures' History

THAT 1924 is going to be the biggest productive year since the beginning of Principal Pictures Corporation, is the firm conviction of Sol Lesser, president of that organization.

"Fling wide the gates!" This seems to be the slogan of the Principal Pictures plant and studios on the West Coast. With the recent slump in production drawing to a close, the Principal Pictures studios were among the first to reopen activities with vim. Every available square foot of ground and studio space within the seventeen acres of our Hollywood plant will be utilized throughout the forthcoming season, says Lesser.

Baby Peggy has already commenced the first of her super-features, "Captain January." It will be in full feature length and will be but one of a series of four for the first year. Edward F. Cline is in charge of the direction of this series. The second Harold Bell Wright production, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," is another big production to be given the screen during the coming year. This and two more Wright pictures will be made. "Secrets of Life," the Louis Tolhurst series of microscopic pictures, will also be in full operation. Twelve of these educational and amusement pictures are scheduled.

In addition, there will be made a series of films adapted from well known books and stage plays. Chief among these are John Cort's famous musical success, "Listen Lester," and Owen Davis' footlight hit, "Fools of Fortune." The best known players will be engaged to participate in these offerings and the services of the best available directors will be utilized. Two directors are now under the Principal banner. They are William Beaudine and William Seiter. Edward F. Cline is already well under way on the Baby Peggy series.

"For 1924," says Sol Lesser, "I can see an epoch of Westerns. By this I naturally mean Westerns of the highest class in every sense of the word. They will take the place of the costume plays that have been on the screen for the past two years or more.

"The amusement seeking public does not care for deep plot in picture presentation any longer. The time is ripe and the fans are awaiting pictures that contain intimate drama, action, detail, light and shade in touch. The $2 attraction is fast giving way and I predict that during the forthcoming season only an occasional $2 picture will be a profitable investment. The public have been educated to attend a picture in a picture theatre and that education has been indelibly stamped in their minds. They want to witness picture presentation in picture theatres."

Cosmopolitan Ball Tremendous Success from Every Viewpoint

By C. S. SEWELL

FROM every standpoint, the Cosmopolitan Ball held at the Hotel Plaza, New York, Friday evening, December 14, made good the promises of its sponsors and takes rank as one of the most successful amusement affairs since the birth of the motion picture industry.

The purpose of this entertainment and ball was to raise money for the Marion Davies Christmas Fund for Disabled Soldiers, and the whole-hearted response of the industry and its friends resulted in an attendance that taxed to the utmost the capacity of the Plaza's large ballroom and which included distinguished people of the amusement world, army, navy and society. $15,108.99 was raised for this most worthy cause and every dollar received from the sale of tickets was free and clear for the fund, as Miss Davies paid the entire expenses. This sum will be used under the direction of Gen. F. T. Hines, head of U. S. Veterans' Bureau for disabled veterans in hospitals in New York and Saranac.

Following a couple of hours of dancing an entertainment known as the "Midnight Frolic" was provided, which was unique in many respects and alone was worth many times the admission fee. An aggregation of stage talent of the very highest quality, consisting of stars from current theatrical attractions, provided entertainment for about two hours, after which dancing began again and lasted for several hours. The music was provided by the celebrated orchestra from the Palais Royale led by Paul Whiteman himself and by Wheeler Wadworth's Band. And in addition to all this the hearts of the fans were gladdened by the presence of a number of stars including Thomas Meighan, Hope Hampton, Marion Davies and others.

As an example of the kind of entertainment provided in the "Midnight Frolic," three of New York's leading orchestra leaders rendered Victor Herbert's "A Kiss in the Dark." Vincent Lopez was at the piano, Victor Herbert played the cello and Paul Whiteman played a violin.

Among the other artists who entertained the guests were Donald Brian, Maurice and Hughes, Hal Forde and Lieut. Gitz-Rice, Helen Shipman from "Topics of 1923," Fanny Brice from "Ziegfeld Follies," Frank Fay from "Artists and Models," Ann Pennington and Brooke Johns from "Ziegfeld Follies," Oscar Shaw and Louise Groody from "One Kiss," Little Old New York Girl from "Ziegfeld Follies," John Steele from "Music Box Revue," Jessie James Boys Band and Chorus from "Little Jessie James," Florence Moore from "Music Box Revue," and Jazzarimba Band with colored cake walkers from the Flotilla Restaurant.

First Natl. Month Opens

Salesmen Highly Enthused Over Valuable Prizes Offered

First National month was formally opened on December 15th when sales meetings convened by E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution, were held in forty First National exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, at which the details of the drive were explained and the biggest sales contest in the history of First National announced.

With a full knowledge of the box office power of the five pictures to be offered during First National month in January the drive has aroused unprecedented enthusiasm on the part of the sales force even before the fact that a huge prize contest was to be held was known. Following the sales meetings and the announcement of the chance of winning big cash prizes, the field force was inspired to see the drive through to a more than successful conclusion and place it in the class of history making sales efforts of the film industry.

According to wires received at the home office from First National branch managers the determination to cash in on the prize awards extends to all First National exchanges. Under the plan arranged by Mr. Eschmann each exchange has a fair and even chance to head the list when the final check-up is made.

First National Month, beginning January 1st, has been heavily advertised to the public and will officially start with the release of "Boy of Mine," to be followed at weekly intervals by "Black Oxen," "The Song of Love," the "Eternal City" and "Painted People."

Fisher Joins Warners

Warner Brothers Pictures Inc. has added to its sale staff, H. W. (King) Fisher, who left the Warner home offices this week for his territory. He will have headquarters in the branch office at Atlanta, Georgia.

Will Edit Big Film

John Emerson and Anita Loos have been engaged by Samuel Goldwyn to put George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Eternal City," into its final shape. "The Eternal City" is a current First National release.

On Individual Contracts

Steffes Opposes Them in Letter to Minneapolis Exchanges

Individual contracts on playing time for exhibitors in the Northwest are opposed in a letter by W. A. Steffes, president of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, to A. H. Fischer, president of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade. The film men planned to check bicycling by insisting that exhibitors specify the number of days a picture is to be played, the exact location of the theatre and similar information. Mr. Steffes urges that insistence on the individual contract plan would only raise rentals and force small-town exhibtors to close. He points out that his organization has effectively cooperated with the exchange men in checking the bicycling evil.

Distributors must not expect to effect a profit on all pictures released, Mr. Steffes argues. The fixed minimum price plan has, he finds, negligible effect on pictures of exceptional merit. "It is on the program and mediocre pictures that the fixed minimum will prove disastrous," he declares. He wants the matter decided so that he can present a decision to the South Dakota exhibitor gatherings in Sioux Falls.

Metro Releases Two

Viola Dana and Jane Novak Star in Latest Output

"In Search of a Thrill" and "The Man Life Passed By" are two of the productions which are released this month by Metro. The first stars Viola Dana in the third in the series of five pictures which she is scheduled to make for the Metro 1923-1924 season. In the cast also are: Warner Baxter, Mabel Van Buren, Templar Saxe, Robert Schable, Walter Wills, Rosemary Theby, Billy Elmer and Leo White. It was adapted by Basil Dickey from Kate Jordan's story, "The Spirit of the Road," and directed by Oscar Apfel.

"The Man Life Passed By" was written directly for the screen by Victor Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn.

"Fashion Row," Mae Murray's new Metro starring picture, was released the first week in December.

Exhibitors Responding

Receive "Fashion Row" with Hearty Enthusiasm

Mae Murray's new Metro picture, "Fashion Row," which was released early this month, has received an immediate and hearty response from the exhibitors all over the country, it is reported.

It is said to be probable that the number of prints that have already been gotten out on "Fashion Row" will have to be very much increased to meet the demand from exhibitors for early play dates. A sweeping campaign has already been mapped out for the Metro sales force to set up a new record for the greatest number of bookings in the shortest possible time.

Likewise the Metro exploitation force throughout the country, backed by the great advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign prepared by Metro experts at the home offices in New York have been instructed to put forth great efforts in aiding exhibitors with the picture.

Friend Proposes Novel Studio to Center Production in East

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week from the offices of Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, that he and a group of associates are planning to build in the Borough of Queens a multiple-unit studio which would be the largest picture production plant in the world. The enterprise, in which Henry M. Hobart, formerly vice-president of International Pictures Corporation, and Charles S. Hervey, formerly a New York Public Service Commissioner, are interested, calls for the erection of a nine-stage studio on a tract of approximately forty acres situated within twenty minutes of the Times Square district. No further clue as to the location is given, nor is it said that one has been definitely obtained.

Actual organization work on the project was preceded by months of study. This preliminary survey, conducted by William O. Hurst, convinced those interested in the enterprise of the following: That studio rentals in the New York area must be brought below prevailing rates in order to meet the industry's demand for economic production; that such rental reductions are impossible in most existing plants because of high land values and high cost of maintenance; that many studios beyond the high-rent zone are actually too far removed; that the Borough of Queens has adequate land facilities within a few minutes of the heart of the city on which can be constructed a multiple-unit studio of sufficient dimensions to permit of large productions at a minimum of expenses.

These conclusions are predicated on an absolute belief of Mr. Friend, Mr. Hobart, Mr. Hervey and Mr. Hurst that Eastern production of photoplays is logical, because in New York is centered the control of the industry.

Mr. Hurst, who is known as a specialist in studios, issued the following statement:

"The contemplated multiple-unit studio in the Borough of Queens will not only permit of the building of stages of huge size without excessive rentals, but through efficient arrangement of carpenter shops in relation to stages, will permit of tremendous savings in the matter of lost time and lost motion—vital factors in production costs.

"The multiple-unit idea will permit of the occupancy of one stage by one director at a time; there will not be the confusion engendered by two companies attempting to shoot at once. We are determined to eliminate this. Also, we are determined to eliminate the custom of building sets on a stage while a director is shooting."

Coogan Picture Breaks Records

For the first time in the history of St. Louis, four theatres, the Delmonte, New Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, four first-run houses, ran a production simultaneously day and date—and all broke records. This happened recently with Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King."

Patronage at the four houses mentioned took a decided leap while "Long Live the King" was on the screen. Telegraphic advices from St. Louis to the Metro offices have reported that each house had broken its attendance records.

Titled "Fools' Highway"

Universal Picture Adapted from "My Mamie Rose"

"Fools' Highway" is to be the title of the first Universal Jewel starring vehicle of Mary Philbin, the little Chicago school girl who sprang to film fame overnight by her work in "Merry Go Round." "Fools' Highway" is a screen adaptation of Owen Kildare's celebrated romance of the Bowery, "My Mamie Rose," also recognized as an actual biographical novel, with many real facts and faces, and with the hero, Mike Kildare, a prototype of Owen Kildare himself.

Made under the successive working titles "My Mamie Rose" and "Morality," "Fools' Highway" has been completed and received in New York. Universal executives who have pre-viewed it say it will be one of the greatest hits of the season. Carl Laemmle's wisdom in selecting Mary Philbin as a Universal Jewel star is said to be amply justified by her work in this new picture. Her characterization as the little Bowery orphan, intensely in love with the hardest hitting slugger of the famous Bowery of a generation ago, is heralded as one of the truest ever enacted for the camera.

Frisco Holds "Reno"

"Reno," the latest picture written and directed by Rupert Hughes for Goldwyn, has been retained for a second week at the California Theatre in San Francisco. This photoplay on divorce proved its drawing power at its first week's showing at the California Theatre. It was most thoroughly exploited through a newspaper campaign.

Caine Film Previewed

Goldwyn's first Victor Seastrom picture, "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's "The Master of Man," was given a preview showing at the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia, last Sunday night. The audience consisted of invited guests from Philadelphia and exhibitors from Eastern Pennsylvania and contiguous territory.

A Christmas Warning Against Pessimism and Extravagance

By ALBERT E. SMITH
President of Vitagraph

PESSIMISTIC conservatives and extravagant radicals are bringing the motion picture industry tumbling about their own ears. Fortunately there is a level road traveled by steady minded men during the quarter of century since I began as a pioneer producer and distributor and which remains the open way to legitimate growth and development.

Since my last stay in Hollywood, the center of motion picture production, I have had opportunity to study and analyze conditions in Great Britain and on the Continent as well as opportunity to review business in the United States and Canada and the prospects for the coming year.

I have seen twenty-six years of progress in motion pictures. Every year of those has been one of advancement in production; only during the stern years of the war did business show any decrease. That decrease was in the foreign market. It was in a large measure, although not altogether, offset by the spread of motion pictures throughout the United States. Never have the level-headed men in this industry had cause to complain about the growth of the industry as a whole. Each year sees new markets for films.

The business of Great Britain and the Continent is being restored to normal in a manner most satisfactory to film distributors and to producers. The Vitagraph exchanges in Great Britain, where we have branches in every large city in the provinces as well as in Scotland, Ireland and Wales, are reporting increased rentals every month. Our French distribution is coming back to what it was before 1914. So encouraging has been Vitagraph's business on the Continent that I reopened last summer a producing studio in Paris which is making pictures direct for Continental consumption. Vitagraph's studios in Hollywood and Brooklyn have not been idle.

This suggests comment on the question of production in the East or in the West. In my opinion this concerns the producer's private plans. There are some pictures, such as "Let Not Man Put Asunder," which J. Stuart Blackton has just finished, which can be made with equal facility in either locality. There are other pictures, such as "Pioneer Trails," which demand the backgrounds that are to be found only in the waste lands and mountains of the far West. I do not see any reason why the industry should be limited to any locality. On the contrary, production under modern conditions permits the making of pictures anywhere on the face of the earth.

Censorious critics have flung much mud at the industry. They have attacked the morals of pictures and the morals of the men and women who have strived to give to the public good entertainment. They sometimes forget that this mode of entertainment has been the most satisfactory to the pocketbook of the American citizen and that in educational values it has surpassed the printed word.

Men and women who write about motion pictures are sometimes misguided through ignorance. It seems to be the one industry which every outsider believes he could improve. "Efficiency experts" who may have been able to obtain remarkable results in directing a factory fabricating cook stoves seek to force their rules in the studios. Unfortunately pictures are not a factory product. No industry reflects so completely the human elements in men and women as ours. It is the wise and level-headed producer who can reconcile the foibles of director and his people with business needs, who advances steadily towards success.

In February I enter upon my twenty-seventh year as a motion picture producer and distributor. The name of Vitagraph is known in every civilized community. It has come to stand for good entertainment and service in distribution. I have applied straight, sound business ethics to its development. Therefore, when I predict in all seriousness that 1924 will show a continued steady growth of markets for film, I speak with more than a quarter of a century of experience. Our own country is soon to be relieved of some of the burdens the war laid upon it. Our industry will share directly in this relief, but the public at large will be the chief beneficiary. This means increased attendance and the building of new theatres.

Vitagraph wishes to all the industry all prosperity for 1924.

Repeats Broadway Hit

Baltimore and National Capital Crowds See "Tiger Rose"

Following its success at the Rivoli, "Tiger Rose," the Warner Brothers Screen Classic adapted from Belasco's stage success, with Lenore Ulric starring, is achieving a series of triumphs throughout the country. This picture is being held over at the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, for an extended run. The picture opened to record business, great crowds were turned away the opening night and capacity houses were the rule the entire week. The Metropolitan management then advertised that this picture had proven such an exceptional drawing card that it was to be held over for an extended period.

In Washington, D. C., "Tiger Rose" also is pulling big crowds, in spite of the fact that it has opposition in the personal appearance of the star in the picture at another theatre. The film is playing at Moore's Rialto Theatre.

DeMille in New York

Cecil B. DeMille and party, consisting of Mrs. DeMille, the three DeMille children, Cecilia, Katherine and John; Jeanie Macpherson and her mother, Mrs. E. Claire O'Neill, and Barrett C. Keesling, Mr. DeMille's personal representative, arrived in New York from Los Angeles Monday and are stopping at the Ambassador. They will be present at the New York opening of Mr. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments."

Fox's Newest Makes Hit

"The Shepherd King" Has Triumphant Manhattan Premiere

The premiere presentation of the William Fox special, "The Shepherd King," was at the Central Theatre on Broadway, New York, December 10. The American said: "It has been done with a fineness and sincerity that indicates that Mr. Gordon Edwards, the director, knew what he was doing. 'The Shepherd King' is an investment that Mr. Fox can point to with pride."

The Evening World called the production "one of great beauty and a production that need bow its head to none of them." The Times said: "It is undoubtedly one of the most striking and beautiful spectacles, with huge throngs and great scenic structures."

The Evening Journal praised it as J. Gordon Edwards' finest picture. The Morning Telegraph said: "It has dignity, sincerity and fidelity welded to strong dramatic interest."

The Evening Post said: "The scenic effects are beautiful. The scenes are stirring and on a whole, 'The Shepherd King' is an entertaining motion picture."

Resigns as Studio Head

After five years as general manager of the Thos. H. Ince Studios in Culver City, Clark W. Thomas has resigned to assume full charge of the Cinema Mercantile Company.

Prior to entering the motion picture field Thomas was an executive of the Packard Motor Car Company in Detroit. The new general manager of the Ince plant has not yet been named.

Move Dance to Frisco

Los Angeles officials refusing to permit dancing past the midnight hour has resulted in the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers deciding to hold their annual ball at San Francisco. Harry D. Wilson, Pete Smith and Harry Brand were sent to San Francisco to make arrangements. The Exposition Auditorium has been secured for the event, which will be held on January 19.

Blackton Editing Film

"Let Not Man Put Asunder" Has Great Moral, He Says

Vitagraph is issuing invitations to the clergy, the officials of domestic relations courts, social service bureaus, professors of sociology of Columbia University and New York University for a pre-release showing of "Let Not Man Put Asunder."

This picture is an adaptation of Basil King's bold arraignment of divorce and expose of the causes of domestic unhappiness. J. Stuart Blackton, who produced this feature in which Lou Tellegen and Pauline Frederick have the leading roles, says: "This picture is no preachment. As the producer I will welcome the comment of students of this all important problem in our national life." Mr. Blackton is now engaged in the final cutting.

Barrymore With Griffith

Lionel Barrymore, in addition to his successful starring venture with David Belasco, has been engaged to play the part of Walter Butler in the forthcoming D. W. Griffith film production, "America." The cast also includes Carol Dempster, Neil Hamilton, Erville Alderson, Marie Burke.

"Cytherea" Script Ready

George Fitzmaurice, Samuel Goldwyn and Ouida Bergere spent four days at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Atlantic City where they heard Miss Bergere's recital of the scenario she has constructed in adapting Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Cytherea," to the screen. This is to be the next Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production for First National.

"Little Old New York" Held for Four Weeks in Seattle

FOR the first time in the history of motion pictures in Seattle, Wash., a film has been held for four weeks. This honor was reserved for Cosmopolitan's Marion Davies picture, "Little Old New York," which was originally booked at the Blue Mouse Theatre for two weeks' showing. The business done in those two weeks was so big that it was decided to hold the picture for three weeks. When the attendance continued as big as ever the third week, arrangements were then made to retain it for a fourth week.

Because of the big success of "Little Old New York" in Seattle, arrangements have been effected whereby it will play as a second-run at Hamrick's Theatre.

Rochester, N. Y., held this production for two weeks at the Piccadilly Theatre and in its first week there, it broke the box office record by several hundred dollars.

Manager Kloakie, of the Regent Theatre in Ottawa, Canada, was arrested following the opening of "Little Old New York" in his theatre, on the charge of overcrowding the theatre and blocking traffic. The film broke all house records for its first day at the Regent Theatre. This theatre has played all of the big pictures of this year and Manager Kloakie states that "Little Old New York" outdrew all of them.

"Little Old New York" was a sensation in Baltimore, said to have done more business in its two weeks at the New Theatre than any other picture ever shown there.

It is doing an abnormally large business at the Blue Mouse Theatres in Portland and Tacoma.

Miller's Theatre in Los Angeles has signed to play "Little Old New York" for a minimum of four weeks' engagement. This is something very unusual in view of the fact that "Little Old New York" has already played a six weeks' run at the California Theatre in Los Angeles.

This Marion Davies feature broke all house records at Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C. Harry Crandall has bought the picture for his entire circuit following its showing at the Moore's Rialto.

Ruben & Finkelstein will show "Little Old New York" in their entire circuit. The Stanley Company has bought it for 100 per cent. representation on its circuit.

A Fox Xmas Release

For the holiday week, beginning December 22, the Fox Film Corporation will head their release schedule with "Gentle Julia," the screen version of one of Booth Tarkington's novels. Among the short subjects a new Imperial Comedy release is scheduled. It will be the third of a series of monkey comedies and is entitled, "Monks a La Mode."

Sennett Plans for Big Activity

THEORETICALLY building bridges, that no yawning gap will present itself to interfere with the progress of production schedule for the coming year, is claiming the attention of Mack Sennett and his staff of production executives. That the famous comedy lot in Los Angeles will be a mighty hive of industry during the twelve months beginning after the holiday season, is the obvious intention of the Comedy King. Several new faces have been added to the staff of writers, and in fact all departments have been strengthened that they might function without extra strain.

Harry Langdon, new comedy star recently signed, is already under way, having completed his second picture, "Picking Peaches," with Alberta Vaughn as his leading woman. Langdon is proving all the claims made for his versatility by his excellent performances.

"That he is one of the greatest finds for the screen in many a month, promises to be the universal opinion when his pictures are unfolded for review," says Sennett.

The bathing girls, more beautiful and more charmingly alluring than ever in their dainty little costumes of advanced beach style, should fascinate with irresistible force those who will witness their screen endeavors.

Madeleine Hurlock, who forced herself into popular favor almost overnight through her portrayals of vampire roles in the satirical sketches prepared by Sennett for his cross-eyed star, will continue to lure the opposite sex in forthcoming stories of burlesque and satire.

All the Sennett favorites who have been identified in featured and leading parts, including Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon, Dot Farley, Jack Cooper, Billy Armstrong, Kewpie Morgan and Andy Clyde, will continue to be prominently cast in future comedies.

Roy Del Ruth, Del Lord and Erle Kenton are the directors operating at present under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, supervising director, although negotiations are under way by which it is expected two other prominent directors may become connected with the organization.

Filming "The Gold Fish"

After a three weeks' visit in New York, Constance Talmadge has returned to Hollywood and has started work on "The Goldfish," an adaptation from a French play by Gladys Unger, in which Marjorie Rambeau starred on the speaking stage. The screen adaptation of "The Goldfish" has been made by G. Gardner Sullivan.

Postal Workers Praise Picture

Postal workers of Los Angeles and nearby communities in Southern California, after assisting in several big exploitation campaigns for the Emory Johnson production of "The Mailman" have sent Mr. Johnson a blanket letter of appreciation for what he has done for them in filming the picture and having it presented to the public through the Film Booking Offices of America.

The letter, signed by more than 300 postal workers, read: "You have done much to help all mail workers. You have placed us before the great American public in exactly the light in which we desire to be revealed.

"Not only is your production worthy of the appreciation of all American lovers of entertainment, but, moreover, it merits the deepest gratitude of every man and woman in the service of the postal department of the United States."

Metro Announces New Schedule Effective Early Part of 1924

SEVERAL new additions to Metro's 1923-1924 schedule of major productions have made necessary important changes in its releasing schedule, according to an announcement from W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation. The following new schedule is effective between January and April of 1924:

There will be three releases in January. The first will be "Half-a-Dollar Bill," which Max Graf recently completed on the coast. Anna Q. Nilsson heads the cast of this picture. It is one of the group of Directors' Specials which are an important unit in the Metro list.

Then will follow Viola Dana's newest Metro starring picture, "The Good Bad Girl," from the story by Fred Kennedy Myton, which is now being rapidly completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood under the direction of Oscar Apfel. Miss Dana is supported by Milton Sills, Wallace MacDonald, Gertrude Claire, Bertram Grassby, De Witt Jennings, Nelson McDowell, Matthew Betts and Edward Wade.

January will also see one other release, either the new Fred Niblo production, "Thy Name Is Woman," a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction, or "The Fool's Awakening," the Metro picturization of William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona," which Harold Shaw is now completing on the coast with the following cast: Harrison Ford, Enid Bennett, Mary Alden, Alec Francis, Lionel Belmore, Harry Northrup, Evelyn Sherman, John Sainpolis, Pauline French, Edward Connelly, D. R. O. Hatswell, Mark Fenton, Arline Pretty and Lorimer Johnston. It was adapted to the screen by Thomas J. Hopkins.

"Thy Name Is Woman," which may be released either late in January or early in February, has the following cast: Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Wallace MacDonald, Robert Edeson, William V. Mong, Claire MacDowell and Edith Roberts. It was adapted for Mr. Niblo by Bess Meredyth from the famous stage success of Europe and America. It was photographed by Victor Milner.

The other releases in February will be "The Uninvited Guest" and "Happiness," Laurette Taylor's picturization for Metro of her great stage success. "The Uninvited Guest" is a Ralph Ince-J. E. Williamson production which is now being filmed at Nassau, Bahama Islands. Part of it, about 25 per cent., is being made under the famous technicolor process while the rest will be in black and white.

There will be three releases in March. One of these will be a new Buster Keaton feature length comedy, as yet untitled, and another will be a new Reginald Barker production, while a third will be a new Jackie Coogan picture to follow "Long Live the King," which was recently released. There will be further announcements forthcoming on the March productions.

Metro will release four pictures in April. Mae Murray will have a new starring picture under the title of "Mademoiselle Midnight." There will be a new picture starring Viola Dana, the last of her series of five on the 1924-1925 schedule, and a new Rex Ingram production for which the noted director is now in Europe gathering important data.

Several other productions will be released after April but these will be announced at a later date. Notable among them will be a new Jackie Coogan picture and Laurette Taylor in another of her great stage successes, "One Night in Rome."

Seena Owen Back Home

Seena Owen, screen actress, arrived home on the S. S. Berengaria recently after an European trip of several months which took her through England, France and Italy. Miss Owen combined business with pleasure on the trip. While in London she made a picture in which she is featured.

Shorter Films and Less Production Costs Are Predicted for Next Year

By MAURICE TOURNEUR

THE picture business will see striking improvements the next season. The improvements will be evident in every phase of picture making, from the time a story is purchased for production, through the production process on to the final stage of publicity and exploitation.

It is my opinion, therefore, that next season will bring about—First: Shorter, more dramatic features. Second: The two-a-day policy will gain greater vogue in the larger cities. Third: Waste in production will be eliminated, and more efficiency will be utilized in the present method of making pictures.

There is no doubt in my mind that the shorter length feature of the five or six-reel type will be made by all far-sighted producers. It has often been contended that a producer could not do justice to most stories within this limit. A contradiction to this belief and its proof can be found in the fact that during the earliest days of picture making the most powerful and dramatic of stories were made in three or four reels. They resorted to no padding in those days, and there is no reason why the early state of affairs cannot be put in force today with all our modern contrivances and lighting technique.

But a mere glance at the trade journals, and a conference with leading exhibitors throughout the country, has convinced me that the shorter feature is in great demand. And quite naturally so. For it gives an exhibitor an opportunity to vary his program, to make it more interesting and worth while for his patrons. This fact borne in mind by producers will be a big factor in swinging the public pendulum toward a greater appreciation of the motion picture.

Heretofore, very little, if any attention has been paid to the two-a-day policy. A handful of theatres have tried and are still trying the experiment, and in many of these cases it is proving very valuable indeed. Only productions, of course, of a very high calibre can help to increase the idea of the two-a-day plan. Next season will see these productions, and next season will also see a large number of theatres in the bigger cities putting over this effective and profitable policy.

New Association Expected to Become Strong National Body

THE independent distributors and State right operators took definite steps in New York last week toward the formation of a new association, which may eventually develop into a strong national body, to include all individuals, co-partnerships and corporations engaged in the independent motion picture field.

This action was taken at a meeting held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, December 13, preceded by a luncheon tendered by Charles B. Hoy, of the Hoy Reporting Service, which was presided over by Frederick H. Elliott, now associated with Mr. Hoy and formerly executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The meeting was most enthusiastic and representative of the independent market, a large majority of the important distributors being in attendance.

It was the consensus of opinion of those present that the independent market was in urgent need of a strong organization to function actively in its interests and addresses in support of this contention were made by J. E. Chadwick, of Chadwick Pictures Corporation; Joe Brandt, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow Pictures Corporation, as well as several others.

An organization committee was appointed to formulate plans to carry out the suggestions incorporated in the discussion. The committee consists of I. E. Chadwick, chairman; W. E. Shallenberger, Joe Brandt and Bobby North, of Weber & North, treasurer. This committee will meet on Monday to decide upon the functions of the new organization, as to whether it will revive the old independent producers and distributors association or create an entirely new body, concerned only with credit control and service through an arrangement to be effected with the Hoy Reporting Service, with headquarters at 1650 Broadway, New York.

"The Love Master"

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., soon will present its third Strongheart picture, "The Love Master," produced by Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin, and featuring the famous dog star in a story of the Northwest. It has been scheduled by First National for February release.

Bill to Repeal Tax

A bill amending the admission tax provisions of the revenue law so as to repeal the tax on all admissions of 50 cents or less, was introduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., on December 15 by Congressman Peavey, of Wisconsin.

Under the terms of a bill introduced on December 17 by Representative Barkley of Kentucky, the admission tax would be entirely repealed. Mr. Barkley has also introduced bills repealing the tax on telephone and telegraph messages and prohibiting the collection of surcharges for Pullman accommodations.

Ince Forecast Optimistic

THOMAS H. INCE'S survey of present conditions in the motion picture industry is the basis of an optimistic forecast of what the New Year will bring forth.

A message from his Culver City studios follows:

"The coming year will, in my opinion, see a forward stride toward the stabilization of the industry.

"The fair returns that any producer offering a passably entertaining picture once could collect are no longer to be had for the asking.

"Audiences are not satisfied today with average pictures. The past year has witnessed the birth of a score of pictures which deserve to be called great and they have whetted the appetite of the public for more.

"If the productions which have been the vanguard of the new era have not all brought the financial returns they seemed to deserve, they have at least accomplished a definite mission. They have met with sufficient response to arouse the ambition of producers to offer pictures that shall exceed them in honesty, beauty, taste, and, when the subject warrants, magnitude.

"This impetus will necessarily benefit the public as it will the industry at large."

"Courtship of Myles Standish" to Have Broadway Run at Central

CHARLES RAY in "The Courtship of Myles Standish" will start its New York preview Sunday, December 30, at the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street. J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, closed a contract this week with Sam S. & Lee Shubert, Inc., for the taking over of the house by Associated for eight weeks. Plans for a gala opening are being made and arrangements for an extensive exploitation campaign are under way.

Other important bookings made in the last few days call for an indefinite run in M. L. Markowitz's Strand, San Francisco, starting December 29th, and a run of three weeks in the Woods Theatre, Chicago, beginning January 20. The opening of the indefinite run in Tremont Temple, Boston, has been fixed for January 28.

December 30, when the Broadway run has its start, is the exact date set for the official release of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," which is easily the most ambitious production Mr. Ray has ever made. Meanwhile, in pre-lease showings outside of New York, this long run feature has played to capacity houses and been hailed as one of the outstanding attractions of the year. Following its memorable engagements at the President Theatre, Washington, and in Detroit, where it smashed the attendance record of John H. Kunsky's Madison, it has just had highly successful runs at the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., and the Plaza, Sioux City, Iowa.

In the course of his review, C. M. S., the critic of the Grand Rapids Herald, said: "The combination of 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' a screen masterpiece in every respect, and the likeable star, Charles Ray, in person, gives the Majestic Gardens for this week a program of unbeatable appeal and merit. Mr. Ray and Frederic Sullivan, the director, have produced a truly magnificent document."

Previous to the opening of the Sioux City run, R. D. Rehfield, manager of the Plaza, arranged a special showing which was attended by newspaper critics, the head of the Better Film Society, Superintendent M. G. Clark, and the principals of the public schools. The Sioux City Journal said the persons attending the preview "were unanimous in declaring the picture of great historical benefit and deserving of a place alongside the big productions of the past."

F. K. O'Kelly, manager of the Strand Theatre, Pittsburgh, who has booked "The Courtship" for a run opening Christmas week, has written to the home offices of Associated Exhibitors that he is assured of the co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations, and expects "the picture to go over with a bang."

Setting it Straight

Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of Associated First National, takes occasion to comment on the general lack of knowledge regarding foreign conditions among Americans, in the course of a letter correcting a recent misunderstanding in Moving Picture World.

A story concerning Metro's activities in Sweden, supplied by that organization, erroneously stated that Raoul LeMatt was one of the owners of the Roda Kvarn Theatre, of Stockholm.

The truth of the matter is, of course, that the Roda Kvarn is controlled by the Svenska Filmindustri, which is owned by Knut Husberg. The latter gentleman, by far the most important film figure in Sweden, was the subject of an article appearing elsewhere in the same issue of Moving Picture World.

Broadway's Big Funster

Buster Keaton's "Our Hospitality" Praised by Manhattan "Fussies"

Buster Keaton's second Metro feature length comedy, "Our Hospitality," was presented for its New York premiere at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway last week. "'Our Hospitality' will cause the Rialto to echo and re-echo with roars of laughter. A splendid bit of satire," said the critic of the New York times. "Keaton appears at his best in 'Our Hospitality,'" said the critic of the New York Telegram. "A thoroughly fine picture," remarked the critic of the Journal.

"Full of good comedy," said the reviewer of the New York Post. "It's pretty safe to say that Keaton should be the star of 'Our Hospitality,'" said the critic of the New York Evening World.

"There has seldom been a funnier conceit than Buster's train," began the critic of the New York Sun. "The picture is a burlesque of the well known feud melodrama," began the critic of the New York Tribune. "Keaton has chosen regular people to assist him. The two Canfield boys are handsome enough to be leading men in a society drama."

"A vast deal of fun is derived from the vicissitudes of travel in a specimen of the earliest railroad train. There are a number of hair-raising episodes," said the World reviewer. "Our Hospitality" was directed by Keaton and Jack Blystone.

Makes Big Contract

Pathe Picture Presented Through A. H. Blank Enterprises

Among the important bookings closed during the week on the feature version of Emerson Hough's famous novel of the early West, "The Way of a Man," which is being distributed by Pathe, was one closed by the A. H. Blank Enterprises. This contract assures the presentation of this picture, the story of which was written by the author of "The Covered Wagon," in all the important key cities of the state of Iowa. The A. H. Blank houses will stage the production in a series of one week engagements.

Stahl Is Keeping Busy

Finishes "Why Men Leave Home" and Looking for New Material

John M. Stahl has completed the picturization of Avery Hopwood's stage success, "Why Men Leave Home," and in conjunction with A. P. Younger, who wrote the scenario, he is now dividing his time between editing the film and searching for a story for his next production.

Approximately three months were spent in filming "Why Men Leave Home." Lewis S. Stone has the leading role.

Among the other stars in the cast are: Helene Chadwick, Alma Bennett, Mary Carry, William V. Mong, Hedda Hopper, E. H. Calvert, Lila Leslie and Sidney Bracy. Sol Polito was chief of photography and Sidney Algier served as assistant to the director.

For January Release

Elaine Hammerstein Production Adapted from "Drums of Jeopardy"

Early in January, Elaine Hammerstein's second production for Truart Film Corporation will be released. It is an adaptation of "Drums of Jeopardy," the famous Harold MacGrath story, which first appeared serially in a widely read magazine and later was published in book form.

In the cast supporting the star are Wallace Beery, Jack Mulhall, the lead opposite Miss Hammerstein; David Torrence and Maude George.

Pritchard on Coast

R. E. Pritchard has reached Los Angeles, where he has taken up his duties as representative of the sales division of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the producing center. Pritchard was formerly associated with Goldwyn Pictures and previous to that was advertising manager of Educational Pictures. He is well known throughout the film trade in New York and on the Coast.

Inspired Film, Internationalized Will Fill Wants, Says Williams

IN a further talk on the question of the inspired motion picture, J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Pictures, who is just back from an extended European trip, during which he made a careful survey of conditions, adds an amplified chapter to the subject of inspiration as real solution note in picture production. Mr. Williams has reached the important conviction that the demands of the public for great entertainment will be fully and completely met at approximately half the present cost of big pictures and that the inspired picture, internationalized, will do it.

Discussing especially the subject of the inspired picture, a topic which has had practically no attention in motion picture conferences and councils, Mr. Williams said:

"Inspiration comes to the creative artist as a result of contact with the extraordinary, the unusual and the essentially dramatic. We can in these countries, centuries older than our own, draw from the vast treasure houses of the world securing situations, ideas, plots, incidents, things of beauty, of humor, of romance, of dramatic intensity, of charm, of love, mystery, motive and desire, and utilize the best in the great and the small things of human history and achievement. Inspiration is almost certain with a creative mind.

"If thus inspired, it will be possible for the creator of pictures to contrive mosaics for the screen that will be composed of varied elements, some great and compelling, others small and exquisite, fitted and joined into a sum total of human accomplishment and providing for the motion picture the final and tremendous entertainment.

"With so vast an amount of material to draw from, I believe that fifty directors, under this inspiration, could well be working at one and the same time in varied places, instead of a mere handful, to provide the adequate amounts of exalted and compelling entertainment now demanded by the public and essential to the future of the screen.

"Happily there is nothing to worry about, because the inspired picture is inevitable. But the sooner its value is generally recognized the better. I have recently seen the effect on such directors as Henry King, Charles Brabin, Edwin Carewe in contact with the European background, atmosphere and locale. Centuries of human endeavor and accomplishment have stored up story material and human interest in even the out-of-the-way places.

"The romance of Venice, the glories of Rome, the noble achievements of England, that cradle of human liberty, the fascinations to be found in the centuries of France, the tragedies of Russia, the mysticism and beauties of the East provide material so rich, so absorbing, so tremendous in possibilities as to arouse in the heart, mind and soul of the creative or adaptive artist a compelling desire to achieve. This inspiration is provided by this never failing fountain of amazing things. It solves the production problems of this and succeeding generations. It solves, too, the problem of costs because with care and attention the great pictures can be made for half the present expenditures.

"Ritz is committed definitely to international pictures, the inspired pictures, the pictures that solve the two problems of the business, namely, great entertainment value and legitimate costs.

"I have reached the important and definite conclusion that the demands of the public for great entertainment in motion pictures will be fully and completely met at approximately half the present cost of big pictures, and that the inspired pictures, internationalized, will do it."

Adapting Sheldon Story

Carl Anderson offices this week announce that Dr. Charles M. Sheldon has consented to the picturization of his book, "In His Steps." It has been estimated that 22,000,000 copies of this work have been issued to date, in nineteen languages. "In His Steps" tells the story of the application of the Golden Rule in a community that decided to live strictly according to the injunction: "Do Unto Others As Ye Would They Should Do Unto You."

Production starts on "In His Steps" next month, and Mr. Anderson plans to announce it among his early spring releases.

A Consistent Performer

"The Virginian" Breaking Records, Says Preferred

From present indications B. P. Schulberg's screen version of Owen Wister's novel, "The Virginian," bids fair to be one of the biggest money getters of the current season. It already has proved to be the most consistent record breaker yet released by Preferred Pictures Corporation.

The Columbia Theate, Bristol, Tenn., reports that on Thanksgiving all existing records were smashed in spite of a downpour of rain. To the Barcli Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., "The Virginian" brought the biggest Sunday and Monday business since the house opened, and according to a message received by Preferred from the management, the line-up at the box-office was continuous from opening to closing time.

The Colorado in Denver and Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand in Detroit established new marks for high receipts. Other houses that have claimed records are the Grenada in San Francisco, the Temple, Ilion, N. Y., and the Imperial in Jacksonville, Fla. B. S. Moss' Broadway in New York City did the biggest business since the Dempsey-Firpo fight film with this Tom Forman production.

Selected as the Best

Four First National Films Among Magazine's Choices

Of the six productions selected by Photoplay Magazine in its January number as the best pictures of the month, four are distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The pictures are selected by photoplay critics who judge pictures from the fan's viewpoint.

Samuel Goldwyn's independently produced "The Eternal City," directed by George Fitzmaurice, heads the list. Not only is "The Eternal City" rated highest as a picture but, in addition, the performances of two of the cast are classified as belonging to the six best performances of the month. These players are Barbara La Marr, playing the leading feminine role, and Richard Bennett in a difficult characterization as an Italian vagabond.

"Anna Christie," Thomas H. Ince's production of the Eugene O'Neill drama, was another of the first six and Blanche Sweet's work in the title role was rated among the outstanding performances.

A third First National release in the list was "Flaming Youth," the sensational drama of modern society featuring Colleen Moore, and the fourth Sam Rork's picturization of Cynthia Stockley's novel, "Ponjola," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood. To Miss Nilsson also went the honor of giving one of the six best performances of the month. "The Acquittal" and "Long Live the King" complete the list of exceptional pictures.

Universal Film Held Second Week at Cameo

"The Acquittal," Universal's Super Jewel mystery picture, adapted from Rita Weiman's play, has been held over for a second week at the Cameo Theatre, New York City, where it now is having its Broadway premiere. It made a decided hit at the Times Square screen theatre last week in the face of strong opposition, and is expected to go over the top on its second week for even better records. It is said to be a picture which builds by word-of-mouth advertising.

The picture received especially favorable press notices. The Evening World said: "'The Acquittal' is due to spread thrills around by the bushel." The Mail: "'The Acquittal,' Rita Weiman's mystery melodrama, which had a successful stage appearance, has been made a gripping motion picture."

The Morning Telegraph: "The Acquittal' which is at the Cameo Theatre this week, is rattling good melodrama." The New York World: "There is as fine and full and tremendous a moment on the screen of the Cameo this week as there is to be found anywhere on Broadway. This includes drama of all kinds now on view, high, low and medium brow. It comes in that exciting court scene." The New York Tribune: "It is a very interesting picture."

Following its run at the Cameo Theatre, "The Acquittal" is scheduled to play the entire U. B. O. Circuit in and around New York City, beginning about the first of the year, in runs from four days to a week.

Keith-Copperfield Bill

Following its three weeks' run on Broadway, "David Copperfield" was booked by the B. F. Keith Offices for the company's entire circuit of theatres in Greater New York. Mark Luescher, director of the publicity forces of the Keith organization, carried on an exploitation campaign which helped to pack the fourteen theatres at every showing.

Brooklyn Theatre Will Open House to Orphans Christmas Morning

The Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre is playing host on Christmas morning to all the orphans of Brooklyn who can crowd into the house, to witness a performance which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman has made up especially for the occasion.

The theatre has placed the program under the auspices of the Brooklyn Daily Times, which publication undertook the work of getting out the invitations and providing Christmas gifts for the children. Invitations were mailed and then the newspaper carried stories each day for ten days ahead of the show, illustrating these with cuts of the various performers.

Lloyd Film Versus Three Preachers!

Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" played Hatton, North Dakota, a town of 821 inhabitants, at advanced prices on a recent Sunday night and made money for the exhibitor. J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, has received this letter from George Sandy, owner of the Grand Theatre:

"'Grandma's Boy' is certainly a wonderful picture. There were three church sermons against me and you know what that means in a town of this size, where nearly everybody attends services. This is the only picture I ever advanced prices for, but everybody says it was worth what I charged, compared with other pictures. Thank you for sending me such a good one."

Seventeen Years Doing This

C. C. Johnson, of the A-Mus-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana, in writing for advice concerning a new theatre he is about to erect, adds this paragraph:

"We are asking you for this information because the Moving Picture World seems to be more interested in subscribers than just merely mailing the magazine each week."

You said it, Brother Johnson. We thank you!

"Painted People" Ready

The new First National picture featuring Colleen Moore, the star's first production since her success in "Flaming Youth," will be released under the title "Painted People." The picture was filmed under the working title of "The Swamp Angel," which is the name of the Collier's Weekly story by Richard Connell from which the feature was adapted. Clarence Badger directed and the cast also includes: Ben Lyon, Mary Carr, Mary Alden, Anna Q. Nilsson, Russell Simpson, Charles Murray, June Elvidge, Charlotte Merriam, and Bull Montana.

Famous Players Pays $392,073 for Allen Theatres in Canada

THE Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, paid a total of $392,073 in cash and stock for the assets of Allen Theatre, Limited, in the purchase of Allen theatres throughout Canada from G. T. Clarkson, Toronto, the receiver, which had been valued at $3,327,000.

This information was announced at the annual general meeting of the Famous Players Corporation at Toronto on December 14 by N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, managing director of the corporation, in making a report of the acquisition of the Allen chain of theatres in Canada. As a result of this purchase, the control of 20 Allen houses was secured, bringing the total number of theatres operated by Famous Players in Canada up to 64. The sum of $200,000 in cash and $150,000 in first preferred stock was paid to Mr. Clarkson, the receiver for Allens, and, in addition, Famous Players spent $57,073 in purchasing stock in several theatres in which the corporation's holdings were not large enough to provide control.

The interest acquired in the Allen Theatre at Vancouver, B. C., was sold by Famous Players for $25,000, this amount reducing the outlay for the entire deal. The price paid for the Allen assets was less than 12 per cent. of the receiver's valuation of the theatres.

Announcement was also made by Mr. Nathanson regarding the acquiring of Loew's Montreal Theatre. The shareholders of that theatre were given par for par for their preferred holdings, while the holders of common stock received 49 per cent., Famous Players keeping 51 per cent. in order to maintain the control. The total cash investment by Famous Players for the big Montreal Loew house was $100,000, which was secured by a mortgage at eight per cent.

The chairman of the annual meeting was Vice-President J. P. Bickell, of Toronto, who, in commenting on the annual report, declared that he looked for still greater improvement in business during the fiscal year, 1923-24.

Earnings for the first quarter of the 1923-24 year, covering a period of the three months of September, October and November, showed gross earnings of $198,672 before depreciation, as compared with $180,648 for the corresponding period one year ago. Net earnings after depreciation stood at $160,000 for the past three months. It was announced at the meeting that the retiring board of directors had been re-elected for the Canadian company without change.

Finis Fox Begins Production

FINIS FOX is expecting to have one of the most elaborate productions of the season in "A Woman Who Sinned," which he has just started to film at the Hollywood studios. He has engaged an all-star cast headed by Mae Busch, Morgan Wallace, Irene Rich and Cullen Landis. Among those playing important roles are Lucien Littlefield, Paul Megel, Hank Mann, Snitz Edwards, Cissy Fitzgerald, Hugh Fay and Ethel Teare.

Finis is not only directing the picture but he also created the story and made the screen adaptation. It is to be the first of a series of four special features that Finis will film for the independent market with all star players.

Finis chartered a three-masted schooner and a palatial steam launch for some of the scenes which are to be taken off the west coast of Mexico. Beautiful and lavish settings with the woman meaning elaborate gowns will be striking features of "A Woman Who Sinned."

Among the more recent Finis Fox productions are "The Bishop of the Ozarks," "The Man Between" and "Bag and Baggage."

Smith Says Exhibitors Need Not Fear Shortage of Good Pictures

THE arrival of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, at the studios in Hollywood last week marked renewed production energy. David Smith is rapidly finishing "Red Roses," the dramatic novel of finance and love by George Randolph Chester, in which Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller have the leading roles. Director Smith will begin casting "Borrowed Husbands," the domestic society drama by Mildred K. Barbour, at once. The continuity for "Borrowed Husbands" was prepared by C. Graham Baker, editor-in-chief of Vitagraph.

President Smith telegraphed to the Vitagraph executive offices in New York, after a conference with his Western organization, that he had found many of the published rumors concerning the industry in Hollydood to be wildly exaggerated. He es, as do the heads of other producing companies, a need for more effort against unnecessary extravagance and safeguards against waste in production, but exhibitors need have no fear, in his opinion, of a shortage in pictures of fine box office value.

"We have no intention of curtailing our production plans," the statement said.

Warner Film Praised

Critics Favorably Impressed by "Lucretia Lombard"

Entertainment value of high order and box-office appeal were unanimously conceded by New York critics to "Lucretia Lombard," the screen version of the Kathleen Norris' novel, which was given its premiere last week at the Strand, playing to the large pre-holiday crowds. The writers of the metropolitan press also enthusiastically lauded the spirited performances of Irene Rich and Monte Blue, the distinctive direction, and the fine mounting of this Warner Brothers' Screen Classic.

It will be released under alternate titles of "Lucretia Lombard" and "Flaming Passion," exhibitors to decide which of the pair of names they prefer as patronage pullers.

The American said: "Irene Rich, who did such splendid work as the Queen in 'Rosita,' puts thought into her work as Lucretia Lombard. She is intelligent and she is forceful, and she looks like a real woman, not like an ingenue dressed for the part."

A "sellout" is how the critic of the Evening Mail characterized this production. "Exhibitors need have no fear for the box-office when this picture comes to their theatre," he states.

The Morning Telegraph: "The Warner Bros. have done well by the author in giving her story a fine screen presentation. 'Lucretia Lombard' is primarily a money-maker." World: "Very well acted melodrama of a three-cornered love affair." Evening Journal: "Especially good effects in the flaming woods and the raging fire."

Sun and Globe: "Splendid acting. Irene Rich, Marc McDermott, Norma Shearer and Monte Blue give performances that are as sincere and fine as anything seen in the films this year." Times Square Daily: "A real box office hit." Evening Telegram: "Spectacular thrills follow each other uninterruptedly in this Harry Rapf production."

Praise for "Going Up"

Exceptional Photoplays Lists It as High Class

Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," Mr. MacLean's first independent starring production and his first photoplay to be distributed by Associated Exhibitors, is one of the few features listed in the current number of "Exceptional Photoplays" as "A Picture Worth Watching For." The recommendations printed in this publication are made by the National Board of Review, Committee on Exceptional Photoplays.

Of "Going Up" Exceptional Photoplays says: "'Going Up' is an excellent screen adaptation of the Broadway musical comedy success—the story of an author who exploited an aviation hero in his book, thus convinced his readers that he was an aviator himself, and got from one pickle into another in his humorous efforts to live up to this false reputation. Certainly this was good screen material for farce, and Douglas MacLean fits into it as comfortably and effectively as he did in that other finished light photoplay, 'The Hottentot.'"

Appointed Directors

Judge and Phillipson Succeed Moore and Cohen

According to an announcement made by Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., London Branch, Horace Judge, director of advertising and publicity, and Percy Phillipson, general sales manager at that office, have accepted positions on the Board of Directors to fill the vacancies made by the retirement of Sir Harold de Courcy Moore and Charles Cohen who resigned at the completion of their terms of office. The new appointments have met with favor at the American home office and it is expected that with sales and publicity represented on the directorate, the resultant closer relationship will prove a great factor.

Mrs. Reid Is Home; Finishes Crusade

That the movie industry, particularly Hollywood, is not as bad as it is painted, was a point Mrs. Dorothy Davenport Reid, widow of Wallace Reid, stressed in her country-wide drive against narcotics in which she exploited the picture, "Human Wreckage."

Mrs. Reid finished a two months' tour through the Middle West and Canada in time to spend Christmas at her home in Los Angeles. In many of the places where she conducted her crusade it was found necessary to maintain a guard of local police outside her abode. This was done, it was said, because of numerous veiled threats for her life because of the bold expose.

Plan Big Exploitation

Exhibitors Assured Full Co-operation in Selling Picture

Arrangements have been perfected between Pathe and the Yale University Press which provide for the intensive exploitation of the "Chronicles of America" series in every community in which these pictures are booked for showing. The plans, which have been worked out in detail, insure the individual exhibitor the fullest co-operation in selling these pictures to the public of the locality served by his theatre, it is stated.

"The Turmoil" Finished

Hobart Henley Has Completed Universal Picture

"The Turmoil," Universal's Hobart Henley picturization of the Booth Tarkington novel, is completed at Universal City.

Hobart Henley, the director, made "The Flirt." That Tarkington story was commented upon by leading critics as a faithful transcription of the original tale. It survived the flood of screen material as an outstanding achievement. "The Turmoil," according to book reviewers, is a novel of far more power. Its picturization is heralded as correspondingly more powerful.

Cohn in New York on C. B. C. Production Plans

HARRY COHN, producer of the features for C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, came to New York this week from the West Coast production centre.

The object of the trip was to discuss with Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn production plans for the New Year, and also to line up with them certain ideas for production for next fall. It is his belief that in working that far ahead better results may be obtained, and based upon C. B. C.'s great success this year, a much more ambitious program for next year is already being outlined.

One of the things that brought Mr. Cohn East was the desire to finally pass upon "Innocence," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, on which final editing had been completed in the East. He expressed entire satisfaction with the way this and the art titling had been handled, and "Innocence" is now released to franchise holders throughout the country.

He also announced that "Discontented Husbands" will be the next release following "Innocence." A big all-star cast has been lined up for this new production containing names that have won wide favor with the public and at the box office, he says.

Discussing plans for coming productions, Mr. Cohn says the program announced by C. B. C. at the beginning of this year will be strictly adhered to.

For next year, he says, he already has under consideration several stories and scripts which he has brought East with him to discuss their possibilities with Brandt and Cohn. He says he believes he has struck the right stride with productions which he has already made for C. B. C. release this year, and that the company will continue its policy of stories of present day problems, such as "Yesterday's Wife," "Forgive and Forget," "The Marriage Market," "Innocence," and "Discontented Husbands."

Speaking of stories, Mr. Cohn says he believes the greatest possibilities in screen stories lie in stories adapted from stories that have already appeared in published form. Not only have they added publicity value, he says, because of the attention they have already attracted in published form, but they seem to have a closer continuity of thought.

Mr. Cohn said that he believes the salvation of the industry is the "feature of average length, but more than average interest," such as the C. B. C. productions are.

Mr. Cohn says he does not believe in "star" pictures, as such. The story, he says, is the main thing, and, after that, the player who is suited to the various parts. These, of course, should be players whose names have interest to the public and mean money to the box office.

Irvin Cobb Opens Meeting Boosting Her Book

One of the most remarkable luncheons ever seen in the amusement centers of Times Square was held at a joint meeting of the Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., and the Theatrical Press Representatives Association at the Cafe Boulevard on December 13 when plans were consummated for the distribution and sale of Nellie Revell's book, "Right Off the Chest."

Notable people in the industry took part, the principal speaker being Irvin Cobb, who traveled 2,200 miles to be at the luncheon. He told of the many efforts of assistance that had been volunteered, from the initial offer of George H. Doran to publish and market the book through his regular channels without profit, to the work of Sol Bloomer, who assumed the entire distribution of the De Luxe edition. The most crying need, Mr. Cobb declared, was for coherence and centralization in the work of the several committees trying to boost the sale of the book.

The immediate problems of organization were met through the offer of J. P. Mueller of the Mueller Advertising Agency, placing his offices at the committee's disposal for meetings and necessary work. Harry Reichenbach offered to pay for the services of a publicity man to start and follow through the campaign to popularize the book throughout the country.

As soon as the book is available, a special campaign will be staged in New York to committees working from both the Theatrical Press Representatives and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, jointly.

Duplex Expanding Business; To Build Modern Laboratory

DUPLEX Motion Picture Industries, Inc., successors to Duplex Machine Company, headed by one of the pioneers of mechanical filmdom, H. O. Carleton, and supported by a directorate of his three brothers, and Jacob Schaeffer, Jr., vice-president of the National Bank of Bay Ridge, long associated with Carleton Bros. as their financial adviser, is now expanding and going into the laboratory business, as well as greatly enlarged manufacturing facilities for their standard line of motion picture equipment.

In addition they are bringing out a practical home projector, and will furnish a library of films in connection with this projector which will embrace subjects of amusement, interest, education, and science. Both projector and films will be sold at a price which will be popular, and which will bring them within the reach of many who desire motion pictures in the home.

H. O. Carleton first started in the motion picture business by working for Thomas A. Edison as a mechanic on one of the first motion picture cameras built by Mr. Edison in this country. His brother Charles worked with him on this camera, and they used ideas taken from the French model which Edison had. Afterwards both went to work for Vitagraph, developing mechanical devices in the early stages of the picture business.

Mr. Carleton realized that there was a great necessity for mechanical accuracy and labor saving machinery in the picture business. He induced his brothers to join him, and they started work in the basement of their home at 417 Ovington avenue, Brooklyn, to develop their ideas, and there with small hand power machinery made the first Duplex Automatic Step Printer, which was sold to Mr. Hite of the Tanhauser Motion Picture Company of New Rochelle. This machine is still in use.

From a small beginning, with practically no capital, the Carleton brothers have continued to build one after the other the many mechanical devices which they today manufacture, and which begin with the perforator, winding up with the projector.

The latest development of their mechanical line includes the building of an Automatic Developing Machine, a machine in which the positive goes through all the steps of a complete laboratory. This machine is automatic in its action, being operated by one-sixth the amount of labor required under previous conditions.

The new factory and developing plant of Duplex will be located in Long Island City, within easy reach of Times Square, and will be housed in a specially designed building five stories in height, and with a floor space of 50,000 square feet, to be finished some time in the coming summer.

H. O. Carleton has not only done great things in developing the mechanical side of pictures, but in addition has been associated with the business as camera man for many well known companies, and has photographed many great stars in the past.

Hodkinson Announces Distribution for Coming Quarter

An elaborate program of feature distribution is announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the first quarter of the new year, including the release of a series of stellar productions now in course of preparation. Plans are being formulated for widespread activities, and intensive campaigns will be waged over the entire country, designed to put Hodkinson feature productions in the very front ranks.

For January release, the Hodkinson program calls for the distribution of "Grit," starring Glenn Hunter, the fourth of the series of Film Guild productions, as well as Whitman Bennett's production of Edward Eggleston's mid-western classic, "The Hoosier Schoolmaster."

In February, Hodkinson will release the first of the James Kirkwood-Lila Lee co-star productions, "The Inner Sight," produced under the direction of Bruce Mitchell, and in the same month Harry Carey makes his film debut under the Hodkinson banner in "Night Hawks," the first of a series of six stellar productions made by Hunt Stromberg.

Tentatively scheduled for March is "Painted Women," the second of the series co-starring James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, and possibly the second of the Harry Carey productions.

Keith Books Film

"Judgment of the Storm" to Play Big Circuit

"Judgment of the Storm," the Palmer Photoplay Corporation production being distributed by F. B. O., has been booked for the entire Keith circuit, which embraces the B. S. Moss and Proctor houses in New York.

Charles Rosenzweig, manager of F. B. O.'s New York exchange, who closed the deal with Keith, said: "An unusual tribute is accorded 'Judgment of the Storm' in the closing of the contract with Keith, for they are known as shrewd and careful judges of what the public wants. However, all who have seen 'Judgment of the Storm,' acclaim it the greatest of all photoplays and well worthy of all the confidences the Keith people have placed in it."

The Palmer Corporation will carry newspaper advertising in every key city in the United States, backed by a direct mail campaign on the picture to theatre patrons. It also will have fifty-two exploitation men in the field working on a campaign which will include a newspaper contest designed to draw patrons to the box-office.

Flinn Leaves Paramount

John C. Flinn will leave the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on January 1 to join an important distributing company in an executive capacity, it is announced. No further details are now available concerning the resignation from the Paramount organization of one of its most energetic members. Mr. Flinn originally conducted the advertising and publicity department. Later he joined the theatre department and was assigned special duties. With the completion of "The Covered Wagon" he managed the exploitation of it, going to London to stage the English premiere. Recently he has been handling the advance exploitation on "The Ten Commandments."

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Pay $1,000,000 for Woods Theatre

At last the Woods Theatre is definitely sold to Jones, Linick & Schaefer for a sum in excess of $1,000,000 and the transaction has been confirmed by A. H. Woods, the former owner. Carl Mayer represented Mr. Woods in the deal and Ryan Congdon and Livingston represented the purchasers.

Norman E. Field, general manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, took immediate possession of the house for the new owners and will announce the house manager in a few days. The Woods Theatre in the future will show big film productions on a two-day schedule, with appropriate presentations. Aaron J. Jones has been elected president of the Woods Building Corporation and the A. H. Woods Theatre Company, which control both the office building and the theatre at the corner of Randolph and Dearborn street.

The Jackie Coogan picture, "Long Live the King," at the Chicago Theatre last week proved a good tie-up for children and every youngster bringing something for poor children was admitted free during the matinees. It took several trucks to haul away the clothing that the boys brought to gain admission.

The plans for the new movie theatre that Jacob Horwitz of 10 South La Salle street will build on Robey street are being made by Oman and Lillienthal and the structure when completed will represent an investment of $750,000.

Speer and Whallon, owners of the Lyric Theatre at Gibson City, Ill., have remodeled the house and opened up with a feature picture program.

It is expected that the long run of "Scaramouche" at the Woods Theatre will end next week and Manager Anderson reports the picture has been shown to more than 100,000 in the eleven weeks.

John Deis is planning to build a movie house at Wheaton, Ill., and plans have been drawn by E. N. Drydges which call for a two-story brick and terra cotta building.

Elmer Jerome has been made manager of the Empress Theatre at Decatur, Ill., a mixed program house of vaudeville and pictures, which is under the direction of Wiley McConnell, well known exhibitor.

Another new movie theatre is planned for Joliet, Ill., by Lawrence J. Crowley of that city. A contract has been let to John Krings for the excavation for the new house to cost $350,000. The theatre will front 100 feet on Jefferson street and 132 feet on Scott street and seat 2,200. It is planned to install a fine organ for the musical programs, which will be a big feature.

A new movie theatre will be erected at Lawrenceville, Ill., and it will be named the Gould Theatre.

Another movie theatre is planned for Geneseo, Ill., as a movement is on foot among the business men to build a modern house for the showing of feature films.

A. L. Orr and Son have taken over the management of the Livingston Theatre at Dwight, Ill., having leased the house from Ralph Stevens of this city. The new managers will book feature films and road attractions.

Dee Robinson Dies

Dee Robinson died at Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, Ill., on December 17 while preparatory operations were being made for a blood transfusion from his brother, Sam Robinson, of Peria, Ill. Robinson was fifty-one years old and head of the Madison Theatres Company of Peoria, controlling theatres in several cities in the Illinois territory. One of the best liked members of the motion picture industry, his passing will be mourned by all. He had been ill a considerable length of time.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the safe of the Strand Theatre at Springfield, Ill. The thief escaped by jumping from the balcony of the house.

Arthur Jackson, owner of the Strand Theatre of Crawfordsville, Ind., has taken over the Arc Theatre of the same city and will book for both houses.

The Garden Theatre Corporation has leased the Garden Theatre at Harvey, Ill., for a period of ten years.

The Orpheum Theatre, Peoria, Ill., was damaged by fire that destroyed more than $2,500 worth of scenery stored in a tunnel leading from the building to an exit.

The engagement of the Harris Theatre for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" terminates on December 22 and the house will be turned back to legitimate productions for a few months.

Indiana

Various phases of the motion picture industry were discussed by Charles C. Pettijohn, of New York, and other speakers at a meeting and banquet of the Indianapolis Film Board of Trade at the Hotel Severin, Friday night, December 14. In addition to a number of prominent exhibitors and exchange men, the entire sales staffs and booking agents of the Indianapolis exchanges attended the affair.

Mr. Pettijohn, who formerly lived in Indianapolis, and who is now general counsel for the film boards of trade of the United States, said the work of the national organization was progressing satisfacorily and that the industry is on the threshold of a long era of proserity.

Frank J. Rembusch, Indianapolis, asserted that one of the difficulties of the industry at this time is promotion. He said promotor exhibitors, promotor distributors and promoter theatre owners who do not know the business are largely responsible for financial and co-operation failures.

Billy Connors, of Marion, secretary of the state organization of theatre owners, declared that the film exchange managers should inform their salesmen of the work being done by the film board of trade and the arbitration committees. He said some of the exchangemen failed to protect the jobs of the salesmen unless the salesmen showed more production each week. Such practices should be condemned, he said.

Acting on orders of Fred Sims, receiver for the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Company, Marcus S. Sonntag, appointed to handle the affairs of the Victory and Strand theatres at Evansville, has ordered Charles Sweeton, manager of the American and Majestic theatres, to vacate the Strand Theatre building. The Strand was held under lease by the Consolidated Company. Alleging that the company failed to meet the terms of the lease. Clinton Rose, rental agent for the property, declared the lease invalid on December 1, and granted a five-year lease to Sweeton. Sonntag contends the property is still held under lease by the Consolidated.

Under pressure of the Ministerial Association and a committee representing the Protestant churches of the city, the city council at Washington, Ind., has directed John H. Spencer, city attorney, to draft an ordinance prohibiting moving picture and theatrical shows on Sunday. The ordinance also will require the paying of a license by the theatre owners.

Work was started this week on the construction of a larger stage in the Blackstone Theatre at South Bend. The present stage, according to Ezra Rhodes, manager, is not large enough to permit the staging of road shows or vaudeville acts. Feature pictures will continue to occupy a prominent place on the program regardless of whether road shows or vadeville acts are booked, Rhodes said.

Shannon Katzenbach and Maurice Fox, of the management of the Indiana Theatre at Terre Haute, have installed a "Have a Heart" box in the lobby of the theatre. Money dropped in the box will be turned over to the Terre Haute Welfare League for the purchase of Christmas gifts for the city's poor children.

Fred E. LeComte, manager of the Liberty Theatre at Terre Haute, was in Indianapolis several days this week attending to his new duties as general manager of the theatres of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, now in the hands of a receiver. Robert Cotton, assistant manager, supervised the affairs at the Liberty during his absence.

Three Weeks for "Hunchback" in St. Louis; $27,500 Rental

What is said to be the biggest deal involving a single picture to be shown in one picture house in the history of St. Louis has been concluded by Spyros Skouras, president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, with the St. Louis' exchange of Universal. It provides for a three weeks' showing of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Pershing Theatre, commencing January 5. The price paid for the first-run is said to have been a guarantee of $27,500. The picture will play to a $1.65 top and every seat in the theatre will be reserved during the run.

The past week was marked by several other big picture deals in St. Louis. Fred L. Cornwall, owner of the Delmonte Theatre, who several months ago astounded the natives by closing a deal with Metro Pictures for their entire 1923-24 product for all of St. Louis and St. Louis County for a period of two years, paying $260,000 for the privilege, closed a deal with Universal for the St. Louis first-run on Baby Peggy's first big picture, "The Darling of New York." It will be presented at the big West End house Christmas Week.

William Goldman, owner-manager of the Kings Theatre, secured two big pictures for his house, "The Acquittal," to be shown Christmas Week, and "Thundering Dawn." Goldman also concluded all financial arrangements for his $1,000,000 St. Louis Theatre to be erected at Grand boulevard and Morgan street, and this structure will get under way very shortly. He plans to hold the grand opening on next Labor Day.

Miss A. L. Ketchum, owner of the Plaza Theatre, Clara and Etzel avenues, St. Louis, has concluded a deal whereby on January 1 she will take over the Aubert Theatre, Easton avenue at Aubert avenue, and the Chippewa Theatre, Broadway near Chippewa street.

During the week articles of incorporation were issued by Secretary of State Becker to the A. L. Ketchum Theatre Company, which is to have $30,000 capital. The incorporators are A. L. Ketchum, P. A. Koch, P. G. McElwee and R. H. Roberts. This company will operate the Plaza, Aubert and Chippewa in the future.

J. C. Borden opened his Palace Theatre at Lawrenceville, Ill., on Saturday, December 15. It is one of the best arranged houses in that vicinity. The St. Louis Exhibitors Supply Company, of St. Louis, furnished the two Simplex mazda equipped projection machines and the Minusa curtain for this house.

Jimmie Lawson opened the New Grand Theatre at Mount Olive, Ill., on Thursday, December 13.

Joe Schrempp, former owner of the Knickerbocker Theatre in St. Louis and later in the distribution end of the business, has been named manager of the Duquoin Theatre, Duquoin, Ill.

Jim Drake has leased the Gem Theatre in Sixth street near Market, St. Louis, and is giving St. Louis the biggest show in the world for 10 cents. Drake is putting on a double feature and a comedy with news reels and is packing 'em in.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row the past week were Jim Reilly, Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.; Leo Bernstine, Springfield, Ill., and W. T. Bollinger, Elvins, Mo.

Canada

The theatre properties operated by the J. B. Sparrow Theatrical and Amusement Company, Ltd., Montreal, have been offered for sale. The announcement has caused a sensation in Montreal theatre circles, not only because two of the most outstanding local theatres are affected, but because G. B. Sparrow, president of the company, was the man who was chosen the first national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada on the occasion of the latter's organization meeting in Montreal last September. Mr. Sparrow recently resigned from the M. P. T. O. presidency and has been succeeded by A. D. Denis of Montreal.

The theatres which have been placed on the market are His Majesty's Theatre, a veritable amusement landmark of Canada's largest city, and the Theatre Francais, in the East End of Montreal. Both of these properties are announced for sale "at sacrifice prices."

During a recent period the Theatre Francais was operated by Marcus Loew on a rental basis. Then it was known as the Metropolitan and later as the Court Theatre. Considerable improvement was made in the structure prior to its acquisition by the Loew interests. After some time, the theatre reverted to the Sparrow company, the organizer of which was the late J. B. Sparrow, father of G. B. Sparrow.

The National Theatre, Bay and Dundas streets, Toronto, one of the older downtown theatres, suffered damage by fire to the extent of $7,000 on December 11, the outbreak occurring when there was no one in the building. The stage section of the theatre was gutted and the roof was burned through.

"Richard the Lion-Hearted" followed "Scaramouche" and "The Covered Wagon" at the Tivoli Theatre, Toronto's two-a-day picture theatre, "Richard" opening a week's engagement on December 17 at $1.50 top, all seats being reserved.

The employes of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, formerly the Allen Theatre, are having their annual Christmas Frolic this year as usual. Manager Miller Stewart presented each member of the staff with a turkey as a gift of the management, forty-five birds being distributed. The employes also enjoyed a special midnight show with themselves as principals, their friends being the invited guests.

Manager George Rotsky of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, formerly the Allen, abandoned the regular two-a-day policy of the theatre during the week of December 17 by presenting "Jealous Husbands" at continuous performances. Mr. Rotsky made a special play with performances starting at 10 o'clock each night, this being arranged, he announced, for the benefit of employes of many retail stores which were open until 9 or 10 o'clock each night to take care of the Christmas rush. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened at the Palace on December 23 with performances twice daily and at prices ranging up to $1.50, this being the regular policy.

Philadelphia

Exhibitors who do not accept shows contracted for on an agreed date with the various exchange houses, included in the membership of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade, will be obliged to pay for such films as are included in contracts at specified dates without the privilege of showing the films on a deferred program, according to a resolution adopted at the meeting of the Arbitration Board held during the week at the De Luxe Exchange headquarters. In the future no redress will be granted either in the way of subsequent showings or in the cancellation of payments, the exhibitor paying for the film as per date of contract.

Another innovation was the determination to do away with the acceptance of contracts signed by agents, bookers, operators and other employes of picture houses and to make future bookings only with the bona fide signatures of the owners.

With the completion of the building operations, which practically made a new theatre out of the Opera House, at Dover, Del., there was introduced to the amusement enterprises of the town one of the most modern picture theatres in that section of the state. On Thursday of last week the reopening ceremonies were inaugurated with the mayor and city officials participating. They warmly commended the owners, a syndicate headed by President George Schwartz, for the erection of so artistic and modern a structure. The house seats 1,000 instead of the former 650. The interior is handsomely decorated in gold and black, a new Typhoon system and an organ introduced and a modern projection room erected.

Two more theatres have been added to those controlled by J. Everett Lewis, enterprising proprietor of the Plaza Theatre at Milford, Del., and the Everett Theatre at Middletown, Del., through the acquisition of the picture theatres in the adjoining towns of Crisfield and Saulsbury, Maryland.

An elaborate building program is now in progress at the Opera House of Norristown, Pa., which has been added to the string of theatres owned by Benjamin Sablosky, and including the Lyric, Garrick and Empire. The rebuilding of the century old Opera House will involve an expenditure of $300,000 and when completed will give the city one of the finest theatres of its kind in any city of like size, with a seating capacity of 2,000.

First-Run House for Long Beach, Cal.

THE biggest theatrical and realty deal in Pacific Coast exhibition circles was announced last week by West Coast Theatres, Inc., through Michael Gore, president, with Walter S. Horne Company and I. E. Baker of Long Beach for the construction of a theatre and office building on Ocean Boulevard, in Long Beach, Cal. The deal and business transaction involved is in excess of $4,000,000, calling for the immediate beginning of work on an eight-story de luxe theatre and office building on the north side of Ocean Boulevard, between American and Elm avenues at Long Beach. The site of the new structure is 150 feet by 155 feet, and the property one of the most important business centers of Long Beach.

With this deal the city of Long Beach assumes an important place in Pacific Coast theatricals. The theatre is to seat 3,000. Harry C. Arthur, r., general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., is authority for the statement that plans have been approved by which he executive committee of West Coast Theatres will provide Long Beach with a theatre that is to compare favorably with the biggest and finest institutions in the country.

A big symphony orchestra, under a prominent conductor, will also be a feature of the house, which will be run on a basis equal to the first-run Los Angeles theatres. Frank M. Browne, division manager of Long Beach, will be in charge of the destinies of the new house.

Markowitz in San Francisco Reduces Strand's Admissions

M. L. Markowitz, owner of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has come out with the public statement that theatre admission prices are too high and has taken the lead in a movement to bring these down to a more reasonable level. In a recent statement he said: "For some time it has been the general custom for all downtown theatres showing high-grade, first-run feature pictures to do what the other fellow does, but sometimes some one comes to the realization that existing conditions can be improved by the inauguration of a new policy and such is the case at the Strand Theatre right now. We have come to the conclusion that theatre admission prices are too high, and after carefully weighing the question find we can afford to show the best pictures at lower prices and still make a reasonable profit because of our low rent and operating expenses. Our new schedule of prices is 20 cents for matinees, including Saturdays, with children 10 cents, and 40 cents for evenings, Sunday and holiday matinees, with a 15-cent rate for children. We are featuring independent productions such as those of Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Harold Lloyd, D. W. Griffith and Charles Ray. We are not controlled by any producing company but operate an independent theatre showing independent attractions."

The management of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, has broken its policy of making a weekly change in program regardless of the excellence of the screen attraction, and "Flaming Youth" has been held over for a second week. House records were broken the first week, according to Manager Charles M. Pincus, and the longer run was literally forced by popular demand. The world premiere of "Black Oxen" has been delayed a week because of this. This premiere will be followed by the first showing anywhere of "The Half Dollar Bill," a Graf production made in San Francisco and distributed through Metro.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., will spend about $75,000 in improvements in the Oakland T. & D. Theatre and at the conclusion of the work the name of the house will be changed. Harry Arthur, general manager of this organization, was a recent visitor from Los Angeles, conferring with A. M. Bowles, manager of the Northern California division.

C. L. Laws, manager of the California Theatre, Watsonville, Cal., spent a week at Los Angeles recently investigating the system followed out in the management of leading houses of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., in the southern field.

Under the direction of General Manager William Citron, a Kiddie Revue will be offered every evening during Christmas week at the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, San Francisco.

The National Theatres Syndicate, San Francisco, headed by L. R. Crook, which recently purchased the theatre of Frank Atkins at Marysville, Cal., through the office of J. R. Saul, will enlarge the house and install new furnishings at a cost of about $40,000. The deal included the purchase of this house outright, with the land on which it stands, and involved about $150,000.

B. Getz, Inc., San Francisco, is having plans prepared for a one-story theatre to be erected at San Mateo, a peninsula suburb, at an estimated cost of $115,000.

Charles Douglass, who conducted a theatre at Merced, Cal., for many years, has returned to the amusement business after a brief respite and is now operating the Realart Theatre at Los Angeles.

John Triguerio, who operates two theatres at Fort Bragg, Cal., has arranged to take over the Strand Theatre, a new 500-seat house at Santa Rosa. This will be operated as a second-run picture theatre.

Mr. and Mrs. G. O. Cole, of the Virginia Theatre, Virginia City, Nev., were visitors on San Francisco's Film Row early in December. Other visitors the same week were Ed Stark, of the Opal Theatre, Hollister, Cal.; Mr. Harvey of Vacaville, A. A. Richards, of Modesto, and P. W. Byrd, Hanford, Cal.

James Barlow, of the Rialto Theatre, Stockton, has been quite seriously ill of late and has been confined to his bed in a hospital, but is expected to be able to be out shortly.

The Lyric Theatre, Stockton, Cal., has booked William H. Hart in "Wild Bill Hickok" and has offered a fine silver cup to the troop of Boy Scouts making the best showing in a stunts contest.

Cincinnati

The past, present and future of motion pictures were discussed from the standpoint of observers in different fields at the annual luncheon of the Cincinnati Better Motion Picture Council, at Hotel Sinton last week. Brief addresses were made by I. Libson, manager of most of the first-run houses in the city, Ben Strasser, local film director, Wm. Keiser, president of local Film Board of Trade, and Wm. G. Stiegler, motion picture editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star.

Harry Gordon, formerly picture theatre manager at Portsmouth, Ohio, who has been manager of the Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., since the house opened six months ago, has resigned his position and has been succeeded by Sam Dieman, who was a groceryman before entering the picture game.

Forbes and Craig have taken over the Alva Theatre at Bowerson, Ohio, while L. A. Pilliod at Grand Rapids, Ohio, has disposed of his Photoplay Theatre to J. Nofus.

Spectacular Fire Destroys Theatre in Everett, Wash.

The Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., was completely demolished by fire in a spectacular blaze that occurred early Tuesday morning, December 11. The loss is estimated at $100,000. It is partly covered by insurance. The fire is thought to have started from a short circuit or from sparks in the furnace room. The Everett was the only house in the city with a stage large enough to house legitimate attractions. It had for some time been showing high grade feature pictures. The house was built in 1900 at a cost of $70,000. Very recently a large sum had been spent for improvements, alteraitons, decorations and furnishings. The building was owned by the Everett Improvement Company and under lease to the Star Amusement Company. About $1,500 worth of films and the projection machine were saved from the fireproof projection booth and vault.

C. A. Swanson of the Star Amusement Company was in Seattle the following day. He states that the house will be rebuilt immediately. The new structure will probably be one of the finest houses in the state, although there has not yet been time for anything but a brief review of the situation.

President Howard S. Clemmer of the M. P. T. O. of Washington, and Ray Grombacher, trustee, both of Spokane, called a meeting for Eastern Washington exhibitors who had been unable to attend the organization meeting in Seattle several weeks ago. Telegrams were sent to thirty-five, twenty-five of whom turned out. Wires received from the other ten assured cooperation. The meeting was held in Spokane December 11. It was opened by Mr. Grombacher, who presented Dr. Clemmer. J. M. Hone, executive secretary-treasurer, who maintains the organization's offices in Seattle, went over for the meeting and received the twenty-five new members. A banquet attended by fifty exhibitors and exchangemen and their wives and friends concluded the meeting, which was followed on Wednesday by a trustees' meeting in Seattle.

Francis J. Mraz will open his new Mraz Theatre in Colton, Wash., about January 1.

L. K. Kubley, who owns the Dream Theatre, Ketchikan, Alaska, is in Seattle arranging bookings. He has signed for the entire Educational product of short subjects for the coming year.

James Q. Clemmer, a leading pioneer in the picture history of the Pacific Northwest, is back in Seattle vacationing.

Col. M. H. Newman, general manager for Universal houses in the Pacific Northwest, is in Seattle for a few days.

Roy Boomer, formerly manager of the Spokane Universal exchange, has resigned to take over the management of the Cameo Theatre in San Francisco.

J. W. (Jack) Allender, of the Allender circuit in Eastern Washington, was in Seattle this week.

After being completely refitted and redecorated, the old Flag Theatre, First avenue near Pike street, has been reopened under new name of Market Theatre. It is a 10-cent house. A. B. Johnson is manager.

Nebraska

The Palace Theatre in Sioux City, Ia., which was badly damaged by fire some weeks ago, is to be remodeled extensively.

The Strand Theatre at Sioux City, Neb., has been closed by its proprietor, R. E. Geesman.

Miss Genevieve Jenkins, daughter of J. C. Jenkins, owner of the Auditorium Theatre at Neligh, Neb., spent a few weeks in the hospital at Omaha recently.

W. B. Wheeler has sold the Victor Theatre at Bertrand, Neb.

Oklahoma

Roy Bettis has taken over the management of the Hippodrome, Okmulgee, Okla.

Manager Mayberry will open his new Criterion Theatre at Enid, Okla., about January 1, 1924. The theatre will be strictly modern.

North Carolina Exhibitors Amicably Adjust Music Tax

All differences existing between the North Carolina theatre owners and the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers have been amicably adjusted, according to Henry B. Varner, president of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., who attaches to his notification to all exhibitors a list of all theatres in the state together with the compromise annual dues agreed upon for the performance of copyright music in all theatres.

A series of conferences between Mr. Varner and officials of the society culminated in a meeting of these officials and the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. in Charlotte, at which the entire matter was threshed out to the satisfaction of both sides, and a new scale of fees, approximately one-half the original demands, agreed upon, affecting every theatre in the state. This new scale went into effect on December 1 and Mr. Varner is now busily engaged in getting signed agreements from the individual theatre owners, since the entire plan is contingent upon small exhibitors paying the new fees without protest.

It was agreed by the society to drop all of the forty-one suits now pending in the United States courts against Carolina exhibitors for infringement of their rights under the copyright laws as soon as the new plan gets into effect all over the state, and President Varner is congratulating himself and the exhibitors upon saving something like $20,000 annually for them.

E. J. Sparks Enterprises, controlling fourteen theatres in Florida, a majority of which were former Southern Enterprises houses, has opened permanent Atlanta offices in charge of E. T. Brown for the purpose of handling bookings of pictures and legitimate attractions for their chain of houses, the offices being in the Metropolitan building. The Sparks chain includes the following Florida houses: Jefferson and Orpheum, St. Augustine; Grand, Beacham, American and Phillips, Orlando; Drekka and Deland, Deland; Baby Grand, Winter Park; Sarasota, Sarasota Star and Opera House, Arcadia; Casino and Auditorium, Lakeland.

J. F. Howard has opened his new Peoples Theatre in Lenoir City, Tenn., with a seating capacity of 300, modern in every respect. W. M. Hayes is building a 300-seat house in Lenoir City, the New Amuzu, which will open January 1.

To build up the usually dull December receipts, Willard Patterson of the Metropolitan, Atlanta, has devised a ticket book scheme giving $6 worth of tickets for $5. Through a tie-up with the Atlanta Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, these books will be offered to all their carriers with clubs of subscriptions, the carriers who obtain the largest numbers of subscribers each week winning ticket books. The first order of the newspapers was for 2,000 books, which means a lot of extra cash coming in for "Pat." Another tie-up was effected with the United Cigar Stores Company to sell the books and maintain a counter display in each of their Atlanta stores.

M. A. Lightman, well known Tennessee and Arkansas exhibitor, is opening the Princess Theatre, North Little Rock, Ark.

C. S. Smith, exhibitor from Newman, Ga., has returned home after attending the trial of the noted Doctor Frederick Cook.

Walter White, of Jefferson, Tenn., has taken over the Gay at Newport, Tenn., from W. C. Carter. Mr. Carter will continue to operate his Liberty, Greenville, Tenn.

Samuel Borisky was an interesting visitor on Atlanta's Film Row the past week.

W. M. Sugarman visited Atlanta the past week in the interest of his Peking and Grand theatres in Montgomery, Ala.

W. H. C. Dudley is reopening the Opera House, Americus, Ga., closed since July 1. He is one of the pioneers in the industry, having been an exhibitor since 1900.

Burgettstown, Pa., Theatre to Boast Free Public Baths

Romania Brothers, prominent business men of Burgettstown, Pa., are erecting a $75,000 picture theatre in that town which they expect to have ready for opening about the middle of January. The house, as yet unnamed, will be modern in every respect and will seat 750. The exterior is very handsome, being done in red and white brick.

In the basement of the new building there will be baths, free to the public. Pool, billiard halls and bowling alleys are also included in the basement plans. J. De Walt will be house manager and will do all booking of films. Burgettstown is a town of but 1,500 persons, and already boasts of two picture theatres, the Grand and the Auditorium.

Congratulations to E. F. Claffey of the Liberty Theatre, Sharon, whose wife recently presented him with twin baby girls. Mother and children are doing well.

Linn J. Blackford, who years ago conducted the Nittany Theatre at State College, has opened his new Clifton Theatre at Huntingdon. It is a beautiful picture theatre and stands on the site of the old Gamble Theatre. Seating capacity is 900.

The Harry Davis Enterprises opened their newest downtown house in Pittsburgh on December 24. It is known as the Ritz and seats 1,000.

George S. Mackay, formerly assistant manager at Rowland and Clark's Belmar Theatre in the Homewood district, has been promoted to manager.

A. Roth of the Seven Stars Theatre, Phillipsburg, and Jake Smith of Smith's Opera House, Barnesboro, were recently in town.

Manager William W. Clark of the Rivoli Theatre, East Pittsburg, says business is coming along in great style. Clark has recently added $3,000 worth of improvements to his pipe organ and installed an orchestra as well.

Miss Agnes Rapp, who manages her father's Theatorium at Emleton, is touring Canada in her car. She expected to be back home for the holidays.

F. J. Dion of the Orpheum Theatre, Franklin, is back on the job again, hunting the business as usual, after having spent several days down in North Carolina "hunting wild game."

Ben Engleberg, owner of the new Elmore Theatre, Pittsburgh, is back on the job after having been confined for several days to his bed suffering from the grip.

Barth Dattola, popular owner of the Alhambra Theatre at New Kensington, has the sympathy of the film fraternity as the result of his mother's death, which occurred in Italy at the age of 82 years. Barth visited his mother this summer and saw her for the first time in twenty-two years.

J. George Schweitzer, theatre magnate from Titusville, spent several days in town recently film shopping.

Harry Browarsky, of the Rex in East Liberty, and C. G. Becker of the State Theatre, Butler, are the latest exhibitors to purchase Hudson coaches.

Jake Silverman of the Strand, Altoona, and Nick Anas of Wellsburg were recent Film Row visitors.

The Paramount Theatre at Connellsville has been enlarged recently and the capacity has been increased by two hundred seats. The lobby is also being redecorated. Messrs. Maracas and Mikalaris are the owners.

E. F. Nutter of Rowlesburg and Terra Alta, W. Va., has just opened his newest theatre in the last named town.

A Mr. Deemer is the new manager at the Fairmont Theatre at Fairmont, W. Va.

A charter has been issued to the Raleigh Amusement Company of Raleigh, W. Va. Capital, $10,000. Incorporators: K. C. Washington, O. T. Wilkerson, James W. Cox, C. T. Beryer and Hyden Smith, all of Raleigh.

Do Southern Women Lead in Industry?

HOW many women are holding executive positions in the film industry "on their own" in the United States? Do the Southern States hold the palm when it comes to progressive women exhibitors, exchange managers, etc.? There are eleven progressive, independent women exhibitors in Georgia alone, and the news of a week includes mention of several "forward" women in the industry in the Southeast. For instance, during the past week:

Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, who formerly operated a live theatre at Easley, S. C., while her husband sold films for Al Lichtman, announces that she has taken over a new theatre at Belton, S. C., and along with its managment will also operate the principal hotel there.

Mrs. Willingham Wood built a theatre and leased it to outside parties. Their lease expired November 1 and she announces that in the future she will conduct the show herself.

Mrs. Anna Sessions, Southern District manager for Hodkinson, pays a "pop call" to the Atlanta exchange.

Miss Bertha Schindehaur, with General Film since its first organization until it dissolved, then with Vitagraph, has just resigned her position.

Mrs. Willard (Pat) Patterson (nee Anna Eugene Aiken), publisher of the only regional motion picture trade paper in the South, flays those who would tax the motion picture out of existence.

Mrs. H. T. Allen of Atlanta has just completed a tour of the Carolinas, placing the service of the Pictorial News service in theatres which are pledged to run these slides to pay their dues to the North Carolina M. P. T. O.

Latest Albany Rumor Does Injustice to Wm. Shirley

A rumor which spread like wildfire over Schenectady, N. Y., as well as the Film Row in Albany, to the effect that William Shirley was no longer general manager of the Farash Corporation, controlling the State, Albany and Strand theatres in Schenectady, was officially denied a day or so ago by William W. Farley, of Albany, head of the company. Just how the rumor started is a question which Mr. Farley would like answered, and it is just possible that he will conduct a quiet investigation in an effort to place the blame where it belongs. The fact that Mr. Shirley was in New York the fore part of the week was added to the rumor as a means of substantiation. According to Mr. Farley, there has been no change in the Farash company and none is contemplated.

Eli Rosenbaum, proprietor of the Hippodrome in Ogdensburg, has been named defendant in an action brought by a song publishing company of New York and which is slated for the December term of District Court in Utica. Mr. Rosenbaum has retained Attorney J. A. Goldstein of Utica, but claims that he has a receipt to show that he obtained permission from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to play all copyrighted songs in his theatre.

Captain George Broome, general cashier of the Farash Corporation of Schenectady, has resigned and has been succeeded by Frank Hickey of Albany.

The more enterprising of the picture theatres of Albany, Troy and Schenectady are all dolled up in anticipation of the Christmas Holidays. The lobby of the Mark Strand in Albany is particularly beautiful in its heavy garlands of holly leaves entwined with red rope. The lobby of the Leland in Albany is also handsome in garlands and Christmas bells, while in Schenectady the management of the State and Strand has gone the limit, using small Christmas trees handsomely trimmed. Over the marquee at the Barcli, small Christmas trees wired with tiny electric lights proclaim the spirit of Christmastide at night.

The Movie Home Journal, started last April by Oscar Perrin as a means of better advertising attractions at the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany, now calls for a mailing circulation each month of about 2,000 copies.

On Saturday night, December 15, William E. Benton opened his new Capitol Theatre in Whitehall, N. Y. Invitations to the opening had been received by all the film exchanges in Albany, but owing to the distance few managers were able to make the trip. The house takes rank as one of the most beautiful in that section of the state, and it will be handled by Miss Georgiana Wallace, formerly of the new Grand in Whitehall.

Harry Symansky, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, probably books his pictures quicker than any man in this territory. Young and alert, Mr. Symansky seems to know just what his patrons want. Following a screening of "Reno" a few days ago, it took Mr. Symansky just thirty seconds to book the picture and sign the contract.

The sympathy of the readers of Moving Picture World is extended to Walter Hays of Buffalo, vice-president of the Strand chain of theatres, in the recent loss of his mother.

Quite a few of the exhibitors of central and northern New York were along Film Row during the last few days. Charles H. Moyer, who runs houses in Herkimer and Little Falls, had a hard time to find Albany hotel accommodations. Al Bothner, managing three houses in Troy, booked Fox product, while Mrs. A. E. Milligan of Schuylerville reported business as fair. Samuel Wood, who will open a house in Canajoharie on Christmas Day, made his first visit here in many a month. Jack Troy of Hudson also was among the visitors.

The Griswold Theatre of Troy showed fine Christmas spirit in inviting the orphans of that city to attend a presentation of Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days" as guests of F. F. Proctor.

Denny Reegan of the Star in Greenwich hit Albany the other day with blood in his eye. This is in the way of a warning to exchanges not to attempt to "load" poor film on Mr. Reegan, who has a mind of his own and is not afraid to speak it.

Whatever you do, don't hand Sam Suckno, theatrical magnate of Albany, N. Y., a cigar. The other day, one of the film exchange managers presented Mr. Suckno with a cigar which he supposed had been given him by one of the wealthiest residents of the city. Mr. Suckno managed to take a few puffs of the cigar, after which he consigned it to a cuspidor, remarking that it was the worst smoke that he had ever had. It later developed that the cigar had been presented the exchange manager by the dirty towel man, the manager having unwittingly given the wrong cigar to Mr. Suckno.

The Barcli in Schenectady certainly made the right move when it decided to admit all children at all shows for 10 cents. John J. Walker, who formerly owned the theatre, charged children the same admission as adults, but on the advice of Frank Breymaier, the new owner, R. V. Erk dropped the price to 10 cents, and now other houses in the city have followed suit.

Robert Landry, owning houses in Ogdensburg, Malone and Plattsburg, has booked "Little Old New York" for the three places.

Father Blais, who runs the Strand in Schroon Lake, N. Y., is trying out double features.

Frank Breymaier, manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, will give a Christmas party to the employes of the theatre some time between Christmas and New Year's.

William Shirley, general manager of the Farash Theatre Corporation in Schenectady, received a couple of Christmas club checks last week, which caused him to remark facetiously that he would probably distribute them "among the film boys in Albany."

According to the management of the Barcli, over 4,500 residents of Schenectady witnessed in a single day a recent showing of "Chronicles of America." The house opened at 11 A. M., charging a 15-cent admission up to nightfall, when 20 and 30 cents prevailed.

It may be that some of the exhibitors are not making money these days, but Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, is not among the number. Mr. Hellman sports a brand new Cadillac car, and in fact had two a few days ago, but returned one to New York simply because he did not like the color.

New Hampshire

Leave it to "Pete" Latchis to give the public what it wants, say the folks up here. Since the grand opening on November 21 of the new Latchis Theatre, Keene, N. H., a new interest in motion pictures and theatricals has pervaded the city and the theatre has done a rushing business.

The opening show in "The Most Up-to-Date Theatre in the World in a Small City" lived up to all promises. Besides Jackie Coogan's "Long Live the King" there was grand opera singing, Keith vaudeville and Ferdinando's Havana Orchestra. A feature of all the programs has been the new pipe organ, played by Edward Allen.

Canada Incorporates

Announcement is made of the incorporation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada under a company charter with headquarters at Montreal, Quebec. The Canadian association, of course, is affiliated with the M. P. T. O. of the United States. The Canadian M. P. T. O. has adopted a crest or trade mark having for its design a maple leaf superimposed with a chain circle which surrounds a beaver. Within the circle is the name of the association and a line, "Incorporated 1923." Both the maple leaf and the beaver are national emblems of Canada and the chain circle represents the co-operative policy of the association.

Buffalo

Mrs. C. B. Darrow has leased the Central Park Theatre from James Wallingford for a period of years. Jim will now devote all his efforts to the Allendale, a west side community theatre.

Howard Waugh, who formerly managed several houses in Jamestown, N. Y., has been engaged by Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department, as manager of the Place Theatre, the demonstration point theatre of the Paramount company in Memphis, Tenn.

Interests who are trying to put over a Sunday picture ordinance in Geneva, N. Y., have run up against much opposition from churches. Interest centers on the next meeting of the council, December 20, when the ordinance permitting Sunday pictures will come up for its first reading.

James Cardina, who operates the New Varsity and Kensington in Buffalo and the Glen in Williamsville, announces that he will close the Kensington next summer for extensive alterations and improvements, including a new stage, heating plant and organ.

Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager at the Lafayette Square, is in a terrible fix. It looks like he will have to have his tonsils removed a day or so before the big Christmas dinner is served.

The employes of the Victoria Theatre, West Ferry and Grant streets, will be treated to a Christmas "feed" by Mrs. Mitchell H. Mark and Walter Hayes on the afternoon of December 29. The banquet board will be placed on the stage.

Nikitas Dipson has reduced admission prices at the Grand Theatre in Batavia, N. Y., where he has just opened the new Family.

The Church of the Christian and Missionary Alliance in Endicott, N. Y., is being remodeled by Benjamin Dittrich into a picture theatre. It will accommodate 600, have a small stage and space for an orchestra and charge 10 cents. The opening will be late in January, it is hoped.

W. Griffith Mitchell Improves Book Into the Perambulating Poster Kiosk

GETTING back to his old desk in the Majestic Theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., W. Griffith Mitchell signalizes his return to the fold by combining the perambulating book, the Parisian news kiosk and the war-time bomb proof into the Griffith Poster Perambulator as shown in the illustration and which he first used, being a First National franchiser, on Jackie Coogan in Circus Days.

A First National Release

THE PERAMBULATOR

This original structure seems to be a light erection of 1x2s covered with corrugated paper or cloth, dome covered and provided with small castors on which the structure rolls, propelled by a one-man motor inside the device.

The front carries a one sheet below the peep holes, with other ones on the sides and a three sheet at the back. If desired two threes may be pasted back of the peep holes with the one sheet in front, or streamers may be worked on the sides above the ones. The surface is there. You may use it as you please.

Build to Endure

But now that Mr. Mitchell has demonstrated the value of the device it would be better to build for permanency, for this is a stunt that can be worked for every title and which will still be good long after the novelty value has worn off.

Build the top of a solid circle, on which the dome is erected. This will make it cooler in summer, as the head of the motive power will not be exposed directly to the heat from the roof.

Build the frame with a door in the rear through which the man may enter and mount it on roller bearing truck castors, three or four inch size, instead of the lighter furniture castors, and keep these oiled. Cover with sheet metal and paint the house plate above the peep holes and repeat just the name all the way around. Build it of sheet metal and you will have an advertising device that will serve you well, week in and week out, which can be used in inclement weather, and if necessary you can supply your permabulator with an oil stove and even a drop seat for his rest periods.

But first find out how the police feel about it. If they give an O. K., you have one problem permanently solved.

You can add noise making devices or light it up at night for transparency work. It is as elastic as a bootlegger's conscience.

Not So Good

The Royal Theatre, Laredo, Texas, as has been told before, uses two-language posters, specially painted, and all of the titles are done into Spanish. It's not so bad as a rule, but recently "Como una Rosa" did not sound half as attractive as "Mighty Lak a Rose." Takes all the poetry out.

Vital Statistics for Woman Proof

When it came to playing Woman Proof, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, distributed to women patrons a manilla envelope printed up "For Women Only. Don't show this to your sweetheart." There was also a cut of a flock of women storming the doors of the Bachelor Club.

Inside were circulars asking "Do you know what the Woman Proof Age is?" "Is there a Woman Proof age?" "See Tom Meighan in Woman Proof at the Howard" and the date.

In a twelve point framed panel were the vital statistics proving that up to date 2,154 men and women had been married in Atlanta in 1923, of which 1,003 were between 20 and 30, 351 between 30 and 35, 500 between 35 and 40, 101 between 40 and 48, 167 between that and 53 and 134 between 53 and 79. This ended with the same inquiry as to what the woman proof age was and the inference that while there was life there was hope.

It is not altogether new, though new in this form, and it made a novelty that was held to be shown so that each had a circulation value of four or five. It should be easy to work out the figures if your town is not too large, but it would be better to use only the ages of the grooms.

Reciprocal

Getting a hook-up page on Strangers of the Night, the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, put a misspelled word in each space and gave ticket prizes for their discovery. More than one hundred correct answers were turned in and that many tickets disposed of.

It might have ended there had not P. F. Schwie thought to write the Herald in comment on its "tremendous pulling power," and the least an appreciative advertising manager could do was reproduce the letter, and there was no charge for that free publicity. Milk it dry while you're at it.

THE BIG FLASH FOR HAROLD LLOYD IN WHY WORRY PLANNED BY THE STRAND, ALTOONA

This shows an exceptionally good collection of jazzy selling lines and a particularly good use of the cutout figures from the lithographs worked into a single splash front that is better than the average because it is not overdone. There are no repeated figures and each is given an isolation which permits it to be displayed to the fullest advantage where crowding would reduce the effect.

Congratulations!

This department extends its congratulations to the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, to Fred S. Meyer, the manager, and E. M. Brewer, who assists him in the handling of the Palace Theatre program, which has just closed its fourth year.

Four years ago Mr. Meyer brought out a thin weekly program. The local merchants contributed their advertising, more because Mr. Meyer was so thoroughly likable than because they expected to reap any real return. It was, in many ways, much like several hundred other house organs, but it had a personality, it aimed to be something more than the mere recital of the film attractions, plus perfunctory clipped matter. Even then it talked for Hamilton and its interest as well as for the Palace.

Today the program, now a monthly, appears as a one hundred page regular issue and is regarded as one of the most productive merchant advertising mediums in that territory. It has a direct mail circulation of more than 3,000 copies, and it is eagerly looked for and read. And this has all come to pass because when he started out to produce a house organ Mr. Meyer used a pen instead of a paste brush, and used it with intelligence.

Today the magazine has a family running well into three figures, and two or three hundred managers in various parts of the country owe to Mr. Meyer the pattern upon which they have founded their own successful publications.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AFTER adding jazz musicians to the regular orchestra for several weeks, one at a time, to perfect the symphonized jazz incident of the program, the Brooklyn Mark Strand Little Symphonized Jazz Orchestra has now blossomed out as an organization of harmonists which can be lifted out of the symphony orchestra for use in radio broadcasting and for stage presentations. The first appearance of these as a unit was made with the picture, "Flaming Youth," when an atmospheric prelude consisted of the Jazz Orchestra and four members of the ballet. The usual Symphonized Jazz was omitted for that week, and a classical overture took its place.

"Raymond," the overture, although a classic, was snappy enough to sustain the tempo of the program. Two booth floods of Mestrum make, 150 amperes each, covered the entire stage with color blend, and two dome floods of same amperage were on the orchestra, also color blend. Two entrance spots, color blend, crossed on the overhead canopy. The transparent columns had color blend spots shooting from the top, and rose pink spots upward from the base. Took up eight minutes.

Songs and Dances of Long Ago was put on partly because of the wonderful reception of previous old selections. Numbers were "Sweetest Story Ever Told," by Grand Chorus of twelve women; "Minuet," by chorus and four members of the ballet, and "To a Wild Rose," by chorus and premier danseuse. At opening the silver draw curtains served as transparency through which the singers were seen in Colonial costume, grouped with props of gold chairs and settees. For first song four overhead spots, two light pink and two light amber, augmented by two amber spots from one side and two orange from the other, picked out the singers. Silver cyclorama back drop was lighted from behind by three light blue open box lamps, and two green and two magenta spots. Footlights blue. Second number brought on the dancers, and they were taken care of by light blue x-rays and amber and orange arch spots. The chorus sang the number in accompaniment to the dancers, the chorus lighting being the same as described.

For the third number the side spots dimmed off, leaving four overhead spots to care of the solo dancer and ensemble. The green and magenta spots crossed on the back cyclorama.

The atmospheric prologue to "Flaming Youth" had a platform setting for the jazz orchestra. The deep blue plush cyclorama had an opening 12 feet high, 10 feet wide and 18 inches high, back of which was the platform. There was a valance covering the opening, with gold tassels and cords. A crystal chandelier hung down from center, and a tinsel drop was backed up by a purple poplin cyclorama. There were two five-light floor standards behind the arch. Opening selection was "Bambalina," by jazz orchestra and four dancers. Next was "Somebody's Wrong" and "Dreamy Melody" by jazz band alone, and then came "Everybody Strut," jazz and dancers. With the last named number a lobsterscope flicker was used, with dancers in "slow motion," and at the finish all lights flashed up white. The keynote of the lighting for this incident was light green, with magenta for contrast. These two colors blended on the back cyclorama from behind, the effect being very unusual. Ran nine minutes.

The feature picture took up one hour and twenty-two minutes, the Review eight minutes, and the musical incidents twenty-six minutes, making a show of one hour and fifty-six minutes.

Punchy Postals

Following up the out-of-town postcards, the First National has designed a somewhat startling imitation handwritten card on Anna Christie in which Anna announces her impending arrival in the reader's home town and urging him to withhold judgment until he can hear her story.

We presume that the First National exchanges will mail these cards from the exchange cities to get the proper postmark and imagine that it is going to shake a lot of innocent people to their souls' foundations. If you have Anna booked, better get your mailing list ready. This is too good to overlook.

Tinned Ballyhoo

Opening In the Palace of the King, the Rialto Theatre, Newark, used a knight in armor for a ballyhoo. To take the load off his feet, they gave him a horse, and lettered the blanket. Armored knights are rare in Newark, so every one stopped to look, and noted the play and house.

In the lobby there was more armor and some old Spanish flags, along with two boy trumpeters who sounded fanfares when they were not working in the stage prologue.

This title offers ample opportunities for dressing up the exploitation and Manager Fernkause did not overlook a bet.

Many Windows

Twenty-nine windows for ten days each makes a total of 290 days. That's what George E. Brown got in Charlotte, N. C., for Zaza at the Imperial Theatre.

He made a hook-up with the Colgate people who sent a man down to help him work their dealers, and the special brought with him 1,000 samplers which were promptly labeled for the play and given to the dealers for distribution. They were all distributed the day prior to the opening, but were announced for ten days previously.

This was only one of his stunts, but by far the most effective.

The jazz unit of the house orchestra was supplemented by four young girls, who did a characteristic dance on the production stage to the music of the sextet of players. Jazz bands are available everywhere, and even the small towns can develop the dancers

Consistent Drive for Anniversary

For its third anniversary, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, used red on white for all his printing and split the display between the celebration and Stephen Steps Out.

The most important hook-in was with a local candy company which supplied 500 pounds of candy to be distributed to the women patrons, and furnished a white uniformed attendant to pass out the samples, also putting up a booth in the foyer to serve as a base of supplies. Six five pound boxes of the candy were also donated for daily prizes. The other end of this stunt was a window in the candy store. It proved a big puller and cost nothing.

For a ballyhoo the Tech High School band and cadets were invited to see young Fairbanks in his first play and gave an extended parade before arriving at the theatre. At several points along the line the march was halted for an exhibition drill. As the Tech in all its roots and branches is a local pride there was a moral as well as straight ballyhoo value to this stunt. It cost nothing, but Kingsmore donated $25 to the instrument fund of the band as an appreciation, and he could not well have gotten more for his money.

A cafeteria with two large establisments was given 500 passes good only Monday afternoon, and purchased another 500 at ten cents each. All were printed to suggest that the caterers had paid for the slips, which gave a better impression. The natural inference was that the cafe management had picked on the show because it was the best, rather than that the theatre was trying to get a large first audience for an unknown star.

Three thousand imitation hand written postals were sent to schools and colleges to tell about the school atmosphere of the play, and there was a special prologue to mark the third milestone.

First National Helps

First National announces that it has arranged for a popular priced reprint of Black Oxen through A. L. Burt & Co. and has arranged with Waterson, Berlin and Snyder to use When Romance Wakes as the theme song for this production.

They have also arranged with Witmark to use Dear Little Boy of Mine for the plugger to Boy of Mine. Ben Alexander's picture will be used on the front page of this and Miss Griffith will grace the Black Oxen plugger front.

Spent $1,800

Generally an increase in the advertising appropriation on a picture goes into special stunts, but Harry Dahn, of the Capitol Theatre, put an extra thousand dollars into newspaper work when he came to put over Ashes of Vengeance at his house. He spent $1,800 in all, but for that he got a fine business for two weeks, and cleared a large profit on the investment.

He figured that there was a large French population which would particularly appreciate the French locale of this Talmadge production. He knew that the newspapers were the most positive approach, so he took unusually large spaces in both the French and English language newspapers, chiefly in advance. Spending so much, he was careful to get particularly good copy and cuts to make the best possible impression.

Most managers would have diverted a share of that money to ballyhoo, but Dahn wisely figured that ballyhoo work did not accord well with the dignified character of Ashes. He holds his exploits for the zippy stories and gets additional respect for the Talmadge work through his own respectful attitude toward the product. He wanted to bring his patrons into the house in the proper frame of mind.

EXPLOITATION FOR THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME TOOK A NEW ANGLE IN LOS ANGELES

B. F. Robinson, exploitation man in the L. A. exchange borrowed the original props and displayed them in contrast with the modern shoes, autos, as contrasted with a litter, the musical instruments and ancient and modern weapons. Original props are not at the disposal of the average exhibitor, but a few can be rented from a costumer to duplicate this general idea.

Put a Flasher on Branded Shoulder

J. P. Harrison had a nice little idea for Pola Negri in The Cheat and it did not cost several hundred dollars, either. He put her over at the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, Texas, at the cost of a little paper and some art work.

He made a cutout from the lithograph and set in his own brand showing a diamond ring and a circle enclosing the word "cheat." This was cut through so that when a flasher lighted the brand showed a vivid red against the pink skin. You could not pass by on the other side of the street without crossing to see what sort of a pimple that was on her shoulder, and if you happened to be on the same side as the theatre you stopped anyway.

That hardworking lamp was worth a lot of real dollars to the Hippodrome. For the rest of his display Harrison used cutout letters for the star name and two pillars for De Roche and Holt as shown in the illustration.

It cost very little, yet it proved to be one of the best sellers of the season, again demonstrating that brains will sell more than mere money outlay.

THIS BRANDED SHOULDER WAS LIGHTED BY A FLASHER

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, set his own brand into Negri's shoulder, rendered it translucent and set a red flasher back of it. If you think that is not so much, try it out for yourself and see what business it gets.

Revives Old Prop to Help Three Ages

You never can tell when an old prop will come in handy. Two or three years ago W. R. Ferguson, of Goldwyn, had a tin globe built for Earthbound, which was first used on the marquise of a theatre in Washington and later did some extensive traveling, mostly through Pennsylvania.

Apparently it came to rest in Philadelphia, and was dug out by the Metro exchange for a float to tell that part of the world gathered in Woodbury, N. J., that the whole world was laughing at Buster Keaton in Three Ages at Ralph Wilkins' Rialto theatre.

It may not be the same, but we don't believe that they went to the expense of building a new globe and it looks suspiciously like the old veteran.

You don't have to built a globe if you want to use that decidedly good catchline. Large compoboard circles will carry the same idea at very much less cost, and flat circles will work as well for marquise decoration. You don't have to hold it for Buster, for that matter. You can have them laughing at some other comedy or gasping at some melodrama. The idea is as elastic as a rubber ball, and has as much bounce.

Took Taxi Rides to Obtain Passes

Among the numerous stunts worked by George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., was a new taxicab stunt.

Costumed girls in masks rode in a number of taxis. One of them was The Spanish Dancer. If you rode with her, she handed you a pass to see Pola Negri. If you made the wrong guess, you had a pleasant companion on your journey in any event.

Such a stunt has to be handled carefully to avoid stirring up a scandal, but it worked well here.

Another special stunt duplicated one worked last year at the Howard, Atlanta. A float was driven on the field at a local football game and from a huge football came fifteen Spanish Dancers who presented flowers to the "sponsors" and threw out 5,000 heralds.

Six of the girls also rode on horseback through the business streets, still in costume, a prize was offered at a dance, and there was a heavy store display.

A Metro Release

EVER SEE THIS BEFORE? YOU ARE WRONG. YOU HAVE

It is the old earthbound globe dressed up for Three Ages used by the Rialto Theatre, Woodbury, N. J., in connection with a local celebration. It made a nice float at a small cost. You can use the same idea with compo board circles.

Danced on Air

Because the Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, is possessed of a narrow entrance lost in a business block, the problem of getting attention for the house is an interesting one. The First National paper on Trilby gave them one of their best business builders. The leg lithographs were cut out and dangled from the marquise where the slightest breeze would cause them to kick and wave in the wind. No men and few women got past that, and the picture played to extra business at very small exploitation cost.

Local Cartoon Was Big Ticket Seller

R. C. Gary has made print more than once with his cartoon work in Omaha and more recently in Milwaukee, but it is seldom that the Paramounteer has scored as strongly as in a cartoon for His Children's Children.

It was suggestive of Briggs' Mr. and Mrs. series in that it showed a man and his wife. The latter tells her dumb spouse that Frank Fischer, of the Madison theatre, says that His Children's Children are coming. For three more pictures the he-half tells that Frank Fischer has no children to have children and then the great light dawns.

It was sufficiently humorous to win interest to the point where the tag would be read, too, and this told all about the engagement of the picture. It got the message over with a laugh and looked enough like an honest-to-goodness cartoon to get the reader interested before he realized the sting.

HOW THE PIRATE HATS WORK ON STRANGERS OF THE NIGHT

A small group of the children who were glad to exploit Capt. Applejack for the sake of the free pass that was the other half of the stunt. The Metro exploiteers have worked the hat into a gag good for a full week of free newspaper publicity.

Advertising Hats Publicity Getters

Taking the advertising hat, which hitherto has been supposed to be sufficient in itself, H. A. Ansley, a Metro exploiteer, has worked it into a double barreled space stealer that is good for twice the usual run. He worked the idea in Baltimore on the Buster Keaton hats for Three Ages and repeated in Washington on Strangers of the Night at Loew's Palace theatre.

He hooked the Times and Herald to a coupon scheme, one being a morning and the other an afternoon paper. After the usual preliminary announcements, a coupon was printed good for one pirate hat at any office of either paper. Later a coupon was printed and for a free admission to a morning show provided that the holder was wearing one of the hats. This not only ensured that the hats would be well cared for, but the hundreds of children headed for the theatre at a given time provided a far-flung ballyhoo, for naturally the kiddies did not care to be bothered with other headgear and wore only the pirate hat. A short holdout helped to keep up the advertisement, the children overrunning the street.

And the papers had to keep on talking about their generosity until the special performance had been given, and then write it up to the limit, with due praise to the picture. And, of course, the verbal advertising the children take home is not the least valuable product of the idea.

Plugged in Three

When he took over the Royal and Rialto Theatres, in Laredo, Texas, supplementing the Strand, which he has previously owned, William Epstein inaugurated a First National week with The Dangerous Age, The Eternal Flame and The Fighting Blade at the three theatres. And in each lobby he had special hand-drawn posters for Oliver Twist, which was next at the Royal.

Mr. Epstein believes in getting the town to all three houses where he can, so each house helps advertise the other two.

Two for Ones

Seeking verbal advertising on Viola Dana in The Social Code, and feeling that if the early audiences could be sent out to talk, the Crown theatre, Mobile, used rebate coupons.

An advance advertisement carried a coupon good for one admission with one paid ticket, and selling the opening house at half price brought B. C. King a tidy full price business the remainder of the week. The newspapers were not tied to the stunt, as Mr. King did not care to be tied to any single issue, but they got back of the idea since it would help to sell the papers on the day the coupon was printed.

Often indirect advertising is the most directly profitable. You do not have to advertise film all the time. Strike out along some new line. Hitch to some local movement in a way to connect your theatre with current opinion and you can sell not one but a number of features. Be willing to help the town along. It's your town, too.

Turned the Lobby Into Store Show

While it is not wholly new, there is a capital idea in the stunt worked by the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, on Potash and Perlmutter. The entire lobby was cleared of the usual frames and lined with a display of women's wear. A series of signs in red on white announced that Potash and Perlmutter would open on Saturday with a full line of cloaks and suits.

This can be handled very simply or it can be built into a style show without models and made to draw almost as well as the picture itself. It all depends upon the capacity of the lobby and the willingness of the storekeepers to cooperate. The more you do the better it will work, but you do not have to do much to get a real draw.

All of the newspaper and poster advertising used by the Garrick opened with: "You understand, Mawruss," which not only got a laugh but was a further identification with the well known newspaper series.

Sumatran Manager Writes His Appeal

Outside of the North and South Poles there seem to be few places unprovided with picture theatres. Up in the mining camps and out in the logging districts they have their picture shows and here is a theatre, the Paramount-Bioscoop, at Tandjong Karang, Sumatra.

And out in front of the door is a six-sheet of Bill Hart for one of the pictures Bill made a long time ago, and over on the right is a blackboard with the set of stills at the top and a chalk talk below. There is another six-sheet to the right, which completes the lobby display.

We don't know whether the chairs under the palm tree form the manager's office or the smoking room, and there seems to be no trace of the usually essential box office. The house itself seems to be mostly roof and floor with drop curtains which are probably used only on moonlight nights, since the dark comes quickly so close to the equator when the moon is not in evidence, and if you want a palm leaf fan you probably pick it off a handy tree, if you are a good climber.

HERE'S A PARAMOUNT THEATRE 'NEATH THE SHELTERING PALMS

This is a picture theatre in Tandjong Karang, Sumatra. It is no reflection on the house that Bioscope has been rendered "coop." That may be the Dutch form of the word. That is Bill Hart on the lithograph and the stills are on the blackboard to the right.

Had the Constable Look for Strangers

Setting the stage constable to look for Strangers of the Night was one way of putting over the title when that production played the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio.

Albert Kauffman, Metro publicity pusher, rigged out a gaunt husky with the tin star and a bloodthirsty sausage hound, gave him a rusty gun and told him to go to it. On his back he carried a sign asking "Have you seen any Strangers of the Night?"

A Metro Release

THE CONSTABLE

There was no mention of the house. It was figured that if people were interested in the ballyhoo they would look up the theatre, it being taken for granted that it must be a picture. It worked well in Columbus.

Passed Passes

Fake "this is not a" tickets to the Army-Navy game in New York flooded Broadway while the crowd was in town for the game. The ticket read that the slip was not good for a matinee ticket to The Hunchback of Notre Dame if presented at the box office accompanied by the regular price of admission. This was no great concession, but when it is remembered that some of the two dollar shows were selling for seven dollars a copy for that evening, it at least showed forbearance.

The back of the card was the best bet. It showed the stars of the Army and Navy and Notre Dame, offering the Army quarterback, the Navy fullback and the Notre Dame hunchback, a clever play on the word.

Used Two Vets

Two old stunts made one new good business for Safety Last at the Milda Theatre, Chicago. George E. McDonald got out anti-parking signs reading: "Police. Don't park here. Be safe. Go to the Milda Theatre and see Harold Lloyd in Safety Last all week commencing, etc."

Another stunt was a white card printed up with this copy:

BUY THIS PROPERTY QUICKLY—ITS

STARTS SAT. OCT. 20th

A Pathe Release

THE CLOSED CARD

These were hung on the handles of store doors early Sunday morning and remained on until the stores were opened the following morning, that Sunday being the opening of the Lloyd comedy at the Milda. It's old, but it always seems to work, if not worked too often.

Tackled Taxis

Something a little different was worked by Metro and a New York taxicab company on a ten-day drive recently when 100,000 joint circulars were distributed in the cabs of this particular company.

It was a double face, one side splitting between the cabs and Scaramouche, which is having an unforced run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. The other side gives the list of the cab stations with an advertisement for Scaramouche every alternate line.

These were placed in receptacles in the cabs and departing patrons were asked by the drivers to take one.

If you have worked out the usual spare tire and window hook-ups, perhaps you can get a new kick out of this.

Ties Staid Bank to Keaton Hats

Three or four years ago banks and bankers were approached, hat in hand and one foot headed constantly in the general direction of the nearest exit. Care was taken that only the most dignified stunts were offered, mostly straight business getting ideas.

And now comes the announcement that a Pittsburgh bank has been tied up strong to the absurd Buster Keaton hats, with a cartoonist in the window, too. Credit C. C. Deardouff, Metro exploitationist.

He hooked the Pennsylvania Trust Company to the hats and a pass distribution in connection with Three Ages. The hats come flat and have to be cut out and assembled.

The bank distributed several thousand of these, printed up with little arguments in favor of thrift, and announced that on a certain afternoon it would distribute 2,000 passes to the Aldine Theatre to children who presented themselves wearing the Keaton hats. The arguments were pointed up with cartoon drawings.

Several thousand children stormed the street in front of the bank, anxious to be among the lucky two thousand, and the bank liked the stunt so well that for ten days the cartoonist was permitted to make sketches in the bank's window, wearing a Keaton hat and surrounded by a regular art gallery of cartoons and stills for Three Ages.

Proved He Could

With a pitying smile the manager of a local prize fight told J. B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, that he could tell the customers about the big fight in The Spoilers if he wanted to. The pity was due to the fact that the experiment had been tried before and the announcer always got "the bird."

But Mr. Carroll figured that this crowd, drawn to the biggest mill of the season, would be particularly interested in the big fight in the play and he got a large lunged person to make a spiel. And to the puzzlement of the fight promoter, the large audience listened quietly.

More than that, the sudden improvement in the business the last two days of the run, following the fight, proved that it had worked, for business went up instead of taking the natural and logical dwindle.

As Usual

Howard Price Kingsmore did the usual hook-up stuff with If Winter Comes while Winter came to the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. He did it unusually well, that's the difference.

He had a fine background painted for a log cabin, dressed the display with furs and elected the prettiest wax dummy in the shop to wear the most expensive coat in the establishment. It was such a pretty display that it played to an audience all day long.

Put Up a Front

Basing one of its displays for Red Lights on a poster, the Rialto Theatre, Des Moines, showed the figure of the mysterious man at the window on the curtain of which a woman's outline was shadowed. This was a reproduction rather than a cutout with the shadow thrown by a light at the rear instead of merely painted on.

This stunt works well, particularly if a flasher throws the shadow off and on. The general appeal was on the mystery angle with the title in red lights on the banners.

A Pathe Release

A PATHE SIX-SHEET WAS THE CENTER OF THIS BOOK WINDOW

The display is for The Call of the Wild, and the display of the Grosset & Dunlap edition is supplemented by two dog cutouts and a number of scene stills. It makes a very attractive display without using up many of the books.

A Hodkinson Release

AN EXCEPTIONAL STAND FOR A 24-SHEET POSTER

C. D. Hill, of the St. Louis Hodkinson exchange, obtained this location through the use of a bottom line to the effect that The Drivin' Fool could use the make of car named. As 70% of the west bound traffic uses this street its value is apparent.

Ties to Calendars With a Local View

One of the best stunts worked by Howard Price Kingsmore since he took over the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, is a tie-up to a calendar for 1923 issued by the Association which has in charge the Confederate memorial on Stone Mountain, a short distance from Atlanta.

This memorial, the work of Gutzon Borglum, shows a group of officers of such gigantic proportions that even at a distance the group seems of heroic size. It is the largest sculpture ever attempted; so large that it has attracted the attention of the entire country.

Naturally Atlanta is proud of the effort, and a tasteful calendar has been prepared for general sale with a picture of the work in present advancement and the calendar on the back is a detailed description of the group, which will be 1,300 feet long.

Kingsmore took 2,000 of these for distribution to hotels for room use, and he has assurance that any stolen will be replaced for at least a period of two weeks. On the face is a large advertisement for the Howard, and at the bottom of the text on the back is a line urging a visit to the theatre. This latter will run on all calendars sold in the stores and at the newsstands, as well as on those used for advertising. It was this which induced him to purchase the 2,000 with the print advertisement, for he knows that thousands will be sent all over that section of the country and will help to make the Howard Theatre known to all. It would be worth the purchase of twice the number to get the quasi endorsement carried by this line.

Of course this is a purely local stunt, but it suggests that managers elsewhere can find other means of attaining the same end through support to some local project.

Will Sponsor Dolls

Along with the Jackie Coogan pictures, the Metro has taken over an exploitation interest in the Jackie Coogan dolls and will will see to it that Coogan dollars are available for exploitation uses. With Jackie's first picture, Long Live the King, an exceptionally good audience offering, the dolls should come into extensive play to help get the crowds in.

Two Old Ones

The treasure chest and the wigwag were selected by Thomas Groves, of the Orpheum Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to put over The Isle of Lost Ships.

In the former an old chest was placed in the lobby and the treasure was offered anyone who could open the box. It contained a bag of sawdust and a five-dollar gold piece.

The wigwag is the old stunt of two boy scouts using their signal flags, in this case on tall buildings on opposite sides of the street. When a crowd gathered throwaways were floated down to them.

Both are old, but they combined to help business at the Orpheum.

Dancing Troupe Is a Selling Device

Bob Gary, erstwhile Paramounteer, just before he went into limbo along with the rest of the department, went up to Madison, Wis., to put over The Spanish Dancer, and he surely did that little thing.

His best stunt was to get a local dancer who had a Spanish costume and an idea she could dance with her feet. He hired three men, one of whom could play the guitar, and he also put two donkeys on the payroll. The dancer rode one of the donks and the other was bannered. Now and then one of the temperamental pair—the two jackasses, of course—would decide to balk, and that helped to get the attention of the crowd. so no one minded, Gary the least of all.

All Over the Town

The troupe was used in the lobby and for street work, they appeared at the Rotary luncheon and in the lobbies of the hotels. They did their stuff for restaurant patrons and invaded the stores. Her best hit was made during the intermission of a football game at the grounds of the University of Wisconsin.

You can find a Spanish Dancer in almost any town, and if she can sing the plugger song as part of her act, all the better. This girl did. It was Gary's best bet, though only one of a series of stunts.

Autographs, Too

One of the papers was permitted to print a coupon good for an autographed portrait of Miss Negri and a perambulator was run around town for several days at a cost of $7.50 for the banners while Mr. Holah, the manager, arranged for a banner across the street in Appleton, only half a block from the opposition house. Street banners are forbidden, but he got his up.

Pola told the story of her life in a paper in Madison and another in Appleton (which is close enough to help), and about all the shorts in the press book were used in one of the three papers.

IF YOU CAN FIND A GIRL WHO CAN DANCE SPANISH THE REST IS EASY

Just give her a guitar player or something and send her around town. That's the stunt the Madison Theatre, Madison, Wis., used and it put the picture over like a circus in a mill town on payday. Two donkeys went with the outfit.

This French Doll Was a Real Peach

Figuring that a French doll was about the best exploitation for a run of Mae Murray in The French Doll, George J. Schade hired a human mechanical doll to work in the window of a prominent store. He added a painting and a large card.

The stuntster made appearances every hour from noon until four o'clock, and in the intervals she made frequent appearances in the ready-to-wear department in the store, helping business there materially.

C. C. Deardouff, exploiteer for Metro, went out and got some good lingerie shops for stills showing Miss Murray and Schade fixed up a pretty lobby, with the result that business was exceedingly good.

A Metro Release

YOU'RE NOT TOO BIG TO PLAY WITH DOLLS LIKE THESE

Francine Reed, a mechanical doll impersonator, made hourly appearances in the window of a Sandusky store when The French Doll was playing at Schade's Theatre. It was not supposed to be an impersonation of Mae Murray, but just a French Doll.

Alphabet Blocks Spelled the Sign

Getting one of the largest windows in the Gimbel store in New York for Baby Peggy in her first full length picture was one of the stunts worked by Joe Weil, of Universal.

Gimbel Brothers had already engineered a drive on the Baby Peggy dolls when they were first introduced. They made a good thing of it. When Weil learned that Peggy herself would be in town for a visit, he tied them up to a special drive on the dolls in connection with the personal appearance of the little star at the store.

An entire window was used with a large picture of Peggy apparently projected by a machine at the opposite side, with a plentiful supply of stills and dolls and a few decorations to appeal to the child heart. A notable touch was the use of alphabet blocks to write the signs. These do not show in the cut, but are directly below the line of photographs.

Such a window can be duplicated by any small store, and it will work as well for the little fellows as it did for the big concern. In the case of the Gimbel store, generous space was used in the store advertisements in the daily papers, running around 8 x 10 inches. The idea, of course, was that the youngsters would come and bring their mothers, and a certain percentage of the latter would make purchases unrelated to the dolls.

Chalk Stencils

Generally stencils are worked on the sidewalk in water color, but P. F. Schwie, of the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, used chalk in his sidewalk work for Strangers of the Night. The design was the skull and bones and "S. of N." and the design was spread all over the city two or three days before anything else was done. The design made a lot of talk but brought no definite conclusions until the same piratical crest was used in connection with newspaper and card advertisements. The cards literally flooded the town.

IF THIS PAYS IN NEW YORK SURELY YOUR STORE CAN COPY

This is one of the main windows of the Gimbel store tied up to the Baby Peggy dolls and The Darling of New York. Show it to your local dealer and get him to put in a couple of dolls and a supply of stills and other accessory material. It will help him.

Lipstick Stills on Flaming Youth

Chicago was the first centre to get Flaming Youth, and one of the initial steps in an intensive campaign of general exploitation was to tie into the idea that Flaming Youth needs some cosmetics for kindling.

Drug store windows were tied up to photographs of Colleen Moore applying the lipstick before going to her first party, and these (there are three sorts), motived a general display of scene stills to enliven the layout of beauty aids.

This is going to be one of the real help to window grabbing, and if you are a F[illegible] Nationalist it might be well to start in [illegible] to talk over the matter with your [illegible] stores and beauty shops. Fix it in ad[illegible] and save time when the stills arrive.

But cosmetic is only one of the angles. Dresses, lingerie, jazz phonograph records, books, candy, shoes and silk hosiery are all part of an appeal to flaming youth, and all should be approached. Taken in connection with the wide reading of the book, this picture will yield to splendid cooperative results and you can work with merchants who might not be willing to let in ordinary titles.

Bagged Coin, Too

Dulcy was put over in Sandusky by a characteristically Schade stunt. He had 3,000 bags made, about two by three inches, and printed "Come and see me spill the beans in Dulcy at the Schade Theatre. Constance Talmadge."

These were given out the week before the showing, mostly to the matinee patrons, and the bags were all over town. It was a clever idea and so people came to see Dulcy spill the beans and voted her a good little spiller.

Some time ago we showed a picture of Bluebeard's first seven wives in silhouette. The same thing is now being done by suspending dolls in a shadow box with the statement that Gloria Swanson is Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. In the original the figures were full size, but the idea is less gruesome in miniature and can be worked where managers are afraid of the stronger effect. It is not as striking, but it is also less repellant.

Daddy and Kiddie Both Get Theirs

Neither Daddy Day nor a children's special are novelties, but the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, freshened them up a bit by giving a Daddy Day on Jackie Coogan in Daddy and following this with a Kiddies' Day on Penrod and Sam. Each helped the other, so that the combined pull was equal to about three singles instead of only two.

Daddies got in free, for daddy and the youngsters had tickets to a special morning performance of Penrod and Sam. In each instance these tickets were to be clipped from a local paper, which was tied up to the idea. The hook-in brought three column cuts and large stories.

A First National Release

A CLEVER WINDOW DISPLAY

The cut shows a special window card worked out for Daddy, based on a cutout but given so elaborate a mounting that it gains a new dignity. These special displays are well worth the trouble they involve since they not only attract a greater measure of attention but convey the suggestion of a picture well above the average. The frames may be used repeatedly, and the interiors can be worked up even by those who cannot afford backings. Doll furniture can be used to make interiors and twigs will replace artificial trees for exteriors, and these will give better results than plain painting.

Try one sometime and you'll not only be delighted with the result, but you will come to take a real interest in building these miniatures unless you are materially different from the average man.

Boys Took Buster for Perambulation

Here is a new idea from Baltimore, developed by H. S. Ansley, a Metro exploiteer, for Buster Keaton in Three Ages. Ansley was pretty busy when the picture played the New theatre, and this was merely one of the by-products, but it is newer than the other stunts and is susceptible of general use, though it will work best for comedy productions, since it is certain to get a laugh which might react against a more serious play.

A figure was cut from the three sheet, provided with a cross piece, which was held by two youngsters, and taken for a walk. With the Buster Keaton hats on the two boys, the effect is capital.

A Metro Release

THE WALKING CUTOUT

Ansley's chief hook-up was to a morning and evening paper under the same management. These papers were permitted to print a coupon good for a Keaton hat. Later another coupon was printed good for a free admission if presented by a boy wearing the hat. Some 10,000 hats were distributed. There was also a special performance for the boys selling the two papers, which gave another ballyhoo. Practically everyone in town knew about the picture, and most of them came, apparently.

The manager who feels that exploitation is too much of a nuisance will presently have nothing to worry about, for his house will fall from under him. You can't keep up steam without fire under the boiler, and exploitation is the fuel that feeds the flames of patronage.

Baby Lighthouse Guided Homeward

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., made a miniature lobby lighthouse for Homeward Bound. It was scarcely as high as the box office and stood directly in front of it. A little sand, a few rocks and two ornamental signs completed the outfit.

A Paramount Release

BROWNLEE'S LIGHTHOUSE

The chief advantage of such a structure is that it can be stored and repainted for almost any sea picture, or for that matter can be revived without elaborate change. Some means should be provided for wiring a light into the lantern and either a flasher socket or a shutter arranged for. This done it can be used repeatedly. It will store more compactly if built in two vertical sections, one of which can be fitted into the other.

An Overture Prologue

Getting local color for an arctic picture from the orchestra was one of the ways the California theatre, San Francisco, put over The Call of the Wild. The orchestra was put into ulsters and winter hats and placed on the stage before a snow setting in which worked a vaudeville act styled, In Alaska. The bass viol player was dressed as a bear and there were four men dressed as seals, who apparently did the seal orchestra stuff. These latter details may be beyond the reach of the small manager, but he can always put his band in overcoats and use a snow drop.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF CAUSE AND EFFECT. THIS TIME FROM NORFOLK, VA.

Live models were employed to demonstrate gowns in the window of a swagger clothes shop to tell about The French Doll at Well's Theatre. The stunt was planned by a Metro exploiteer, who aided J. J. Madden in getting a stunt that held the crowd in front of the window until they had to take the models out in order to permit street traffic to be resumed. Then they went in again.

THESE SIDESHOW PAINTINGS HELPED JACKIE IN OMAHA

The Rialto Theatre tore a page from the circus agent's little book. These objects of art are 12 x 21 feet and gave the proper sawdust flavor without cluttering up the lobby. Because they were a change from the usual, the paintings took hold.

Lacked Only Bosco on the Omaha Rialto

Only Bosco, who eats them alive, was omitted from the pictorial display on the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, when they played Circus Days. Huge paintings, each 12 by 21 feet, fluttered to the breeze. They really fluttered, because they purposely were not tied off at the bottom, but were left to flap in the wind and so get attention through motion as well as through their vivid coloring, for these were done in true circus style, and the colors yelled louder than a barker.

There was the wild man, supposed to have been captured near Coffeyville, Kans., the fat girl, the snake charmer and the cooch dancer, and the 24-sheet was trimmed down to fit the space above the entrance. There were four others on the front, but the camera could not look around the corner and you will have to take Harry Watts' word for it that he also offered the dog faced boy, the dwarf, the living skeleton and the bearded lady. If you can arrange for paintings, you can dispense with the circus lobby.

There was also a free matinee for the Orphans, and this inspires Walter Eberhardt to write:

Orphans and newsboys
Or if they fail,
Jackie's cute doubles
Bring in the kale.

We like Walter best when he does not write doggerel—he calls it a quatrain—and we are using his poem just to be mean. A better version would be:

Use the newsboys
Until they strike,
Then pick on orphans
If you like.

Anyhow, business was good.

Worked the Mayor Into His Stunt

Always on the lookout for something to make a loud noise about, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, seized upon the fact that his was to be one of the "demonstration" houses under the new Paramount plan.

The first step was to take a large display advertisement telling the facts and building up local pride, and with this as his excuse he sold the Mayor on the idea of writing the home office thanking Paramount for the distinction conveyed in the selection.

This, of course, was worked into the newspapers as live news.

Then Came Pola

With the stage all set, the announcement was made that The Spanish Dancer would be the first demonstration picture. The film cans were delivered to the Mayor at City Hall and by him taken to the Howard, where an invited audience of some 500 were assembled to pass judgment on the picture. It was an exceptionally smart gathering, including all of the leading welfare workers and clubwomen.

The Mayor paused under the marquise to deliver the film to Kingsmore in a florid address, and then they all went inside to see the picture run off and then went outside again to tell the less fortunate how good a picture it was.

Not ignoring the just regular patrons, Kingsmore had a gypsy fortune teller in the foyer the previous week, and she told fortunes at the rate of twenty an hour, always winding up with the prediction that the client would see The Spanish Dancer the following week. That was the truest thing the seeress said. She was dead wrong on a lot of stuff, but that came out about 98 per cent.

In Again

Now it is Sid Laurence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, who is working the names-on-the-counter idea.

A department store wrote the names of 114 customers on cards and these were disposed on the counters in various parts of the store. If a patron found his or her name on a card, it was taken to the office where a pass for two for Children of the Dust was the reward for its return.

This is a little different from the old way, in which the names were selected at random from the telephone directory, but in general the scheme is the same. It would be better to use a greater number of names and hand out singles.

The big idea is that the store will advertise the play in putting the scheme over, and the benefit to the store comes from the purchases the name hunters make.

Standard

Apparently Howard Price Kingsmore set the fashion when he used tire cards with "Avoid Strangers of the Night. Ride in a yellow taxi," for his Atlanta campaign at the Howard. They are all doing it there.

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

DERE Santa Claus:—I am only a poor little exhibitor, but I have been a real good little exhibitor all year and I am writeing to you in hopes you will not forget me and give me the things I wish for I don't want much only will you please bring me better advertising axessories etc. next year to help be a gooder boy.

Please, Santa, bring me some press bks. maybe without all those bright colors and with more ideas something that will help me make lots of people come to my house instead of trying to show me how much better the picture with the bright colors press bk. is than the one with only a regular printed page, and Santa please send me lots of good axessories that don't cost to get more than the pixure costs to rent and heralds and novlties I mean that each don't cost as much as admision including war tacks.

And, honest Santa, I'll be a good little exhibitur if you send me posters with the names off them of everybody that had anything to do with the pixure including the wardrobe woman and not leaving enough room on them for the stars or pixure's name—and with the big 20four sheets dere Santa please have the title big and the subjex simpul so that people can see from far away and don't have them in colors that you cant rede the lettring sometimes like last year.

Also I would oppruciate some publissity in the press bks. which didn't say this is the greatusts pixure ever fillumd because when I dont get the kind i'm asking you for, please, the edditor of my papers dont put them in.

Dere Saint Nick please dont think Im complaneing but the nusepaper adds you sent me last year were almost all alike. Kindly this year will you send me some diffrent ones from last years and some of those nice kind with those bright shiny ideas in them and not the name of the producor put right on the prettiest part where I have to have it cut off to save expens by not advting the names which they pay for advting themselves in the Saturday Evening Posed and which dont help me fill my Xmas or any other stocking at all.

And don't think me greedy will you Santa if I ask you to watch over those nice boys who write the traid paper adds and keep them improving the way they have been the past twelve (12) mos? and instead of xtravagunt claims giving me information about what they want me to play with and how to do it like they have been giving me lately.

O Santa I almost forgot to ask you for slides without a lot of useless lettering on—you know the kind I want—those with a nice motto on them which makes people come to my house and not those with an awful lot of useless gingerbred kurlique lettring which makes people sick and they say so sometimes, and Id be glad too if you'd bring me publissity kuts without all the captyuns being attached so that they don't take up too much spas and the edditor won't print them the same as stories which are too extreim in their clames.

Gosh, Santa, I certainly seem to have asked for a lot, but honest I've been a good little exhibitor and I'll promise to be gooder and gooder if you'll only send me some nice posters, axessories, including novulties, oil paintings, ads., publissity, kuts, trailers, etc and IDEAS.

Hoping you are the same I beg to remain.

Yrs. Rspcfy.

DIRECTED BY ALBERT PARKER

John Held, Jr., whose drawings are to be seen in many magazines, seems to have become quite popular as a movie poster artist lately. Here is one he has just finished for Goldwyn's forthcoming "Second Youth"

FOX has issued a bigger-than-usual campaign on "Six-Cylinder Love." Bigger-than-usual chiefly meaning more comprehensive. The campaign as outlined in the colored press book and the black-and-white section covers the ground completely, from publicity stories to trailer. The reviewers say the picture is good, so, with the help of the campaign books, the exhibitor should have no trouble in putting it over successfully.

GOLDWYN'S most ambitious "yellow supplement" has just been issued. It is an 88-page symposium of ideas on how to put over "Little Old New York." Every mimeographed page contains something of interest to the showman who has booked Marion Davies' big offering—than which little more could be said of anything issued for a similar purpose.

AND we notice that Eddie Bonns, who is mainly responsible for the Goldwyn "yellow supplements," has just been promoted to the position of Special Saies Representative. Here's our best, Eddie!

A good-looking and practical press book is that issued on "Innocence" by C. B. C. Sales Co. It is complete in every detail and fully lives up to the standard of one or two predecessors which, as we have stated, show that the Independents are right up with the leaders when it comes to turning out seat-selling campaigns.

ADVERTISING agency sharps have figured that forty words is a maximum for copy on a street-car card—that the reader's attention cannot be held beyond that point.

Wonder what they'd think of some of the slides issued in this industry—slides with about twelve words of selling copy, including the title, and forty or more words of credit lines? And that's not exceptional. We examined photographs of dozens of slides lately, and our conviction is that anyone who reads the average slide through certainly must have considerable patience.

We know that credit lines are a matter of contracts, but we're going to keep plugging to get them off advertising aids directed at the public, especially the smaller aids.

IT seems to us that we've had the knocking hammer out quite frequently lately. If there is anybody whose toes were stepped on, or who has anything to say, whether boquet or brickbat, remember that this is the place to say it, and that these columns are always open to any idea that will help anybody who has anything to do with the advertising of motion pictures.

INASMUCH as this is the season of prophecies for the coming year, we are going to be different and not make any.

JUST one parting shot for 1923:

If the same degree of intelligence had been put behind the making of certain of the year's pictures that was put behind the advertising and selling of those pictures, there would have been a much different story in the grosses recorded.

THIS is an acknowledgment and appreciation of all those Christmas greetings we are about to receive.

Wishing you the same—and lots of 'em.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

F. B. O.

HUMAN WRECKAGE. (7,215 feet). Star, Mrs. W. Reed. Played this some time ago but neglected to report on same. It was a complete failure here. Did not get the business or satisfy those who saw it. Paid too much rental, consequently did not make money. It did not add prestige to my house either. Has good moral tone and Sunday is about the only day it is suited for. Had fair attendance. Draw college class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 20-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

First National

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A western picture with real merit. Should please any class audience. Don't be afraid of it just because it is a western. Has plenty of real comedy, pathos, and action. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-22. Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre (960 seats), Liberal, Kansas.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Satisfactory, but not as gripping as the press sheet says. Russell Simpson good as the gambling sheriff. Had very good attendance. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackail. Absolutely one of the finest of the season, a knockout, a credit to the industry. Positively one of the cleanest and best pictures I have ever shown. Five stars in this picture and every one of them "carried away" the picture. Harry Short's work wonderful. Boys, step on the loud pedal in your advertising, as this one will not disappoint you. Better on second night than first, although big dance in town caused me to lose money. Patrons still raving over it. Has excellent moral tone and it could be played in a church. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This will make a good "Double Feature" day; book this five reeler with another five reeler and you will have a very fine day's program. Had "Double Feature" day and had very good business. Draw good class in Brooklyn, New York. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. This is a good picture; however, not as big as many other Inces. An excellent program but no special. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Fox

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Star cast. Another one of the so-called specials. Haven't taken in enough to pay for one since "Checkers." Not suitable for Sunday (or any day). Poor attendance. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

CALVERT'S VALLEY. (4,416 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Nothing extra to this; nothing to it at all. After the show is over you will wonder what it is all about. Not suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Many of you
Exhibitors have

Goldwyn

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. Film was in good shape. Suitable for Sunday. Good moral tone. Draw mixed class in town of 1,400. J. L. Douglas, Strand Theatre, Pierce, Nebraska.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. This Elinor Glyn story had been touted very strong to me, touted by actual attendance in theatres and I was led to believe that it would be at least a big audience picture, but they are very very discriminating here and as a result it went over poorly. I find no fault with the picture in particular, but I don't think it anywhere near as big for the small towns as Goldwyn thinks it is and the price they request for it. My advice on this picture would be, play it, but buy it right. Had only fair attendance. Used everything for advertising. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. A wonderful show for an intelligent audience, but if you want to get the ordinary people you must go out and hustle. Patrons were highly pleased with it, while it only brought fair attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Metro

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Very similar to the other Mae Murray pictures and in fact not as good as some of them. It drew fairly well here and pleased about in the same proportion. Used heralds, mailing list, billboards. Had fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Good box office attraction but will not please as well as the previous pictures by same star. General opinion is that Miss Murray "puts on" too much—in other words, overacts. However, in justice to the picture will say it did the business. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 20-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

Paramount

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Fine picture, better business on second day than first. Paramount have boosted Swanson subjects to a price that makes it very hard to make a profit on them. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family and railroad class in town of 7,750. Admission 10-25, specials 10-35, supers 10-50. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Good picture of Hollywood. Wouldn't interest people to see such picture every day. Used new paper ad, ones, threes, also advertised in surrounding papers. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance two nights. Draw town and rural class in town of 1,200. C. R. Seff, Ellis Coon, New Radio Theatre, Correctionville, Iowa.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Pleased our Saturday crowds. Kosloff is fine. Star has slipped a lot and no longer draws. Has average moral tone and will do for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). A life saver. Played this three days; out of five pictures played in seven years one of five that stood up for three days in a town of 3,500. Everyone said it was best they had ever seen. Used window cards, heralds, posters and miniature cottage built for old homestead. Special music. Admission 10-30. Seat 500. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre, Cameron, Missouri.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star cast. Splendid picture. A little bloody but our patrons ate it up. A popular story by popular author and is very well made. Used newspaper. twenty-fours, photos, heralds. Has good moral tone and is a little too rough for Sunday. Had splendid attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theatre (600 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Very well liked by our audience who came in good numbers to see this show. Mary Miles Minter is fairly well liked by our patrons. Print O. K. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-

15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good picture for a college town. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE. (5,703 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A fine cast wasted in an ordinary story. The acting in this one is very good. Title and cast drew them out for us. Print was in fair condition. Had average attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (40 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Capacity. 'Nuf sed. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had capacity attendance. Draw best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

Universal

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A comedy drama which seemed to please all who saw it, although some expected to see a rough and tumble western. Print poor condition. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Straight From the Shoulder Index

For July, August, September, October, November and December

Titles are alphabetically arranged. As reports in the department are alphabetically arranged under producer, date of issue only is needed except when a report is placed in a different position, as in "Reports on Late Pictures," in which case the page also is stated. This Index will appear in the final issue of Moving Picture World for each month and will be cumulative from January to June and from July to December.

"Cupid's Fireman"

Fox Production with Charles Jones Is Appealing in Love Interest and Thrills

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Two popular angles of appeal have been played up in this Fox feature, starring Charles Jones—the fireman and the ballet girl. It is a very good program offering. The thrills and keen love interest should insure its box-office success in almost any house.

Charles Jones shows his increasing ability in a romantic-hero role. In this picture, which is an adaptation of a Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," he has one of the slightly wistful, big-brother parts which he does so sincerely. His scenes with the child have much wholesome appeal. Little Eileen O'Malley has a most attractive personality and wins without possessing the usual prettiness of the screen child.

Most of the action follows the love motive but the fire scenes which come near the end have good dramatic value. Particularly is the climax effective when the floor crashes through, and the hero and the man he is saving disappear. Also there are a few interesting shots towards the beginning showing the firemen jumping from a training tower to a net far below. Marian Nixon is pretty and a charming dancer. The average fan will find much to enjoy in this Daddy.

Based upon story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," by Richard Harding Davis.
Scenario by Eugene V. Lewis.
Direction by Williams Wellman.
Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

Andy McGee realizes his long ambition to become a fireman when his mother finally consents. She dies soon after and he finds a little orphan girl who "mothers" him. Andy meets a beautiful chorus girl, takes her home, discovers she is married to a worthless drunkard, and agrees not to see her again. The house where the girl lives catches fire, her husband drunkenly locks her in the room, but Andy climbs up and saves her. Her husband is killed despite Andy's effort to save him.

"Danger Ahead"

Phil Goldstone Presents Another Acrobatic Vehicle for Richard Talmadge

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Richard Talmadge's acrobatic skill is as usual the feature of chief interest here. Without his stunts, the story would be hardly satisfying although the acting is good. But the star's particular talent is a lively asset, giving the picture the thrills and action that will be appreciated in the neighborhood theatre.

As a mystery drama, which it purposes to be, it is rather far-fetched. Almost anyone will be apt to note the discrepancy in the idea of burying a stranger instead of the hero, who was supposed to be dead. The subsequent action is based upon the hero "doubling" for himself, and forgetting his past after being injured in the struggle.

The scenes showing his escape from the Dago's gang are first-rate spectacular entertainment. He makes many daring leaps, takes some neat falls and at other times gets into strenuous fights which he makes very realistic. Two splendid character actors, Harry Kirby and J. P. Lockney, are of good support. The picture should do well where the other Talmadge pictures have been popular, although the star is deserving of better dramatic material than this.

Cast

Bruce Randall.....Richard Talmadge
Mrs. Randall.....Helen Rosson
Todd.....J. P. Lockney

Mortimer.....Fred Stanton

Story by Keene Thompson.
Directed by William K. Howard.
Photography by Reggie Lyons.
Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

Bruce Randall is injured after a fight with Mortimer, who has attempted to rob his home, and is reported dead by the police. They bury a man they believe to be Bruce, while Bruce wanders about, unable to recall his past. Two crook lawyers find him, hire him to impersonate Bruce so as to get some pearls in the Randall mansion, and Mrs. Randall believes he is really her husband. He regains his memory in time to defeat the crooks and save his wife's happiness.

"The Call of the Canyon"

Jazz and the Call of the West Effectively Contrasted in Paramount Version of Zane Grey Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As suggested by the title, and characteristic of the novels by the popular author, Zane Grey, "The Call of the Canyon" is a story in which the appeal of the great outdoors, the big open spaces, is dominant. It is a virile story with an unusual twist and plenty of action and drama, but the most impressive point in this Paramount production is the grandeur and magnificence of the western backgrounds, the awe-inspiring views of mountains and canyons. No more beautiful or soul-stirring views of nature have ever been screened.

Aside from its pictorial beauty, this serves to throw into sharper contrast and thereby increase the dramatic effect, the scenes picturing the mad search for amusement on the part of the jazz-loving, irresponsible section of the wealthy class in the East; for it is to this latter class that the heroine belongs while the hero has heard "the call of the canyon."

It is this conflict that supplies the basis for the dramatic structure, and we follow with interest the working out of the action in which the spirit of the open spaces conquers. There is a rugged strength in the treatment of the theme, and several excellent melodramtic scenes, as for instance the sandstorm in the canyon, followed by a stirring fight between the villain and the hero.

This note is evident throughout and has been carried to such an extent that even in the case of the heroine for the greater portion of the film no attempt is made to excuse her actions, and it is only when she realizes what a quitter she has been do you feel any sympathy for her. You are apt to be disgusted with her when she evidences disgust for the things that appeal to the hero and particularly where she characterizes as beastly the fight in which he saves her from the villain.

The climax is a deftly handled one, and although it may not ring entirely true to every-day human nature, there is great dramatic force and unusualy well-sustained suspense in the situation where the heroine returns just as the hero is being married to another girl. Your sympathy is kept wavering between your new attitude toward her and your admiration for the other girl, and some are apt to be disappointed when the heroine finds happiness through the sacrifice on the part of the other girl.

The picture is well acted throughout by an excellent cast headed by Richard Dix as the hero, Lois Wilson as the heroine and Marjorie Daw as the other girl.

The jazz scenes are as effectively handled as the western ones. A novel scene, rich in humor, shows a skunk in action. This will get the laughs. Altogether it is a picture that should appeal to the majority of patrons and prove a good box office attraction.

Based on novel by Zane Grey.
Scenario by Doris Shroeder and Elfrid Bingham.
Directed by Victor Fleming.
Length, 6,993 feet.

Story

Many years after the world war, Glenn Kilbourne, who has been gassed, returns to New York and finds his fiancee, Carley Burch, a leader in a wealthy, ultra-jazzy crowd. Disillusioned and disgusted, Glenn has a relapse and is ordered to go to Arizona, where he hears the call of the canyon and his dislike of the New York idle set increase. Fearing she will lose him, Carley goes to the canyon but she becomes disgusted with the rough, uncouth life and returns east. Going to visit a friend of Glenn, who is in the hospital, she is made to realize what a quitter she has been. She again goes to Arizona and arrives just as Glenn is being married to Flo Hutter. Just at the last moment, Flo sees Carley, whom she knows Glenn still loves, and, insisting that she take her place, leaves the church. Lee Stanton, who has always loved Flo, is waiting and receives her in his arms.

"His Mystery Girl"

Herbert Rawlinson Starred in Light Comedy Drama by Universal
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Herbert Rawlinson tries something slightly new here—a characterization of a woman-hater. It should be a fairly good program number, as it has a pretty heroine, a number of light complications and some scenes of action.

The farcical note predominates although there is an alleged mystery motive. As a whole it is hard to definitely classify the picture, as it is something between comedy-drama and burlesque. It is frankly indicated at the beginning that the subsequent action is a frame-up on the hero. As the spectator knows that all of the other characters are only hired performers, there is naturally very little suspense and realism.

If a few unexpected complications had been introduced so as to break the effect of everything being staged, the picture would have a stronger appeal generally. The hero's meeting with the lady in distress, the theft of the diamonds in her purse and the final climax in the deserted house where he is summoned to save her are frankly part of the frame-up. There are comedy touches but not in abundance. The drama seems rather too simple to hold the attention of a certain class of fans. However, most of the scenes have a pleasing note and the lightness will appeal to some audiences.

Kerry Reynolds, guilty of much seriousness and little play—finds his roommate having a good time, with the assistance of a gay gang. Dick tells him he'll be in the graveyard pretty quick. Kerry goes to a doctor and sees a girl with tears in her eyes. In a hotel lobby he sees the girl again. She leaves her handbag on a "divan." He picks it up—immediately two house detectives chase him. He lands in a lonely house at night with ten men to lick. Dick chases him everywhere. Meanwhile friends laugh "up their sleeves," for it is all a frame-up—but all ends happily.

"Daniel Boone"

Pathe Offers Fourth Number of "Chronicles of America" Series—In Three Reels
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In the early settlement of what is now Kentucky, which furnishes the basis for the fourth of the "Chronicles of America" series, the same simplicity and dramatic strength that made the first three successful is found. Its realism gives it a distinct advantage with critical minds. It offers substantial entertainment to those who do not depend upon sensationalism and exaggeration for thrills.

There is a quiet thrill, however, in the story of the defense of Boonesboro. Daniel Boone's lonely journey to found this town in 1775, his resurcefulness in eluding the Indians and his persistent fight with only small aid to keep the settlement from the Indians and the French spy is a story of considerable suspense. It works up to a good climax when the Americans dig a counter trench to destroy the enemy who has been digging an underground approach to the walled town. The Indians, already superstitiously afraid of Boone, are sure that he resorts to witchery. They give up just before he is forced to, because they think he is receiving supernatural aid. Elmer Grandin plays the part of Boone with dignity and effective mental poise. All of the acting is carefully done and shows great sincerity in the directing.

"The Old Fool"

Hodkinson Production Effectively Plays Upon Sympathy for an Old Man Who Is Mistreated
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In the Hodkinson production, "The Old Fool," effective use is made of the innate feeling of rebellion in most of us at the sight of an old person being mistreated, with the result that strong sympathy is aroused for the character in the title role and the picture is vested with more than an average amount of human interest.

This is the dominant idea in a story which starts out in the East, switches to the Mexican border and introduces familiar screen situations, such as a smuggling plot to get guns into Mexico, in which the sheriff is the leader of the gang, with the coincidence of having the man who mistreated the old fellow back East as also mixed up in the plot.

While the story is not especially strong or convincing, it serves the purpose as a vehicle for playing up the title character who figures prominently all through the picture. Even the title "the old fool," applied to him in derision has a strong sympathetic note. The manner in which the old man, almost childish in his actions, accepts his ill-treatment and repays good for evil will get a strong hold on the average spectator, and the way in which he continually harks back to the days of the civil war, each time exaggerating his exploits, has strong appeal. The scenes where he meets a veteran who was on the other side and they "fight" over and over the big battles of the civil war, almost coming to blows, will appeal to the majority of patrons.

In addition to this, there is a pretty little romance of a conventional type, considerable action with a western atmosphere and an out-of-the-ordinary climax in which "the old fool" is the dominating character. The picture is capably acted, and backed by its strong human interest note and sympathetic angle, it should prove a good box-office attraction in the average house.

James Barrows gives a fine characterization in the title role, with Lloyd Hughes capably cast as the one member of the family who does not consider him a burden. The remainder of the roles are in competent hands, with Louise Fazenda contributing some amusing comedy touches.

Grandad Steele is considered a burden by everyone in the family except his grandson John and his little great-granddaughter Emily, who like to listen to his stories of the Civil War. As a result of a row with h' father over his treatment of the old ma- John leaves home and goes to Texas, gettin- a job on the Baredo Blade.

John is suddenly called home on the death of his father and finds he has been cut off and Granddad Steele left in his charge. He takes the old man to Texas with him, where the old fellow has a wonderful time again "fighting the war" with an old Confederat

It develops that the sheriff is mixed with a gang who are smuggling across border rifles and ammunition secured John's brother. John helps to quas- plot, but the sheriff escapes and attac- John's sweetheart Mary. John arrives in time to rescue her but the sheriff again seeks to escape. He is killed, however, by Granddad with his old civil war sword.

"Breaking Into Society"

Film Booking Offices Releases Hunt Stromberg Comedy Starring Bull Montana
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Hunt Stromberg is presenting Bull Montana in a feature-length comedy on the social blunders of the "O'Tooles of Tin Can Alley." It is comedy of the broad, obvious type and will appeal to patrons who have shown a liking for this style of entertainment.

There is hardly enough original material for a five-reel subject. For instance, bad table manners have been burlesqued so often that unless there is a preponderance of new ideas, such a scene is apt to seem rather tame. There are, however, a few good laughs in this part. One of the best pieces of comic pantomime is Chuck Reisner's. He is asked to relate how he happened to marry Sally, the gum-chewing, diamond-laden maid who invites the serving maid to sit down at the table with guests. He describes their meeting in a cemetery, his proposal, Sally's refusal, her change of heart when he shows her a diamond and their visit to the minister—all by pantomime. It is a vivid touch and very well done.

There are some exceptionally funny moments toward the close when the guests sprinkle the contents of a snuff box on their ice cream, mistaking it for powdered chocolate. Also the carving of the turkey will bring a few chuckles. The star and the cast, including Carrie Clark Ward, Kala Pasha and Francis Treboal, do very well and show fine direction. If the picture had been done in two or possibly three reels, it would have been far more snappy and more certain of a wider appeal. As it is, the tastes of your patrons for this type of entertainment should be carefully considered.

Story

The O'Tooles suddenly inherit a fortune and move to Pasadena, where they try to break into society by doing some lavish entertaining. Their formal guests receive one terrific shock after another. An old friend, a prize fighter, arrives uninvited and brings his Bowery bride with him. They pass the rest of the time away with tales of the ringside and committing more social crimes until the guests make a clandestine exit.

"The Marriage Market"

Easing Light Entertainment for the Average Patron Provided in Newest C. B. C. Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While in the C. B. C. production, "The Marriage Market," there is an undercurrent of moralizing over the attempts of match-making relatives to secure for girls of the upper social set husbands who are wealthy regardless of their other drawbacks and the absence of love, the picture as a whole is an exceedingly light and romantic story with a theme that often stretches the credulity of the spectator.

The heroine is a very young lady who continually dreams of romance and adventure and in following this idea it is hard to believe that she would be carried away to the extent of the incident on which the story is builded. Coincidence also plays a prominent part in the development. Altogether it is not a story that will stand rigid analysis from the standpoint of probability and even introduces situations which approach farce, but if it is not viewed too seriously there are several points that will appeal to patrons liking light, amusing entertainment.

In the first place, the story is well acted, there is plenty of romance and adventure, and for the most part a breeziness to the action. There are several familiar types, considerable good humor and situations that will please the average spectator and help him to while away a pleasant hour.

Pauline Garon is delightful and pretty to look at in the leading role and adds materially to the picture's appeal. Jack Mulhall is effective in the opposite role of a romantically inclined novelist and the other roles are all in capable hands. Alice Lake does good work, but is handicapped by the fact that her role is an unsympathetic one throughout.

Theodora Bland, a mischievous girl, is expelled from a fashionable school and, returning home, helps a girl who has escaped from a reform school. Theodora gets off in the rain at the wrong station and, seeking shelter, wanders into the home of a young novelist, Wilton Carruthers. Being romantically inclined, she tells Carruthers she is the girl who escaped from the reform school and he saves her when the sheriff arrives.

Reaching home, Theodora makes a hit with her aunt's new husband and finds his daughter is engaged to Carruthers. The girl, Lillian, and Theodora's aunt seek to marry her to a wealthy oil king. She rebels and goes to Carruthers. Lillian finally accuses Theodora of being the escaped reform school girl and breaks off her engagement with Carruthers, who offers to marry Theodora, and is accepted, as the real reform school girl comes forward and confesses, and all ends happily.

"The Best Man Wins"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

"Jealous Husbands"

Maurice Tourneur's Newest Production for First National Is Effective Emotional Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unfounded jealousy of a suspicious husband and the havoc it wrought furnishes the basis for "Jealous Husbands," Maurice Tourneur's newest production for First National. In this picture, the director turns from whimsical and imaginative themes, such as he has employed in several recent productions, and presents a strong moral lesson by means of melodrama. It is a production that plays upon the emotions and should prove a good box-office attraction in the average theatre.

The story is not especially strong and the action not at all times convincing, as it is difficult to believe that simply on suspicion a man should go to the extent of having his own child kidnapped. However, this leads to a chain of circumstances that play upon the heart strings, such as the grief of the mother at the loss of her child, her finding him and not knowing he is her boy, the substitution of another child and the final recovery of her own offspring.

There is plenty of melodramatic action in the picture once it gets well under way, although it is slow at first. There is an excellent auto smash-up and other points that introduce thrills. There is strong sympathy for the mother and boy throughout and a feeling of condemnation for the husband which is so strong that you do not feel he is rightfully entitled to the happiness that finally comes. The chief defect in the picture is the fact that the story is not altogether convincing. This, however, will probably be overbalanced in the minds of the spectators by the other good points. There are, however, some scenes which appear a little too brutal as when the boy is cruelly beaten. Though this is done offstage the shadows carry the idea forcefully.

The work of the cast is excellent. Jane Novak is a good type for the wife and acts with sincerity and feeling. Earle Williams has the unsympathetic role of the husband. Benny Alexander is superb as the boy, and George Seigman does fine acting as the brutal burglar-kidnapper.

There is strong appeal in the title which affords opportunities for effective promotion work and will, if rightfully played up, attract patronage, for it suggests a situation that strikes close to home for many in both sexes.

Story

Misled by yarns about unfaithful wives, Ramon Martinez returns home unannounced from a trip while his wife is away to recover a series of compromising letters which will save his sister. Finding an incriminating letter, and crazed by jealousy, Martinez accuses his wife of unfaithfulness and when a burglar breaks into the house Martinez gives him their baby boy. Martinez's wife leaves him. Ramon seeks the lad, who in the meantime has run away from the burglars who have brought him up as a crook. Finally, after having another boy palmed off on him, his own child appears on the scene, secures letters that prove his mother's innocence and a happy reunion occurs.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Pathe Closes 1923 with Large and Very Diversified Program

Pathe will conclude its 1923 schedule by releasing on December 30 one of the largest programs of the year, with a total of eleven subjects covering sixteen reels of diversified entertainment.

Heading the list is "Daniel Boone," the fourth of the "Chronicles of America" series. It is in three reels and deals with an outstanding character of history. It is said to be strong in drama, action and suspense and covers particularly Boone's Transylvania expedition and the settlement of Boonesboro and the prominent part Daniel Boone played in the fight of the U. S. for independence.

Prominent also in this list is "Girls and Records," the second of the new Grantland Rice series single reel "Sportlights." It compares in an interesting manner the athletic girl of today with her less agile sister of yesterday and introduces several women champions including Helen Wills on the tennis court, Miss Collett on the links, Adeline Gehrig at basketball, a polo team, and Aileen Riggin, the Olympic diving champion.

"The Darkest Hour" is another of Hal Roach's "Spat Family" series in which the discordant trio engage in "brewing their own." Each has his own ideas, and disgusted servants and inquisitive police add to the merriment.

"Inbad the Sailor" is a Mack Sennett two-reel comedy with Billy Bevan and Harry Gribbon in the leading roles, with Madeline Hurlock as a vamp who causes all the trouble. The featured players become assistants to a lighthouse keeper who is subject to hallucinations and imagines they are trying to abuse his sweetheart. This leads to fast action and amusing situations.

In "It's a Boy" Snub Pollard appears as a daddy on the occasion of the arrival of his first-born, which gives him fine opportunities for amusing situations. The current Aesop's Fable is "The Best Man Wins," which shows what usually happens to a man who looks for a fight and finds it.

Special in "Snapshots"

In addition to the usual sections showing a number of prominent motion picture stars, C. B. C. announces that No. 8 of the new issue of Screen Snapshots contains a special feature. This shows a big horse race at Tia Juana which was attended by many well known players, including Dorothy Dalton, Eileen Percy, Agnes Ayres, Richard Dix, Earle Williams, Wallace Beery, Wanda Hawley, Bessie Love, Mae Murray, Frank Mayo, Irving Cummings, Herbert Rawlinson, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Two Clyde Cook Specials on Educational's List for 1924

The beginning of the new year finds Educational with plans perfected for a very comprehensive program of short subjects. During the first half of the 1923-24 season, which is nearing completion, this company introduced several new series, including Juvenile Comedies, Tuxedo Comedies, "The Sing Them Again" series and "The Secrets of Life" series of Tolhurst microscopic comedies.

In addition to these new series, which are now well under way, early in the new year Educational will release two special Clyde Cook comedies, produced by Joseph M. Schenck. Each is in two reels and the first will probably be released in February.

The second week in January will see Lloyd Hamilton's new comedy, "My Friend," the second of a series of six. It has created unusual enthusiasm at previews in Los Angeles, and Educational officials believe it will be even better than "The Optimist," the first of the series, which is winning favor all over the country, receiving exceptional praise from newspaper critics.

January will also see "Jean of Heceta Head," the first release of the third series of Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales, also "Ride 'Em Cowboy," the first of twelve two-reelers on Christie's schedule for the 1923-24 season. It stars Bobby Vernon and is one of the broadest and most amusing comedies ever produced by Christie. The remainder of the series will see the starring honors divided between Bobby Vernon, Jimmie Harrison, Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns.

The mid-season finds Jack White's schedule of Mermaid Comedies in full force with the January release of "Flying Finance," in which an entire village is wiped out by a funny cyclone. There will also be additional Juvenile Comedies with Bennie Alexander, Ernest Butterworth, Joe Butterworth, Roger Keene, Jack McHugh, Peggy Cartwright and the other lovable youngsters, together with regular releases of the Cameo single reel comedies. The Lyman Howe Hodge-Podge will also continue throughout the season. The new Cameo comedies are notable for the addition of Sid Smith, who joins Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance in this series.

Third Sennett Unit in New Pathe Series

Pathe has acquired distribution rights to a third series of comedies to be made under the supervision of Mack Sennett. These comedies will be two-reelers and Harry Langdon, vaudeville favorite recently signed by Sennett, will be starred.

Contract calls for one of these comedies every four weeks. The first, "Picking Peaches," will be released February 3; the second, "Smile, Please," is scheduled for a month later. "Picking Peaches" marks the return of the famous Mack Sennett Girls, and the supporting cast includes Alberta Vaughan, Jack Cooper, Dot Farley, Irene Lentz and Vernon Dent.

This series is in addition to, and will not supplant, the current Mack Sennett comedies or the Ben Turpin productions which are released by Pathe.

Riesenfeld Books Universal's "The Fourth Leather Pushers"

Universal announces that "The Fourth Leather Pushers" series of six two-reel pictures has been booked by Hugo Riesenfeld to be shown in either the Rivoli or Rialto theatres in New York. While occasional subjects from the first three series have been presented in these houses, this is the first time that either has booked a complete series.

This booking was arranged by Dr. Riesenfeld and Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatre department, as the result of the favorable impression made by screening the first two of the series, "That Kid from Madrid—Michigan" and "He Loops to Conquer."

"The Fourth Leather Pushers" series stars Billy Sullivan, a kinsman of the famous John L. Sullivan. He was selected for this role in the well-known stories of the prize ring written by H. C. Witwer, when Reginald Denny was made a star in Universal Jewel features.

Many of the players in the series appeared in the previous series. The cast includes Esther Ralston, Fay Tincher, Josephine Hill, Ruth Dwyer, Eddie Gribbon, Edgar Kennedy, Clarke Comstock, W. T. McCulley and several ring favorites, including Harry Tenbrook.

The first of the series is scheduled for release December 31 and the second the middle of January. In addition, "Girls Will Be Girls" and "The Rough Tenderfoot" have been completed and "Hail to the Chief" is under way.

Following their showings at one of the Riesenfeld houses, this series will be shown in the Fox houses in and around New York City.

Shows Chase Comedy

"At First Sight," the first of the new series of single reel comedies produced by Hal Roach and starring Charles Chase is being shown at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, during the current week. This is a pre-release showing and marks the premiere of the picture. It is scheduled for release, through Pathe, on January 6.

Lamont With Century

Charles Lamont, who recently completed several comedies for Grand-Asher, has been appointed co-director with Noel Smith in filming Century comedies. The first under this arrangement will be "Putting It Over," in which Pal, the dog, is the star, and Harry Sweet in the leading "human" role. Lamont was formerly an assistant director with Century.

Rankin in New Series

Arthur Rankin, prominent screen juvenile who had a prominent role in the "Fighting Blood" series, has been signed to appear in the first episode of the new H. C. Witwer "Telephone Girl" series which will be distributed by Film Booking Offices of America.

"It's a Boy"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Snub Pollard depicts the wild plans of a father for his first-born in this single reeler. He plans a brilliant career for him as moving picture director and other sensational triumphs. But the baby, it proves, is not of that sex. It is a fairly amusing, though not exceptional number.—M. K.

"A Dutch Treat"

(Fox—Instructive—One Reel)

Here is one reel of charming entertainment. There is a sociable atmosphere about scenes and people of Holland that the interest a little keener than in average travel picture. Their houseboats, windmills, wooden shoes, industries, cheeses—and last but most attractive, their children, have an interesting appeal.—M. K.

"Rough Sailing"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Most of the sailing in this Sunshine comedy is done through the air. The wire effects are very good and transport the characters out of one danger into another in the home of the Turkish Sultan. The hero's mission is to rescue a pretty American girl from the harem. It has some fairly original action and should go well in the average house.—M. K.

"Sing Them Again" Week Exploits Series

Still another instance of effective exploitation for short subjects is shown in the inauguration in South Philadelphia, Pa., of a "Sing Them Again" week by two Stanley theatres, the Broadway and the Alhambra, December 9 to 15.

The exploitation consisted mainly in publicity stories in the newspapers calculated to arouse interest in old favorite songs and to stimulate community singing. Both houses took advantage of this campaign and presented Educational's "Close Harmony," the first of the "Sing Them Again" series, day and date, throughout the entire week.

"The Five Orphans of the Storm"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

A fable for the Christmas program has been provided by Paul Terry in this tale of Santa Claus and the little dogs who got left. One of them, however, wins a delicious feast for them all by a brave rescue of a little girl, headed for destruction on an ice floe. The touches of melodrama, human interest and comedy make it exceptionally good.—M. K.

"Flying Finance"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This has an abundance of action and funny incident. It is a Mermaid comedy with Neeley Edwards in a peppy role that is constantly entertaining. A variety of accidents and escapes culminates in a cyclone which produces some ludicrous effects on the buildings, persons and animals in a small Western town. A few hilarious moments are outstanding. The comedy is certain to appeal because it has so much life.—M. K.

Pathe "Review No. 51"

(One Reel)

A study of the mother ovenbird, a few pretty country scenes, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," different views of the Sault Ste. Marie Locks and the ships, concluding with color pictures of the oxen teams used in France and Spain are found in this review.—M. K.

"The Last Stand of the Red Man"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Picturesque in its scenery and Indian types, this Kineto subject should be well received in a majority of theatres. Titles written in the style and meter of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" add to the atmosphere. Almost anyone is slightly fascinated by studies of Indians and the age which they recall, and this number is an interesting example—M. K.

"Hansel and Gretel"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

For the Christmas program especially this Baby Peggy comedy will be an excellent attraction. It is the world-famous fairy tale with a few variations. As the story is popular with almost all children, the picture should draw very well. It offered very little chance for comedy in the original, but as produced here has been burlesqued somewhat and greatly elaborated upon. A few may object to having one of their favorite tales so tampered with, but the fantastic touches show a good imagination and are well done, particularly the magic wrought by the old witch. On the whole it is an exceptional Century comedy.—M. K.

"Rustlin' Buster"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Neither the acting nor the story is quite up to the standard of the usual Universal two-reel Western. Jack Mower is physically equal to the action but seems to lack the spirit that makes such performances entirely satisfying. Lola Todd shows a lack of experience that makes her role unconvincing. The story is the familiar one of an innocent man being accused of cattle rustling, but avenging himself and rescuing the girl involved.—M. K.

"Don't Hesitate"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Fast action is plentiful here. A sheriff in a mild Western town decides to stir up a bit of action and glory for himself by staging a hold-up in the saloon. Meanwhile genuine disciples of Jesse James appear and give him real scare. The titles are snappy and the whole comedy amusing.—M. K.

"Girls and Records"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

An ever popular contrast—that between the girl of fifty years ago and the modern flapper—is entertainingly shown in this second of the Grantland Rice "Sportlight" series. Grandmother getting her strenuous exercise by watering the rose garden is followed by interesting pictures of women at various sports, such as a tennis match between Miss Wills and Mrs. Clayton.—M. K.

"The Darkest Hour"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hal Roach's "Spat Family" confines its wrangles to its own home this time. The manufacture of home brew proceeds with great argument until the police arrive. That danger over, a terrible storm comes up and the report that a maniac with a knife is in the neighborhood. It is amusing and exciting—one of the best of the series. M. K.

"Inbad, the Sailor"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Love-sick sailors and a beautiful vampire cause plenty of commotion in this Mack Sennett comedy featuring Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon and Madeline Hurlock. The vamp haunts the lighthouse alluringly and the fights between the men and the chief, all in love with her, are many and furious. It is a good slapstick number with an attractive leading lady.—M. K.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Amusing or—What

Recently the editor was consulted by a widely known exhibitor who is at the head of a company proposing to erect a new picture palace in New York City. He asked me as a favor to go to his downtown office and examine the theatre plans, and though to do this ordinarily involves a fee of not less than twenty-five dollars, for certain reasons I was sufficiently interested to do as he asked, without charge.

I found that, as usual, the architect had planned the theatre and placed its "heart" in the most convenient place, regardless of what the net result might be on the screen when it was all finished. In other words, he had planned a beautiful theatre, as such, but had, AS USUAL, made it entirely impossible ever to put a perfect result on the screen, though it so HAPPENS that the result will not be nearly so bad as some. I place "happens" in capitals because it is evident that the fact that the condition is no worse is NOT due to any thought for projection results on the part of the architect, but just the USUAL clear-back, up-as-high-as-we-can-get-it location is in this case only 150 feet from the screen and something like thirty feet above its center.

The near amusing part is that the party in question asked me to see his architect and discuss the matter with him. This I promised to do, but due to an error the visit was delayed, and I again saw the exhibitor before I saw the architect. I found him apparently fairly well convinced that what I had brought to his attention amounted to little. Why? Well, here is the laugh: HE HAD TALKED WITH A SUPPLY DEALER, WHO HAD ASSURED HIM THAT EVERYTHING WAS ALRIGHT, clinching his argument with: "What's the matter with the * * * Theatre?"

Should one laugh or swear at this? This exhibitor means well. There is not the slightest doubt of that. He spoke of me to others in the highest terms, BUT he nevertheless CONSULTS A SUPPLY DEALER ON PROJECTION PROBLEMS, and is inclined to believe him rather than a projection engineer, partly because he cites for comparison a big Broadway theatre in which the problems have very little similarity.

The supply dealer in question knows the supply business very well indeed, but in the name of all the gods why go to a supply dealer with a problem in projection engineering?

The Real Problem

Here is what I hold. The conditions in the proposed theatre under discussion are not really very bad, though there will be considerable distortion if present plans are carried out. What further handicap may be imposed when the room itself is built remains to be seen, but I'll bet dollars to bad eggs that there will be at least some, though the room may be a good one AS SUCH ROOMS GO.

But the whole procedure is WRONG. The architect should be obliged, when the original agreement is made, to call into consultation a competent, capable projection engineer, not connected in any way with any one who has ANYTHING in the way of equipment to sell. Recognizing that the whole theatre is being built to sell to the public a certain thing which must be placed on its screen, the first problem is to plan a projection condition which will enable a perfect picture to be projected (which involves many things), and then the theatre should be planned around that condition.

As the matter now lies, practically every architect places the cart squarely in front of the horse and hitches the aforesaid horse into the shafts backwards, by first planning the theatre and then letting projection get by as it may. The results are very often pretty awful. I don't so much blame the exhibitor in question. He figures that every one else "goes ahead backwards" in matters of this sort, so why should not he also?

Cannavan Says

International President Cannavan tells me locals are really, as a general proposition, making a real effort to improve the screen results put on by their members. I most sincerely hope that is true. If it is true it is splendid. I know some locals are making a real effort, but was not aware that a considerable number of them had got energetically busy in that direction. Let the good work proceed.

"Operator's"

A friend in Iowa, asks:

Will you kindly inform me with regard to any operator's organization there may be. Is there a national operator's union? How should I proceed to obtain an operator's license?

Certainly there is an operator's national organization, several of them, in fact. There is a national union of operators on ladies waists; also one on straw hats and another on men's overalls. There is, I think, an organization of coal mine operators. Whether the bucket shop operators have one or not I don't know.

However, forgive my little joke and I'll tell you what you want to know, viz: Is there a national organization of motion picture projectionists? Yes. There is such an organization, known as the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. Some name, if you ask me.

Write to William Cannavan, President I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., World Tower

Building, 110 West 40th Street, New York City, for information as to joining same. Licenses are not issued by the organization. That is only done by city or state authorities. You would have to apply to some city where there is a license law, or to the state authorities if Iowa issues state licenses ,which I don't think it does. Just what cities in Iowa have license law as applied to motion picture projectionists I do not know.

Corking Good Dope

From Walter Munn, Local Union No. 448, I. A., Pueblo, Colorado, comes what seems to be, everything considered, the best plan I have yet seen for measuring the focal length of plano convex condenser lenses with at least a very fair degree of accuracy—as accurate as anything we now have and which does not entail considerable trouble in application. The only tools required for application of the Munn scheme are a six-inch machinist "scale," or some other accurate steel rule having 64th-inch graduations, and an "outside caliper." Brother Munn explains his plan as follows:

I'll bust through the ice after a year or so of silence, just so that you may know that, though a bit quiet, we of this Mountain State are still very much alive.

In a recent issue you explained two good methods for measuring condenser lens focal lengths. Comparing them to or with my own "home brewed" method, I find mine to be more simple and easy of application. I have made a chart, or table, copy of which is attached hereto. By mechanical drawing I readily find the exact thickness of the curvature of a 4½-inch diameter segment of circles of varying diameters, covering plano convex lens curvatures from five to ten inch focal lengths. (See page 134 of Bluebook.—Ed.) These measurements I made into a chart, copy of which I have pasted to a flyleaf of my Bluebook, to prevent it being mislaid.

By the use of the chart, an outside caliper and a steel rule having 64th inch graduations, it is but the work of a moment to measure accurately the focal length of plano convex lenses. Dimension "C" is found by first measuring dimension "b" and "a" and subtracting the latter from the first.

CAUTION: This must all be done very carefully and accurately, since dimension C varies only slightly for slight differences in focal length, especially in the longer focal length lenses.

To obtain "C," subtract "a" from "b." Use steel ruler divided in 64ths

To Apply the Chart

First measure dimensions "a" and "b". Subtract "a" from "b" and find, in the left hand chart column, the number most nearly corresponding to the result thus arrived at, opposite which, in the right hand column, will be found the focal length of the lens under consideration.

CAUTION NO. TWO: It will, of course, be understood that this method can only be applied when the lens diameter is just 4½ inches, but it is only very rarely that lenses will be found which will be off standard in this respect.

Our local, No. 448, has instituted educational meetings—business and educational meetings being held on alternate weeks. The Projection Department, the Bluebook and the proceedings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers keep us amply supplied with questions for discussion.

Last summer the wanderlust seized upon my soul, so I turned the "Red Chariot" toward the setting sun. I saw wonderful projection in most of the coast cities, but wish especially to commend the work of the good brothers in charge of projection in the "Blue Mouse" Theatre in Seattle, Washington.

With only one man in the projection room, they put on as smooth a program as is found in the two-man Grauman Theatres down in Los Angeles.

Well, I'll run the good night slide before I wear out my welcome. Congratulations on the Bluebook. It's a wonder!

No man "wears out his welcome" here when he has things of interest and value to submit, and you certainly have that. In the matter of the chart, I would recommend that projectionists cut it out and follow brother Munn's example by pasting it to their Bluebook flyleaf. One beauty of it is that YOU MAY TAKE YOUR CALIPER AND RULE ALONG AND MEASURE THE EXACT FOCAL LENGTH OF THE LENSES YOU BUY, WHEN YOU BUY THEM—that is to say, you who can purchase lenses by personally visiting the supply houses can do so. I would strongly recommend that you get a GOOD machinist's "scale" and a GOOD pair of outside calipers. A machinist's scale is a six-inch steel rule, graduated as finely as 1/100ths of an inch. It is an excellent tool to have.

Since it is unlikely that such tools can be secured at the small town stores—especially the machinists' scale—I will myself undertake to send either one or both of them as you may elect, to all those who forward the price, plus fifteen cents for postage and insurance. The price is as follows: a four-inch outside caliper, with screw adjustment, eighty-five (85) cents. A scale of "stainless" steel, one dollar and eight cents ($1.08); of ordinary steel seventy two (72) cents.

These prices were obtained from Patterson Brothers, which is perhaps the best retail hardware dealer in all New York. I am not certain whether it was a four or a six-inch scale I priced, but I think six. Either will be plenty enough, and the six-inch one is perhaps preferable, in that it can be carried in the vest pocket if desired. WARNING! DON'T send personal checks. They must be passed through the bank and in many cases exchange paid on them. Send P. O. money order.

I sincerely trust that the Blue Mouse projectionists, of Seattle, will not be angry at what you've said about them. My compliments to them; also to local 448 for its progressiveness in initiating educational meetings. May they succeed and long continue. By the way: What has become of "Bill" Ladd, of Seattle?

It is possible I may pass through Pueblo next summer—POSSIBLE, mind you. By the way, I am, and have been for twenty-one years, a member of Camp No. 2 W. O. W. of Pueblo. Should you happen to b'long, please convey my respects to its Clerk, who sends me a bill real reg'lar.

Old Stuff

I am in receipt of a letter from the Havana Film Company, Havana, Cuba, asking me to draft a letter for them to send out to every exhibitor in Cuba, setting forth the evils of "the missing reel."

It seems the almost universal practice in Cuba is to ship films to theatres "in the roll"—that is to say, without any reel at all. And strange as it may seem to you, some Cuban exhibitors and projectionists have objected strenuously when films have been received by them on reels.

Can you beat that! I might add that this is the practice followed in England, and I understand, in some other European countries, but it is a very bad practice, nevertheless. Film shipped without the protection of a metal reel is readily susceptible to damage, in many ways.

It is true that film on reels takes up more space in shipment; also there is the added weight of the reel but the protection afforded the films is far more than worth all that.

I'd like to see the mugs of some of our United States and Canadian projectionists if they received a "show" not wound on reels. Gee, what a HOWL would go up! Shipping and handling films in "the roll" is back-number stuff! Shame upon you, Cuba!

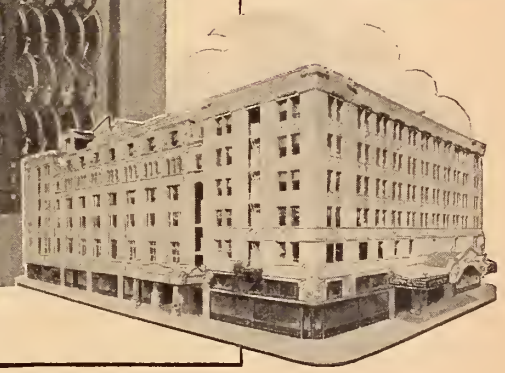
Ward Leonard VITROHM Dimmer plates on switchboard controlling Ward Leonard Reactance Dimmers, Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles.



Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre Building, Los Angeles

The largest theatre dimmer installation in the world

Continuous duty

The foundation of all WARD LEONARD Theatre Dimmers is a substantial iron plate to one side of which a layer of vitreous enamel is applied. In this the resistor is imbedded. The resistor, enclosed in this glass-hard, non-porous enamel, is impervious to moisture and gases. It completely and permanently protects the resistance from corrosion or oxidation, but dissipates heat with maximum efficiency. It is to this unique construction, more than any other factor, that WARD LEONARD Theatre Dimmers owe their ability to render superior service under continuous duty.

TO the theatre-going public the new Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, is sensational because of its size and magnificance and the beauty of its wonderful lighting effects. More electric energy is required to light the stage and auditorium of this theatre than is used by any other in the world. Naturally, the largest theatre dimmer installation in the world was needed to control this great amount of energy—enough to light 6,000 sixty-watt lamps. And equally naturally, WARD LEONARD VITROHM DIMMER equipment was chosen—because Ward Leonard Dimmers eliminate fire risk, are designed for continuous duty, meet requirements with apparatus of minimum weight and bulk, are absolutely reliable, easy to operate, extremely durable, and economical in upkeep.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Merry Christmas

MERRY CHRISTMAS! people. While there may be a few more vacant spaces near the top of the stockings that we've hung on the mantel, they are nothing like as empty as they might have been if matters were worse. So, take it all in all, it's about an average Christmas as Christmases go.

From a casual inspection of the tree, we would say that there are a few new dew-dads hanging upon it in addition to the regulation candy sticks, cornucopias, gilt balls and yellow birds with green wings.

For instance, we understand that the A. M. P. E. D. A. is about to be represented with a brand new official organ of its own, to which we wish the best of success. We certainly are in sympathy with the owners thereof, who will, in the nature of things, become its most extensive advertisers, and who will have to decide how much of their own publicity they will run.

Right down on one of the most accessible branches of the tree we note three packages marked "For a Good Exhibitor," which we are willing to bet will be found to contain respectively one of those new mirror projection lamps, a new Mazda, that we understand will be a world beater, and an apparatus for projecting a conversational picture.

Beneath the tree, we behold some bulky packages which from their suggestive outlines, we surmise are independent lighting plants carefully wrapped in tissue paper. We sincerely trust that somewhere in the packages will be found rather more definite information regarding their use and desirability than we have yet discovered outside of our own editorial columns.

Side by side with these latter offerings of Santa, is something that looks as if it might be an oil burning apparatus for theatre heating. And it certainly does look as if the recipients of these will be in a position to worry the soul of the coal dealer, provided that individual really has one of those attachments.

One of the limbs of the tree is quite badly bent, due to the weight of the gift suspended therefrom. We have been told in strict confidence that it is either a player piano or a theatre organ that looks like a million dollars, but is warranted not to burst the bank account of the exhibitor whose name is on the package.

We don't know the name of the donor of this much-to-be-appreciated gift because with all due and becoming modesty that generous individual has not as yet placed his name upon the package where we can see it, but, as soon as the bundle is unwrapped we will announce this interesting fact in a decidedly loud voice.

From the tip of almost every limb depends what at first glance appears to be a light, but which, upon closer examination, proves to be a new theatre—all spic and span—and brilliantly illuminated. There are about five hundred of these which have been specially prepared during the past year and which will be distributed by Santa in person to the exhibitors who have won them in open competition in the great game of pleasing patron fans.

So, here's wishing the recipients of these gifts all sorts of success with them and the pleasantest, merriest, most profitable Christmas that they have ever enjoyed heretofore and also that it won't be even a marker in prosperity of those yet to come.

The year nineteen twenty-three has been a period of progress and prosperity and we view the approach of nineteen twenty-four with full confidence that this satisfactory condition will continue.

It is, therefore, particularly pleasant to again have this opportunity to continue the old custom of wishing our friends and associates of the motion picture industry A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year.

The Manufacturers of Independent Generating Plants Take the Floor

IN our last issue appeared an article on the independent generating plant in which the subject was treated from the "cost of operation" point of view.

A previous article, devoted to this branch of equipment, brought forth many letters from exhibitors, from which we made extracts on which we commented last week. This time we are giving the floor to four manufacturers who have expressed their views on last week's installment.

It will be noticed that, while two of these regard our estimate of 15% for depreciation as being too high, they differ on other points. One, indeed, recommending the utilization of alternating current, appears to be rather reactionary.

One manufacturer approves a storage battery installation, while another opposes it.

What They Say

One manufacturer writes:

Fifteen per cent. depreciation, in our experience, is too high. Ten per cent., we believe, is a fairer figure.

Another backs up this recommendation with the following:

It is entirely safe to figure your depreciation on the basis of ten per cent. per year, which will wipe out the entire investment in a ten-year period.

and then goes on to discuss the cost of operation as follows:

With reference to operating expenses, would state that you have figured this high enough, as the fuel consumption should not exceed 1-10 gallon per horsepower hour and .001 pint of lubricating oil per horsepower hour. Basing our figures on the present price of gasoline, which is approximately 16 cents per gallon, and lubricating oil at $1.00 per gallon, you would have a cost of 4.2 cents per K. W. hour for fuel and lubrication.

Now, assuming that your requirements are 7½ K. W. per hour, your cost would be 29.6 cents per hour, or $1.48 for five hours' operation, or a cost of $539.38 for five hours' operation 365 days of the year. From what we have been able to learn, there are a great many houses that are operating with less than 7½ K. W.; in fact, many require less than a 5 K. W. plant, and the real small houses probably could get along very nicely with a 2½ or 3½ K. W. outfit.

Approves Storage Batteries

A third manufacturer writes:

There is no doubt but what an independent plant with storage batteries would be the ideal equipment, using a motor generator set to transform the current from alternating to direct for the apparatus and motors whenever the public service current is available as a stand-by.

Advises Alternating Current

While the fourth manufacturer offers many valuable suggestions, we do not agree with that advising the utilization of alternating current, which all progressive exhibitors are now converting into direct whenever possible for projection purposes. With this comment, we quote from his communication as follows:

You have assumed that the carbon arcs must be operated in parallel. The arcs may be connected in series when a 110 volt plant is used so that no additional current will be required when the two arcs are being operated.

As you know, the carbon arc operates at approximate 55 volts. When one arc is being used, the voltage is reduced to approximately 55 volts by means of a rheostat. If the two arcs are connected in series, the second arc is simply taking the amount of current which was used up in the rheostat so that no additional current is required.

You recommend the installation of motor generator sets to convert the alternating current to direct current for operating direct current motors, fans, etc. As a general rule, we do not believe that this will be advisable where the independent plant is to be used for emergency only. We believe that it would be better for the exhibitor to either install an alternating current plant or to install a direct current plant and use a converter for changing the direct current to alternating current for operating the standard equipment during emergencies.

Cost of Battery Considered

The 110 volt storage battery would not be economical. The original cost of a 110 volt storage battery would be just as great, if not greater, than the extra cost for a large plant and the depreciation would be considerably greater.

For example: The 7½ K. W. plant lists at $1,200, the 10 K. W. at $1,525, and the 15 K. W. at $1,800. The 110 volt storage battery of suitable capacity would run from $700 to $800. It would also require a more expensive switchboard, which would add to the cost of the plant.

If an exhibitor wants an individual plant for emergency use only, then it would be best for him to install an alternating current plant or to install a direct current plant and a converter to change the current from direct current to alternating current.

For Permanent Usage

If he wanted a plant for permanent use, then the most economical plant would be a 32 volt direct current plant.

The Mazda projecting lamps are made in 600 watt 30 volt and 900 watt 30 volt. Therefore, a 32 volt plant will make a more economical installation than a 110 volt, and right here is where a storage battery could be used to advantage, because the cost of a 32 volt storage battery is less than one-third the cost of a 110 volt storage battery.

Suppose this customer was using the 900 watt 30 volt lamp. Assuming his light load to be about 850 watts during hte time that the picture machine is operating; then his light load, motor load, and one projecting lamp would be approximately four kilowatts.

A 4 K. W. 32 volt machine with a storage battery would handle the requirements because the battery could be relied upon to handle the load during the change from one reel to another.

The cost of a 4 K. W. 32 volt plant with a suitable battery would be in the neighborhood of $1,000.

Reducing Wattage Requirements

The reason that a 110 volt, direct current plant would not be economical would be due to the fact that so much current is wasted in reducing the voltage down from 110 volts to 30 volts. The 30 volt 900 watt lamp consumes 30 amperes. Therefore, the lamp alone would require 3,300 watts where 110 volt direct current was used, whereas it only requires a little over 900 watts where the 32 volt plant is used. The difference goes up in heat.

As suggested above, if the exhibitor wants to use the independent plant for emergency only, the best plant to install would be an alternating current plant, or a direct current plant with a converter to change the current from direct current to alternating current.

Summing Up the Proposition

The proposition sums up in general as follows:

For the theatre depending altogether on an independent plant, the direct current plant is, as a general rule, the best proposition. Where the Mazda lamp is used and the total load does not exceed 4 K. W., the 32 volt plant is the most economical equipment. If the carbon arc is used, either the 60 volt or the 110 volt direct current plant may be used. The 110 volt is usually preferred on account of it being standard voltage.

Direct current gives better projection than alternating current and saves the expense of a transverter or motor generating set for the carbon arc.

Where an independent plant is to be used for emergencies only:

First—Where there is no large motor load or large fan load, the 110 volt direct current may be used to advantage because electric lights operate equally well off of either 110 volt direct current or 110 volt alternating current. Small motors can also be obtained which will operate from either alternating or direct current.

Second—Where large motors or large fan loads are required, it is better to install either an alternating current plant or a direct current plant and a converter to change the direct current to alternating current.

The above will hold true in most cases. However, it is advisable to have all the details of the electrical requirements of the picture show before making recommendations because many shows even with the same seating capacity differ radically in their electrical requirements.

SEATING—

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

A half dozen new companies entered the motion picture business in New York state during the week ending December 17, and filed the necessary papers in the state corporation bureau.

The largest company formed was the Cross Bay Theatre, Inc., capitalized at $500,000, and having as directors Robert Buchanan, Jr., John C. Kemp, and B. H. Noden, residents of Richmond Hill.

Other companies chartered included the Chiropractic Science Service Association of America, $5,000, Stella Mobacher, New York; Frank Brumberg, Brooklyn; French Exposition Corporation, $50,000, George B. Reilly, A. Roy Myers, Harry C. Hand, New York City; G. G. and G. Entertainments, $5,000, Harry Herson, Jennie Levkov, Lillian King, New York, as well as Luporini Features Corporation, with F. V. Luporini, A. B. Bellock, Mary Kaufman, New York City, and Nighsmith Pictures, Inc., William Nigh, E. L. Smith, F. F. Neuman, New York, the capitalization of these last two companies not appearing in the certificates.

A New Rialto Springs Into Being at Renova

J. J. McFadden of the Rialto Theatre, Renova, advises that his house, destroyed by fire about a year ago, is rapidly nearing completion and that efforts are being made to reopen some time during the holidays.

The house has been enlarged and improved in many ways. The capacity will be 755, which includes 30 loge seats, and contains a stage 26x50 feet.

Two new Simplexes, purchased from Hollis, Smith, Morton Company, are being installed; also a new screen. A heating and ventilating system has also been installed and two organ chambers have been constructed, one on each side of the proscenium arch, with the expectation of installing a pipe organ some time in the future.

The music will be under the direction of Mrs. Robert Boyd, who will lead the orchestra and cue the pictures. Milton Kepler will be the projectionist.
